Mr. GILLETT. I will be willing to agree to an hour and a half, and I will do my best to bring it down to an hour.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose we make it an hour and a quarter?

Mr. GILLETT. Very well.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request to that extent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours and a half, one hour and a quarter to be controlled by himself and the other hour and a quarter by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

According the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, through the press and otherwise so much of misinformation has been carried to the public with relation to the matter of public buildings, their construction, and the general method of procedure on the part of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and of Congress that it may not be out of place for me to submit a few observations on that subject.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, under the rules of the House, let it be understood, has no power to appropriate money to carry into execution the provisions of any measure which may come from that committee. The committee simply has the power and authority to submit to the House bills authorizing the construction of buildings at such places as may be named within the limits of cost specifically provided for each place respectively. It has been the custom of the committee for many years past to report to the House once in from two to three years what has come to be called an "omnibus public-building bill," covering the entire country and providing one or more public buildings for each congressional district at the places where the necessity appeared to be greatest. This "omnibus public-building bill" has frequently been contemptuously referred to as the "pork-barrel bill" by the press of the country, and particularly has this been true of the newspapers here in Washington. Whenever a Washington newspaper has occasion to refer to the effort being made by a Representative in Congress to secure an appropriation of $50,000 for the erection of a post-office building in some thriving little city of his district, the aforesaid newspaper describes him as "the pork-barrel statesman from Squash Center," but let that same Representative rise on this floor and advocate the expenditure of several millions of dollars for the construction of a marble palace in the city of Washington in which to transact the public business, and, ye gods, what a transformation!

The long-haired, hungry, cadaverous-looking "pork-barrel statesman from Squash Center" immediately becomes a wise, far-seeing, broad-minded, and patriotic legislator. [Applause.] I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that here and there during the past 10 or 12 years a building has been authorized at a place where conditions did not justify such action, but I submit that such cases have been exceedingly rare and that, on the whole, the Congress has legislated wisely in the matter of the construction of public buildings. I submit also, Mr. Chairman, that the District of Columbia, whence practically all the howl about "pork barrel" comes, has had vastly more than its share in every omnibus public-building bill which has passed Congress during the last 10 or 12 years. Let us examine the record and see just how the account stands.

The public-building act of June 6, 1902, carried $1,575,000 for the District of Columbia and $19,387,900 for the remainder of the Union, the District thus getting about one-thirteenth of the entire amount carried in the bill.

In 1903 there were two public-building bills. The act of February 9, 1903, carried a single item of $1,500,000 for the District of Columbia. The act of March 3, 1903, carried $715,000 for the District of Columbia and $7,580,359.34 for the balance of the country. Thus the District in 1903 had $2,215,000, as against $7,580,359.34, something less than one-fourth of the entire amount carried in the act.

In the act of June 30, 1906, there was carried for the District of Columbia only the sum of $13,000, whereas there went to the States and Territories $23,635,500.

By the act of May 30, 1908, the District of Columbia received $3,220,500, and the balance of the United States had $25,525,000, or a little more than one-ninth of the total sum to the District.

The act of June 25, 1910, carried $6,340,000 for the District of Columbia and $26,868,200 for the balance of the country, or something less than one-fifth of the entire amount carried by the act.

The act of March 4, 1913, authorized $11,056,000 for the District of Columbia and $38,485,350 for the remainder of the country, or a little less than one-fourth of the total sum went to the District.

Thus it is seen, Mr. Chairman, that for the last 12 years we have averaged an omnibus public-building bill every 2 years, and that during these 12 years the District has received $24,419,000, while the 48 States of the Union have received $165,901,309.34, thus giving to the District more than one-seventh of all the money authorized for public buildings during the period mentioned.

Notwithstanding the carping of the Washington press and the apparently deliberate effort on their part to place the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in an unenviable light before the country, I for one am in favor of going forward with the great work of constructing here in the Capital City of the Nation ample and elegant quarters sufficient to comfortably house every activity of the Government. [Applause.] I would construct here buildings not only in such number and of sufficient size to take care of all the departments, but I would build them of such materials and in such style of architecture as would both challenge the admiration of visitors and be in keeping with the dignity of this great Republic. The Government of the United States should not be a tenant in any place where it can reasonably be avoided, and under no conditions should the Government long remain a tenant at the seat of the Nation. Not only should this sentiment force us to immediately construct all buildings necessary to house the different departments of government in Washington, but purely as a business proposition we should not long delay this great work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee the amount of the total rentals the Government pays for the use of buildings in the city for the purpose of the departments, and also the length of the terms of leases of those respective buildings erected for the prime purpose of housing some of the departments?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am coming to that. I can give the rent, but I have not the term of leases here; I have it in my office.

Many of the activities of the Government in the District of Columbia are to-day being conducted in tumble-down, rickety, fire-trap buildings, which are liable at any time to be destroyed and cause us to lose documents and records which are invaluable, because they could never be replaced. This is true with reference to buildings owned by the Government as well as some of those which are rented from private owners. But if we leave out of consideration the danger of loss by fire, the loss in efficient service produced by lack of decent and proper quarters and considerations of like character, and look only to the mere question of dollars and cents involved in the question of continuing to use the rented quarters which we now occupy or constructing buildings for those departments, or branches of departments now housed in rented quarters, I assert that it is the part of wisdom and in the interest of economy to build. There is not a department of the Government which is not forced to rent quarters for some branch of the service outside the buildings which we own in the District of Columbia. With the growth of the country the public business has expanded and the demand for more room is heard from every quarter.

The annual rentals being paid by each department of the Government in the District of Columbia is as follows: The Treasury Department pays $47,000; the Department of Commerce, $70,000; the Department of Justice, $34,100; Department of Labor, $7,500; Department of the Interior, $75,175; Department of Agriculture, $99,277; War Department, $61,443.30; Navy Department, $87,274.16; Department of State, $16,860; and the Post Office Department, $63,110, making a total of $561,739.46 paid by the United States every year to individual owners for the use of property in the District of Columbia in which to carry on the business of the Government. This is very nearly 3 per cent on $20,000,000, and I think I am safe in saying that the total value of all the property in the District of Columbia rented by the Government would not exceed $6,000,000, and, in addition, nearly all the rented buildings which we are now occupying are of nonfireproof construction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether these rentals include the upkeep and care and heating of the building, or whether it is merely for the bare rentals of the building?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think it is merely for the bare rentals.

Mr. Chairman, pride in the Capital City of the Nation, the efficient and expeditious transaction of the public business, the health and comfort of employees, as well as the economical administration of our governmental affairs, all counsel us to speedily construct these necessary public buildings.

I also desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that in the country at large, as well as in the District of Columbia, it is the duty of Congress to provide buildings in which the public business can be carried on. I would not have Congress engage in a lavish and unsystematic scheme of constructing public buildings, but I would have Congress, in an orderly, systematic, well-thought-out plan, erect a suitable public building for the transaction of the public business at every place in the United States where the expeditious, orderly conduct of our affairs justified the necessary expenditure of the people's money.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. COOPER. I had an occasion the other day to go to the Department of Justice, over on K Street, where it is housed in what was an old residence. Does the gentleman know whether the necessarily very important papers belonging to that department are housed or kept in that building?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They are, and are absolutely at the mercy of the flames.

Mr. COOPER. Well, I noticed that the other day, and I wondered if it could be possible that the records of the Department of Justice of the United States were kept in that building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely; and if the gentleman will go to the Patent Office he will find that the patent records, records that are invaluable to this country, are there subject at any time to be ignited from a match, cigar, or cigarette, or something carelessly thrown aside, and I am told that there is no power on earth that can save that building if it ever was ignited.

Mr. KINDEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

Mr. KINDEL. I want to say further that the Patent Office is one of the most insanitary buildings I was ever in. In addition to being unsafe and liable to burn up at any minute, it is the most unhealthy place to work in of any place I ever saw, in the way of a public building, and I am surprised in this day of invention, in the way of vacuum cleaners, dust collectors, and so forth, that they have not anything of that sort in that building, and therefore I am in favor of a new Patent Office Building.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will pardon me, I am afraid I will not have time, but I will be glad to yield to the gentleman to answer anything I can, when I have finished.

I am quite sure that in times past a building has been erected here and there when existing conditions did not fully warrant the undertaking, but these cases have been the exceptions and not the rule. For the past 12 years there has been a steady increase in the authorizations for public buildings, and for the last three or four years there has been a steady decrease in the output of buildings from the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. This decrease in the output began in 1911, when a reduced appropriation made it necessary to dispense with 75 of the 432 employees. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, the output was 101 buildings; for 1912 it fell to 82; for 1913 it fell to 77; and the estimate for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, is only 70 buildings. Mr. Chairman, the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury is to-day between five and six years behind with its work; that is to say that if Congress should not authorize another public building, but should cease operations entirely in this direction, it would take the office of the Supervising Architect, under the present plan of procedure and with the present force, fully five and one-half years to complete the buildings already authorized. Unless the present methods are changed, therefore, I think all of us will agree that it will be the height of folly to authorize the construction of any new buildings or the enlargement of any old ones for four or five years to come. But we can not afford to do this.

The rapid growth of the country and the consequent enormous growth in the postal business, augmented tremendously by the Parcel Post Service, has created a demand not only for a larger number of new buildings throughout the country but has made imperative the material enlargement of almost every post-office building in every one of the larger cities in the land. There is a real and an urgent demand for more space in which to conduct the postal business of the country from every business center. This is not an appeal for architecturally beautiful buildings to enhance the appearance of "civic centers," it is the insistent demand of the business interests for workshop space in which the everyday postal affairs of our busy communities can be attended to.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Just make it a question. I have not much time.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. The gentleman says that the office of the Supervising Architect commenced to get behind in 1911. Can the gentleman state how far they were behind at that time in 1911?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have not the information right here.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will try to get to it directly if I can.

There is probably not a Member upon this floor who has been here for six years or more, unless he represents a district in one of our large cities, who has not a building authorized for his district which has been pending for three or four years and which to-day appears no nearer being built than it did the day the bill which provided for it passed Congress. Under the methods obtaining, after a building is authorized the patience of the community is worn threadbare before construction on the foundation is begun. In one place in my district, where I secured an authorization for a post-office building, some of the older inhabitants are beginning to date things back to "the time when Clark got a building for us," and yet not a shovel of dirt has been thrown toward preparing for the foundation. As I have said, the force was reduced in the Supervising Architect's office, and necessarily that has tended somewhat to delay the work, but that is not the real reason for the work being so far behind. In my judgment, there is another and an entirely different reason for the condition which confronts us. About four or five years ago the Secretary of the Treasury, of his own motion and without consulting Congress, issued an order that not exceeding $12,000,000 should be expended on account of public buildings in any one year. No matter what amount a public-building bill might carry, no matter what Congress said should be done, the order of the Secretary overrode the will of Congress and he had his way about it. Take the last bill passed by Congress, the act of March 4, 1913. By that act we authorized the construction of buildings aggregating forty-odd million dollars, and under this plan of the Treasury Department, if we had a clean start, it would require four years in which to carry out the provisions of the act. Is it any wonder that the Supervising Architect's office is five or six years behind in its work? Mr. Chairman, when Congress shall assert its power and let it be clearly and distinctly understood that no official shall be allowed to override its will, then, and only then, will the dignity of Congress be respected. [Applause.]

Several changes in the existing order can be and should be made to insure the more economical and speedy construction of public buildings. As I have said, the Supervising Architect's office is between five and six years behind. I have stated what in my judgment is the chief cause of this condition, but that is not the only cause. The methods in use are antiquated, the plan of procedure is slow, extremely slow, and something must be done to quicken the pace in that quarter. We are building both too extravagantly and too slowly. What can we do? I shall try to suggest a few things along remedial lines, and I do not wish to be understood as criticizing the Supervising Architect. However, most architects are dreamers and theorists and not practical, wide-awake, hustling business men, and one of the important things that we need and need badly just now is a live, active, keen, progressive business man in that office or bureau as a commissioner of public works. [Applause.] He should have charge of the business of having these buildings promptly constructed along practical lines for the business to be transacted in them. These buildings, and particularly the post offices, should be built upon a common-sense, workshop plan, with more regard for their usefulness than their beauty; and when you have in the Treasury Department an organization for building purposes with a level-headed, practical business man at the head of it and the Supervising Architect in the drafting room, where he should be, you will make progress, and you will not until this is done.

I think it is also greatly to the interest of the public service that buildings should be constructed in the order of the needs of the department which is to use them. Under the existing plan buildings are given place for construction in the order in which the title to the site is vested in the Government, and constantly buildings for whose use there is an urgent necessity are compelled to wait months and years while those are being built for which there is no great and pressing necessity.

Another change which ought to be made is this. Under the law as it now stands a site for a Government building must be on a corner, and there must be land enough bought so that no other building can be erected nearer than 40 feet of the Government building. These provisions of the law should be repealed for obvious reasons. In the first place, every Government building should be of fireproof construction, and if so, there is no necessity in having the 40-foot fire limit, and therefore no necessity in buying this extra 40 feet of expensive land. In the second place, in the average city of the country the number of available and suitable corner lots is generally very limited, and when it is known that the Government is in the market for a lot, and it is restricted to a corner lot, the few owners immediately get together and up goes the price to your "Uncle Samuel." If this provision were repealed, the Government might never buy an inside lot, but the mere fact that the Government was not restricted to corner lots would guarantee fair and reasonable prices.

I desire also to take the position that the day for a monumental building to be used solely for post-office purposes is gone. In this busy commercial age we need workshops in which to conduct the postal business of the country and not monumental marble palaces. [Applause.] With the addition of the postal savings bank and the parcel post, an immense proportion of the business of the land is now being conducted through this branch of the Government service, and it will increase in volume with the passing of the years. The post-office building of the future must be built not so much with regard to its external ornamentation as to its interior fitness for the purposes of its existence. We have sacrificed months and possibly years of time in drafting plans and specifications to satisfy the demands of art, which could have been much more profitably spent in efforts to perfect plans for buildings which, while insuring the comfort of employees, would tend to secure for the Government the maximum of efficient service. [Applause.]

And now, Mr. Chairman, I come to a proposition which I am extremely anxious to see put to the test. I am not an architect, nor am I a builder, but from the viewpoint of a plain, common-sense layman I am thoroughly convinced that the solution of this whole public building matter is standardization. The architects will not agree to this. They claim that we can not satisfactorily standardize, but when you seek the specific reasons I have never been able to get but two. In the first place, they claim that the climate is different in different sections of the country, and that the material which would be all right in one section would not answer at all for another section, and that different climates require buildings of entirely different character. In the second place, our friends, the architects, claim that the topography of the country has everything to do with the construction of a building, that one lot may be perfectly level, whereas another may be on the side of a hill.

Let us examine these objections and see if they can not be overcome. As I have stated, I am neither an architect nor a builder, but I have been trying to apply a little common sense to this subject, and I believe I can suggest a plan which will overcome these objections. I recognize the fact that climate has to be considered in building operations; and recognizing this fact, I would divide the 48 States of the Union into groups in accordance with the climate. Take, for instance, the New England States and let them constitute one group; let the Northwestern States form another group; let the Pacific Slope States become another group, and so on until the entire 48 States are subdivided into groups. When this is done, then take the cities of each group and divide them into classes according to their annual postal receipts. By this arrangement you will avoid the intolerable delay consequent upon the Supervising Architect being compelled to draw separate plans and specifications for every building which is authorized by Congress. It would only be necessary to draw one set of plans and specifications for each class in each group of States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes additional.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

It will require better evidence than has yet been produced to convince me that a post-office building which is suitable and adequate for the purposes of a city in the State of Rhode Island whose postal receipts are $30,000 per annum, is not suitable and aedquate for the purposes of a city in New Hampshire whose postal receipts are $30,000 a year. A post-office building in Florida would admirably fill the bill for the same size town in Louisiana. A building which would meet the postal needs in northern Georgia would answer every requirement for a city in eastern Tennessee, where a like amount of postal business is done; and so on, through all the groups of States divided along the lines I have indicated. Of course I am referring exclusively to places where there are no governmental activities other than the post office. Where a building is intended to house the post office, the court, the customhouse, or any branch of the service in addition to the post office, I recognize that to standardize would be extremely difficult if, indeed, it would not be impossible.

Now, a word with reference to the claim that we can not standardize on account of the difference in the lay of the land. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the topography of the country, the lay of the land, can only affect the foundation. It may be different as far up as the first floor, but from there up the building can be standardized, the superstructure can be alike. So we see, there is absolutely nothing in these two objections. Standardization not only means the expeditious construction of our public buildings, Mr. Chairman, but it means the more economical construction. It not only means this, but it means to nurture in every community where Old Glory flies from the flagpole of a public building, a patriotic love of country.

And right here let me say that while at all times we should jealously guard the Public Treasury and never become reckless in expenditures of the people's money, yet I do not believe that we should pursue a niggardly policy in providing necessary and proper means for the efficient and expeditious transaction of the business of the people. The one great branch of the Government service with which the great mass of the people come in close and daily contact is the Postal Service. This arm of Government service penetrates every nook and corner of the great Republic, carrying to the people, rich and poor alike, business communications of every character, messages freighted with friendship, with love, with sorrow, with joy—freighted with every human emotion they come into every portion of our broad land. This great arm of Government service carries into the homes of the people the newspapers, magazines, and books of the day, and now it has been extended to provide a place where the people may deposit their savings, having as security the honor of this mighty Republic. That is not all. But recently we have seen this great governmental institution rise in the plenitude of the power of this the greatest Nation of the earth, and say to the rich and powerful express companies of the land, "No longer shall you plunder an outraged people, who for many years have suffered from your illegal exactions," and thereupon the parcel post was born among the agencies of government, to remain, let us hope, forever as a safe guaranty against the heartless plunder of monopolistic greed. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I tender back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has six minutes left.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. STEENERSON. What has become of the commission we created to send in a report on this question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that the commission has been delayed in presenting its report necessarily on account of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury, who is chairman of the commission, as the gentleman knows, has been absent from the city on public business for some time. He has lately returned and the rest of us have been at work, have advised with him when we could, and I think that the report is very nearly ready now to be submitted.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will not that cover some of the matters referred to?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think so. I think it will cover these and a great many others.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman was speaking a few minutes ago about the inadequacy of the quarters provided for the Patent Office. Does he know whether any proportion of the records or models of the Patent Office are stored in the House Office Building or in the subway approaching thereto?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand there are some properties of the Patent Office stored over there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are a number of models stored in the House Office Building, for which there has been absolutely no use for years, and which Congress has been trying to get rid of for years. We did try to ship them down to an exposition in South America, on the condition that they would not be returned. [Laughter.] They are stored in the House Office Building because Congress refused to continue an appropriation of $19,000 a year for the rent of a building in which to store them, because nobody had any use for them then.

Mr. WILLIS. I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] to the fact that when I came through the subway a little while ago those models were standing in water about an inch deep. So there will be no difficulty in getting rid of them.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. GARNER. If the suggestion made in the gentleman's speech is carried out, and the Secretary of the Treasury gave instructions arbitrarily that only $12,000,000 could be used for this purpose, regardless of the wish of Congress, you would not accomplish any more than under the present system, if the Secretary of the Treasury were allowed to do that?

Mr. WILLIS. He has been doing that, according to the gentleman's statement, for some years.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; but I think he has been doing it with a tacit understanding here. There has been no effort on the part of Congress to compel him not to do it. I think the time has come when Congress ought not only to legislate along these lines, but, when they do legislate, to see that the will of Congress is carried into execution. [Applause.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What method would the gentleman suggest for accomplishing that result?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have not gone into all that, but I think the very able Judiciary Committee of this House and the many very eminent lawyers on this floor could find some way in which an executive officer could be prevented from overriding the will of Congress. It seems to me if we can not we ought to adjourn and go home.

Mr. KINDEL. Does the gentleman seriously think that we ought to enlarge the parcel-post department of the post office under the present graduate of rates, which are in many instances 100 per cent higher than the express rates?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I wish to say to the gentleman that I am no expert on the parcel-post question. I will refer him to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] and let them fight it out.

Mr. KINDEL. I will ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] the same question. Does he think we need an enlargement of the parcel-post quarters, with rates 100 per cent higher than the express rates are since the 1st of February?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] yield to the gentleman from Maryland to answer the question of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL]?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any time remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 10 minutes left.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] 10 minutes.

PARCEL-POST REPEAL.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, a rider attached to the Post Office appropriation bill, as reported to the Senate, contains the following proviso:

That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

This proviso is designed to repeal the most substantive provision of the parcel-post law, which reads as follows:

If the Postmaster General shall find on experience that the classification of articles mailable, as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability, or any of them, are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of service greater than the revenue, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions (of mailability), or either in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue adequate to pay the cost thereof.

This provision merely confers on the Postmaster General the same right to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission, to revise or reform a rate or condition of service that is given every freight shipper and railway and express company. This is necessary in order to be able to accomplish the two fundamental objects of transportation, namely:

(a) To promote the service to the public, or

(b) Insure the receipt of revenue adequate to pay the cost thereof.

It is hardly necessary to say that these objects are complementary, and that the parcel post ought to serve the public and pay its way. It is under the same obligation to do both as is the railway or express carrier. Under the above proviso, and with a view to accomplish both objects made mandatory by the statute, after seven months' experience and the most detailed departmental investigation by his experts, the Postmaster General filed a petition with the Interstate Commerce Commission asking permission to raise the weight limit from 11 pounds to 20 pounds in the first and second zones—150 miles—and reduce the rates in such zones. After full consideration, this tribunal, the most expert in the world, granted its permission to the petition.

Again, subsequently and after many months' experience and consideration, the Postmaster General filed his second petition, asking its consideration and permission to extend the 20-pound weight limit over all zones and raise it to 50 pounds in the first and second zones, the size limit not changed; and, coupled with it, a request to reduce the rates in the other zones and include books in the parcel post. After several weeks' consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission, permission to make these changes in rates and conditions was granted—that is, the Interstate Commerce Commission decided that the changes "promoted the service to the public," and "insured the receipt of revenue adequate to pay the cost of service."

The rates as changed to date by these proceedings are as follows:

Pound rates.[1]

Zone	Packages above 1 pound.		11-pound package.
	Old rate per pound.	New rate per pound.	Old rate.	New rate.

[1] The "first pound" rates were changed, second zone, 6 to 5; third zone, 7 to 6; fourth zone, 8 to 7; fifth zone, 9 to 8; sixth zone, 10 to 9; the others remaining unchanged.

The 11-pound rates, before they were revised by the Interstate Commerce Commission, on the petition of the Postmaster General, compared with the existing express rates, as follows:

Old and new parcel-post rates compared with express rates on 11-pound parcel.

[For 8 zones.]

Zone No.	From New York City to—	Number of miles.	Old parcel post.	Express rate.	New parcel post.
1	New Brunswick, N. J.	32	$0.35	$0.26	$0.15

	San Francisco, Cal.	3,191	1.32	1.32	1.32

It appears that the express rates in every instance but one are lower than the old, legislatively made parcel-post rates, and average only about three-fourths as high. Even the new parcel-post rates average higher than the present express rates in seven out of the ten instances embracing the distances progressively from New York to San Francisco.

Mr. Chairman, it is no use mincing words. If the old, the legislative, parcel-post rates still remained, we should have no parcel post at all, except from about 1 pound up to about 5. The express rates being so much lower, only traffic going to the rural routes would have moved by post. Traffic, like water, tends to seek the lowest rate level, so that any person who favors the retention of the old parcel-post rates must be set down in effect as being opposed to having a parcel post at all. A system of mere paper rates, that can not be used to move the potential traffic, is not what the people intended to establish as the Parcel Post Service, and anyone fighting to prevent the rational change of such paper rates into real rates, as low at least as the express rates, can not deceive anyone as to his real purpose. If these paper rates had not been reformed by the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission and no traffic, or nearly none, had passed through the post, certainly the will of Congress and the people "to promote the public service" would have been almost utterly defeated.

Mr. Chairman, no reasonable man could be heard to object to the lowering of these absurd legislative rates if the cost of the service justified. Now, then, are such rates sufficient for that purpose? I here insert a table showing the present postal rates for each rail shipment and the estimated service cost of the same as made by the Post Office Department:

The first amount in each of the above blocks indicates the proposed postage; the other the estimated cost.

The average haul is based on the radial distance of the zones, except the eighth, where it is fixed at 2,200 miles.

It will be observed that out of about 170 rates all except 3 yield a profit, and some of them a profit as high as 70 per cent of the rate after allowing 10 cents per ton-mile for railway payments and 3 cents per average parcel for other postal expense. The loading for railway transportation allowed exceeds the actual rate of pay by 20 per cent.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman any means of knowing, in the first place, how much the revenue is from the parcel post? And, in the second place, has he any means of knowing whether the country will not have to pay the railroads a good deal more than they are paying now, $100,000,000?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes; the means are ample, if the gentleman from New York had the time or the patience to investigate the means. The Post Office Department has done what the express system never did. It has conducted three censuses of the traffic, and the third census conducted was for 15 days in the month of October. It shows the characteristics of the traffic, namely, that the average parcel weight is about 4 pounds, counting the fourth-class articles from 1 pound up; that the revenue produced was 20 cents a piece; that, counting the cost of delivery, including clerk hire, and all that, the postal expense was 39 mills per vehicle delivery; the cost of paying the railroads is 9 cents per parcel; and that the parcel during October, out of a revenue of 20 cents, showed a profit of 7 cents, after debiting railway pay at 8 cents a ton-mile and every other item of expense.

Mr. PAYNE. But still the department is not counting the railway item.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I would like to follow the gentleman into that labyrinth, but I have not the time.

Mr. STEENERSON. How does the gentleman figure that it cost the Government 8 cents, second class, if you carry these packages at 4 cents?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I say the figures indicate that we pay about 8 cents a ton-mile to the railways for the carriage of mail.

Mr. STEENERSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It amounts to between 11 and 12 cents when you count the railway post-office pay.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Oh, no; I am familiar with that subject. That was true years ago, but not now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Evidently the gentleman is not familiar with it.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. As an average fact of postal experience, it is found that parcels up to 2 pounds are delivered by the ordinary carriers without the expense of a conveyance, and it is by dividing the number of parcels from 1 pound and up into the special delivery expense that the datum, 3 cents per delivery, is reached. It may be objected to that the other services—namely, clerk hire, rent, and overhead expenses—should be added. Let this be granted. The total cost of the average mail piece, of all kinds, in 1912 was 1¾ cents. If we add a cent per parcel for these miscellaneous expenses to the known special costs, we should have an average cost per parcel of 4 cents, including the nondelivery offices. It appears clearly from a census taken of the traffic in October last that the average parcel weighed 4 pounds and produced 20 cents postage. Treating the parcel as having traveled the full length of the zone, and the actual rate of railway pay as 8 cents per ton-mile, and adding 4 cents per parcel for general postal expenses we should have the cost per parcel as 13 cents against a receipt of 20 cents, or a profit of 7 cents per parcel. The express companies secured less than 2 cents profit per parcel in 1912.

Mr. Chairman, in a sense no one has ever disputed the financial sufficiency of these rates; by which I mean to say that even those attacking the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission do not present any facts going to show that the revised rates are not amply compensatory. I have considered it my duty to give the fullest and closest attention to this subject, and have been in constant touch with all who have actually interested themselves in it; and I have yet to meet a single investigator who has doubted the profitableness of the revised rates.

Now, to what issue does this bring us? Obviously to the question, Which is the best fitted to deal with the immense and complicated detail of these transportation rates, weight regulations, and conditions with a view to—

(a) Promote the public service.

(b) Insure the receipt of adequate revenue to pay the cost of such service.

Is it the experts of the Postal Department and the Interstate Commerce Commission, working daily with the subject, or is it 500 Members of Congress with 25,000 bills before them? In an answer to this question I ask the House to compare the legislative rates above given with the express rates and with the parcel-post rates as revised.

Sir, without impugning any man's motive—for on the average I find people as good as I am—I wish to say that the repeal of this substantive provision of the parcel-post law might well be worth $50,000,000 to the express companies. It will finally take away from the Parcel Post Service all the power to compete with them, and they will thus be enabled to capture that portion of the postal function which has saved it from a deficit of about $7,000,000 and given it instead a surplus, now indicated as from eight to ten millions, in the first year of its operation. This is a strong declaration I make and has no value except what the truth may give it.

To begin with the proof that it will destroy the parcel post, let us compare the existing parcel-post rates with the express rates, say the 10, 15, and 20 pound rates from coast to coast.

New York to—	Miles.	Express, 10 pounds.	Post, 10 pounds.	Express, 15 pounds.	Post, 15 pounds.	Express, 20 pounds.	Post, 20 pounds.	Miles up to—

Pittsburgh, Pa.	444	.33	.43	.39	.63	.46	.83	600
Chicago, Ill....	912	.42	.62	.53	.92	.64	1.22	1,000
Lincoln, Nebr..	1,447	.57	.81	.76	1.21	.95	1.61	1,400
Pueblo, Colo....	2,005	.75	1.01	1.04	1.51	1.32	2.01	1,800
Stockton, Utah.	2,483	.98	1.20	1.38	1.80	1.77	2.40	1,800
Reno, Nev.....	2,947	1.13	1.20	1.60	1.80	2.07	2.40	1,800
San Francisco..	3,191	1.22	1.20	1.73	1.80	2.24	2.40	1,800

It will be observed that up to about 300 miles, the third zone, the parcel post has rates that may be fairly called competitive, being as low or lower than the first-class express rates. Beyond this distance the parcel-post rates are so much higher than the express rates that, except from the rural routes, the traffic will all go by express. These are our parcel-post rates as they now stand. So long as they are unchanged the express companies will have the parcel post squeezed out of all the traffic territory beyond 300 miles. That is, we now have a 300-mile parcel post and the express companies have a 3,000-mile express system. How much would they give to have this condition sealed to them by law? Well, the Senate rider, which, to use a rough but descriptive expression, stabs the parcel post to its heart, provides this seal. It reads: "The existing rates, zones, weight limits," and so forth, "shall remain unchanged until otherwise provided by law." Thus the postal rates, and so forth, can not be changed, whether so high as to kill the traffic or so low as to kill the Treasury, and the express companies are given a complete monopoly of the traffic beyond 300 miles because of the proposed legislatively fixed and abnormal rates.

But how about the traffic within the 300 miles? The postal rates here will be similarly crystallized and frozen by the same rider. While the Post Office will be handcuffed and prevented from retaliating on the outlying territory, the express companies are left free, completely free, to reduce their rates and capture even the little postal traffic within the 300-mile circle. Thus the repeal rider would take away the right of the Post Office Department to either attack its antagonist outside of the 300-mile zone or to defend itself when attacked by the express company within the 300-mile zone. The express company alone is free footed and free fisted in the combat, while by this repealing rider the young giant which was set loose by the people to secure them against the exorbitant rates of a private monopoly is to be shackled almost within a year of its birth.

Mr. Chairman, there is something fiendishly unfair in such a proposal. Surely gentlemen who have given it the support of their names have failed to comprehend the operative results of the proposition. I call the attention of the House to the fact that during the calendar year 1913 a deficit was due the Post Office Department in the ordinary course of events. There was such a deficit—about two millions of dollars—in the calendar year 1912. While all the reports are not in now, yet the reports for the 50 cities commonly doing half of the postal business of the country are in for the quarter ending December 31, 1913, and they indicate a surplus of from eight to ten millions of dollars. My own judgment, after the closest study which the data permit, is that without the parcel post we should have had a deficit of about seven millions, due to stationary business conditions of 1913. The effect of the parcel post has been to wipe out that shortage and substitute a surplus of at least eight millions. This is the fruition of the parcel post for the first year. Had it a voice to speak, should we not hear it asking its master, Congress, "What is my offense, that I should be shackled? In what have I offended?"

But, sir, if this rider should prevail, the surplus would be short lived. The express companies, free to readjust their rates, would readjust them to divert all the profitable traffic from the post, leaving us with scarcely any except the rural route and star-route traffic. Two facts justify this assertion:

First. The profitable parcel traffic flows between the cities and on the rails. As to this traffic the express companies are paying the railroads an average of about 4 cents a ton-mile, while the Post Office pays about 8 cents a ton-mile.

Second. The unprofitable traffic is along the rural and star routes. Their maintenance costs the Post Office about four times as much as the revenues derived from the mail and parcels delivered over them.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I will answer the gentleman's question if I have the time.

Mr. FESS. I want to ask whether it is the policy of the Government to produce a surplus?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes; all the rates are predicated on at least 10 per cent profit, and they are yielding now 30 per cent profit.

Mr. Chairman, let me illustrate how the shackled Postal System will be made to suffer through both propositions by express-company invasions of its field. To do this I shall use actual instances. The 20-pound express rate from New York to Pittsburgh is 46 cents. The postal rate on a rural route out of Pittsburgh for that weight is 15 cents. Thus the combined express and rural rate is 61 cents against 83 cents, the parcel-post rate from New York to the farm. The express company here gets the profitable rail haul from New York to Pittsburgh and then throws the parcel onto the rural route at 15 cents, or one-fourth its economic cost, for delivery to destination.

Or take another case. The 10-pound express rate from New York to Lincoln, Nebr., is 57 cents, which, added to the rural postal-route rate of 10 cents, makes 67 cents. The complete parcel-post rate from New York is now 81 cents, or 14 cents above the express and rural-route rates combined. Of course, people will ship by the cheapest means, and so if this Senate rider is adopted we must expect the rural routes to be exploited by the express companies to the limits of the wants of the 20,000,000 of farming population. The express companies will use the nonpaying part of the postal institution to push their traffic to and from the farm at a postal economic loss of 75 per cent, and when it reaches the rails and becomes profitable by a system of rates, they are left free to devise for that purpose—they will appropriate all this traffic substantially to themselves.

A very pertinent question may now be asked. Why did the Postmaster General propose and the Interstate Commerce Commission approve a rate of 81 cents for a 10-pound parcel from New York to Lincoln when they had knowledge that the express rate was 57 cents? The answer is that the Post Office has to pay the railways 60 cents to transport that parcel; that is, at the rate of 8 cents per ton-mile under the existing statute regulating payment for carrying letters, and so forth. Now, the express companies pay the railways a little less than 50 per cent (49.52), or one-half of their rate in each instance; and in this 10-pound case pays the railways only 28 cents out of the 57, or at the rate of 4 cents a ton-mile, and have their equipment carried free besides. Now, the above railway pay conditions run through the whole system of express and parcel-post rates above 10 pounds and beyond the 300-mile zone. The Postmaster General has proposed a bill regulating railway compensation which will have the effect of removing the disparity in postal and express railway pay. When it is adopted he will be able, with the assistance of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to revise these rates and render them competitive at least, provided, of course, that this rider shall not pass. With such parcel business as he can then do it is not too much to hope that the whole economic loss on the rural and star routes, about thirty millions annually, might be recouped from the profitable rail traffic. Certainly, if the Postal Department had the same rate of railway pay and charged the same rates to the public as the express companies, its profits would equal that sum. That the postal establishment can, outside of railway pay, do the parcel business at about one-third the expense to the express company, will not be questioned by any person who fully appreciates the conditions of both. This is because it was already doing the greatest express business on earth before it undertook the parcel work; for in truth the mail piece—18 billions in number in 1912—was an express shipment in nearly all its incidents except weight. In adding the parcel, it is simply handling a larger mail unit, for which it possesses every facility except the wagons, which it has found it easy to supply.

LEGISLATIVE RATE MAKING.

Mr. Chairman, Congress has never undertaken to make transportation rates.

It has had many opportunities to do so. For example:

1. The Panama Railway.
2. The Panama Canal.
3. The railway freight rates.
4. The railway passenger rates.
5. The express rates.
6. The Alaskan railway rates.

It has laid down the principles upon which the rates shall be made—that is, "that they shall be just and reasonable and not discriminatory." The declaration of these principles was a legislative function, but their application to the technical details of transportation has never been regarded as legislative, and Congress has always treated rate making as an administrative function. In treating the parcel post in this way—that is, in laying down the principles that the rates, classification, zones, weight limits, and other conditions should be administratively determined under the mandates that they should "promote the service to the public and insure revenue adequate to pay the cost of the service"—Congress was following all the precedents of its history. It laid down the principles that should guide them, and then authorized the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission to apply them.

Sir, the history of the subject has been the same everywhere. In no country where Government ownership of railways prevails will you find the rates legislatively made. The subject is so technical and difficult and requires such precise knowledge of the particular facts in order not to needlessly kill the potential traffic, or mulct the Treasury by insufficient rates, that trained administrative and elastic rate making is always employed. In England, Belgium, Austria-Hungary, France, and other countries, where they have a service worthy of the name, the function is devolved upon the administrative authorties, even though without the aid of a body like our Interstate Commerce Commission.

Sir, we have started right, and it will be a sad day for the revenues of the Postal System if we should commit the folly of retracing our steps and reversing the whole course of institutional history in transportation rate making in this and other lands. Just as the traditional deficit of the postal establishment is disappearing by the addition of this long-delayed function, hands are raised to paralyze its beneficial activities. Such is the iconoclast always. "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." A Senator is quoted in the press to the effect that "we are said to be losing $50,000,000 annually through the second-class postal rates; we may have to lose $100,000,000 through the parcel rates." What a commentary, if true, this statement is on the incapacity of the legislator to make such rates. The second-class rates were legislative rates, and not administrative. As for the alleged $100,000,000 loss, if the legislative mind can not apprise itself of the truth, namely, that the new rates are producing the first surplus of a generation, what kind of competency does it offer in the way of legislative rate making?

Mr. Chairman, it may be urged that the Interstate Commerce Commission has asked to be relieved of its duties under the law. What it has said is as follows:

> One of the general duties of the commission is to regulate the practices and charges of express companies. It has not felt called upon to consider the interests of these companies in any respect when considering applications of the Postmaster General to change parcel-post rates. The rates of the express companies have been recently revised by this commission, and a very substantial reduction therein has been made. The commission feels that it should be relieved from the duty of determining the extent to which the parcel post should supersede the express system, which it has regulated. It is easily conceivable that a proposition for reduction of parcel-post rates might seem to the commission to threaten the destruction of the existing express companies before adequate provision has been made by the Government for taking over all of such business. In such case the commission would be in grave doubt as to its duty under the present law.
> It is recommended that the commission be relieved of all duties in connection with the parcel post. If that is not done, the duties to be performed by the commission, as well as the standards to be applied to it, should be more clearly stated.
> At page 80 it is suggested that the commission should be relieved of all duties to be applied under the parcel-post law or that such duties and the standards to be applied be more clearly stated.

Mr. Chairman, in effect, the Interstate Commerce Commission suggests that the Postmaster General shall exercise this power of revision alone, and without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This was the effect of the provision when it passed the House, but in conference an addition was made requiring the Interstate Commerce Commission to join with the Postmaster General in making such revisions.

Now, this request can not be construed into any kind of support for this rider. First, the commission does not suggest that the rates should be legislatively made. It does not hint that the task of considering them is not a proper work for the commission and the Postmaster General, nor does it say that the right to make them should be reposed in Congress. We know it would not exercise it once in a generation. But what it does say by implication is that the Postal System has such superior facilities for conducting the parcel service that it will drive the express companies from the field. I share its opinion in this regard, but the prospect of superior efficiency vanquishing a merely parasitic squatter on the postal and railway functions does not disturb me. Now, what the commission asks is to know what the will of Congress is as to such a situation. I submit that Congress has already furnished adequate principles for its guidance. It is to act so as to "promote the service to the public," and the surest way to do this is to let the Post Office and the express companies fight it out, and let the most efficient win.

Now, sir, I do not think that the proper answer to the commission is to stop the parcel post competing with the express companies, by hog-tying its weight and rate limits and essential elements of transportation life and efficiency. I know the enemies of the parcel post succeeded in preventing its enactment by allegations of postal inefficiency. Do they have the right now to reverse their position and shackle it, only to overcome its conceded efficiency?

Some answer may be proper to the question propounded by the commission; but I submit we need not give the answer now. It can wait a year or two when our experience is more complete. And such an answer may well be that as the parcel function is unquestionably a postal one, and profitable under the superior facilities possessed by the Postal System for its conduct, and since it is compelled to take the heavy loss on the rural and star routes, it has a right to occupy the rail field to recoup its losses and render a service cheaper and more extensive than is within the power of the express companies.

Mr. Chairman, this is the only great country that denies its postal establishment the full parcel and communicating functions, and this is the only country that has suffered the postal deficit. The following table gives the receipts and expenditures of the leading nations:

Financial results, receipts, and expenditures of Postal Systems in respect to mail, parcel, and telegraph and telephone services.

Such are the results with the postal establishments completely exercising their normal functions. Who can doubt that our so-called postal deficits simply represent the deprivation of those profitable functions which the express companies for 40 years have succeeded in diverting from our Postal System?

Mr. Chairman, other postal establishments have always enjoyed their full rights. Why not ours? It is notorious that since the Civil War the history of our country has not been the narrative made; that is, "that they shall be just and reasonable and not of social institutions, but a stirring story of the gigantic achievements of individuals in the domain of private finance. You can think of the names of a half dozen such men quicker than you can recall the names of the contemporary Presidents of the Republic. Meanwhile the substantive powers of our national life have belonged not to the States or the Government, as representing society as constitutionally organized, but to private individuals and their personal empires, really great princes of finance with powers exceeding those of the States, and collectively directed, exceeding, too, the active resistant powers of the National Government. At some points their private activities have trenched over onto the Government domain, with the result that some of its functions have been partly diverted and others suspended in their interest. Such has been the masterliness of their control that even the most popular national institution, the postal system, has had to yield two of its principal functions—the parcel post and the electrical method of communication. For 40 years it was deprived of the parcel function. I pray, sincerely pray, that this House, which gave it its life principle, its power of progressive development, by which it has become the poor man's express, and the only net revenue producer of the Nation, will never consent to the destruction of its most vital elements—the principle of development and growth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman, in reply to a question propounded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], stated that the railroads are receiving a compensation for this extra weight occasioned by the development of the parcel post. The gentleman ought to be aware of the fact——

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The gentleman is not asking a question now, is he?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Maryland yielded.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I have not yielded for a speech, sir. I am aware of the facts with regard to railway transportation, as are all the Members here.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will put it in the form of a question, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from New York yield the gentleman two minutes' time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Now state your question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that the railroads have only received $1,300,000 for the increased tonnage occasioned by the increased weight of the parcel post?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. That may be a fact, but that is not an ultimate fact; and the parcel-post rates are not based on that fact, but are based on a loading for railway pay that is more than adequate to take care of the future.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit me, the facts are that the railroads are not receiving any additional compensation whatever other than this $1,300,000 because of the increased weight occasioned by the parcel post.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. There are two sides to that question. Let me answer the gentleman. On a 10-pound parcel from New York to Lincoln, Nebr., the Government, under the present law, is paying the railroads 60 cents. The express companies on a like parcel are paying the railways 28 cents, and that characterizes all the parcel traffic of the express companies and the parcel post for distances beyond 300 miles. As a matter of fact, at this moment the Post Office Department, where it pays at all for these parcels, is paying at the rate of 8 cents a ton-mile to the railways, while the express companies are paying at the rate of 4 cents a ton-mile and have their equipment carried free.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit further?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the present rates continue as the basis for the compensation to the railroads for the carriage of the mail, the additional tonnage occasioned by the increase of the parcel post will result in millions and millions of dollars over that which they are now receiving. The gentleman will not question that, I hope.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I do not comprehend the gentleman's statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. A further question I should like to ask——

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The gentleman is not asking a question yet.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under this authority that the Postmaster General has of fixing rates, would he have authority to change the rates on first-class and second-class matter?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I should say not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, then, has he changed the rates on third-class matter if he has not the right to change them on first and second class matter? He has certainly done so, so far as books are concerned.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I am not answering that question. In my judgment, he has no power to change the rates on first and second class matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. He has changed the rate on third class, which relates to books.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has again expired.

Mr. GILLETT. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND].

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, the attitude of the Democratic Party, now in control of every branch of the Government, upon the live and important question of equal suffrage is of more than passing interest to the people of California and other Western States where women have been granted the ballot. Its successful operation in these localities has fully justified the wisdom of the movement and furnished the strongest possible argument in favor of the submission by Congress of a constitutional amendment extending the franchise to all the States.

WOMEN HAVE PRESENTED CASE WITH DIGNITY AND PERSEVERENCE.

Representative women, advocates of this great cause, have presented their case at the National Capital with dignity and commendable perseverence. It is my purpose to briefly recall some of their experiences, which have been most enlightening from many standpoints. They have been initiated into the game of politics as played under the new and "improved" rules.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. After I complete my remarks if I have any time left I shall be glad to yield.

As an illustration, these good women in consulting leaders at this end of the Avenue were apprised that while Congress met in the Capitol Building little legislation was now framed beneath the great Dome.

Mr. ELDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. After I have completed my remarks I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman if I have any time.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman is speaking to the question before the House ,and I make that point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the gentleman is entirely in order.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. There was no stipulation that general debate should be confined to the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no; we are in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is in order.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Seeking further light, they were advised that to insure success it would be necessary to make a pilgrimage to the present real seat of government. With that alertness so characteristic of the gentler sex they quickly grasped the situation, and temporarily turning their faces from the Capitol wended their way down the historic Avenue to ascertain at first hand if in the promulgation of the New Freedom the cause of equal rights for women, the justice of which cause so strongly appeals to them as it does to countless others, had been accorded that thought and consideration to which it was entitled.

RECEIVED BY PRESIDENT.

Reaching the White House an audience was obtained with the Chief Executive. Having been reliably informed that a presidential message would exercise a most potent influence upon that once independent lawmaking body, they forthwith humbly craved a personally delivered appeal to those who know their master's voice. As to what occurred at that meeting, which took place on December 8, 1913, I would have the Clerk read the following account, taken from the Washington Post of December 9, 1913:

As soon as President Wilson appeared in his office at the White House yesterday a delegation of suffragists formed in a circle, and Dr. Anna Shaw, president of the National Woman's Suffrage Association, advanced with a smile.

"Come closer, ladies," said the President, and the delegates drew closer to him.

"We have come, Mr. President," said Dr. Shaw, "to ask in the name of American women that you send a message to Congress recommending a constitutional amendment favoring woman suffrage or that you indorse a committee in Congress on equal suffrage. All the committees we have appeared before have been very courteous and kind, but it seems that equal suffrage has always been buried somewhere. Won't you help us?"

PRESIDENT WILSON'S REPLY.

In answer to Dr. Shaw the President said:

"I want you ladies, if possible, if I can make it clear to you, to realize just what my present position is. Whenever I walk abroad I realize that I am not a free man; that I am under arrest. I am so carefully and admirably guarded that I have not even the privilege of walking the streets. That is, as it were, typical of my present transference from being an individual, with his mind on any and every subject, to being an official of a great Government, and incidentally, or so it falls out under our system of government, the spokesman of a party.

"I set myself this very strict rule when I was governor of New Jersey, and have followed it as President, that I am not at liberty to urge upon Congress in messages policies which have not had the organic consideration of those for whom I am spokesman."

CAN NOT PRESS PRIVATE VIEWS.

In other words, I have not yet presented any legislature my private views on the subject, and I never shall, because I conceive that to be part of the whole process of government; that I shall be spokesman for somebody, not myself.

I am an individual. When I am spokesman of an organic body I am a representative. For that reason, you see, I am by my own principles shut out, in the language of the street, from "starting anything." I have to confine myself to those things which have been embodied as promises to the people at an election. That is the strict rule I set for myself.

GLAD TO BE CONSULTED.

I want to say that with regard to all other matters I am not only glad to be consulted by my colleagues in the two Houses, but I hope that they will often pay me the compliment of consulting me when they want to know my opinion on any subject. One member of the Rules Committee did come to me and ask me what I thought about this suggestion of yours of appointing a special committee for consideration of the question of woman suffrage, and I told him that I thought it was a proper thing to do.

So that so far as my personal advice has been asked by a single member of the committee it has been given to that effect. I wanted to tell you that to show you that I am strictly living up to my principles. When my private opinion is asked by those who are cooperating with me I am glad to give it, but I am not at liberty until I speak for somebody besides myself to urge legislation upon Congress.

"Then," said Dr. Shaw, after the President had finished speaking, "are we to understand that we are to be left without a spokesman"?

"Madam," said the President, with a broad smile, "I think you ladies are generally able to speak for yourselves."

OBSERVATIONS BY MRS. FUNK AND THE NEW YORK PRESS.

In view of recent developments it is perhaps not surprising that Mrs. Antoinette Funk, a member of the congressional committee of the National Woman Suffrage Association, in a recent interview was constrained to give vent to the following:

"We have hopes," she said, "that 4,000,000 voters of the United States and 10,000,000 persons in sympathy with them will have as much influence with the President when they ask for equal rights for American women as the Government of Great Britain, which is insisting upon repeal of a national law and repudiation of an important plank in the platform upon which the President was elected."

And in this same connection I would insert the following editorial from the New York Press of February 8, 1914:

President Wilson recently told the suffragists that he could not take a stand in favor of their cause, the cause of a suffrage amendment to the Constitution, because the Democratic Party has not gone on record in favor of it.

In the light of the White House attitude on the canal-tolls plank, it might be well for the suffragists to send another delegation to the Executive Offices.

SECOND MEETING WITH THE PRESIDENT.

Hope and persistency are dominant traits of the sex. Undaunted, these brave women made one more plea for Executive favor. On February 2 of this year a committee of working girls, keenly alive to the great importance of the ballot to the woman who toils, called at the White House, and the President's reply to their prayer was in many respects a gem. Listen to it, my Democratic friends, and you may be surprised to learn that a platform, after all, has its uses, proving particularly valuable and convenient in extricating one from embarrassing predicaments. Here is the speech, not characteristic in its brevity, but nevertheless a classic in its line:

I need not tell you—

that a group of women like this appeals to me very deeply indeed. I do not have to tell you what my feelings are, but I have already explained—because I felt obliged to explain—the limitations that are laid upon me as the leader of a party. Until the party as such has considered a matter of this very supreme importance and taken its position, I am not at liberty to speak for it; and yet I am not at liberty to speak as an individual, for I am not an individual. As you see, I either speak to it in a message as you suggest or I do not speak at all. That is the limitation I am under, and all I can say to you, ladies, is that the strength of your agitation in this matter undoubtedly will make a profound impression.

NEW YORK SUN'S ACCOUNT OF MEETING.

The following report of this meeting, from the New York Sun of February 3, is highly interesting:

The 400 women included 50 from New York City and large delegations from Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Delaware, New Jersey, West Virginia, Maryland, and the District of Columbia. Their leader, Mrs. Glendower Evans, of Boston, acted as spokesman.

It was impossible for all the women to get into the President's office, so it was arranged that a committee of 20 should present the appeal to the President while the others waited in front of the Executive Offices. Mrs. Evans reminded the President that more than a year ago she had presented to him at Sea Girt, N. J., an argument for equal suffrage. She said that the President had expressed himself freely at that time, discussing both the merits and demerits of the suffrage movement, and that she had brought away the impression that his beliefs differed but little from those of the advocates of giving votes to women. She said that since that time she had maintained an almost momentary expectation of a pronouncement from Mr. Wilson in favor of the cause she came to present.

NO LONGER FREE TO EXPRESS VIEWS.

The President reminded Mrs. Evans and her companions that as governor of New Jersey he had certain liberties of speech upon public questions which his election to the Presidency deprived him of.

"I was freer then," he said.

"Yes; but you were gunning for votes then," said Mrs. Evans.

ADVERSE ACTION BY COMMITTEE ON RULES.

The extraordinary powers lodged in the Committee on Rules having been a subject of newspaper discussion during previous campaigns, it was decided to make an appeal in that quarter for the creation of a committee on suffrage, a committee that would not be too busy or indifferent to give their case the attention to which it is entitled, and, as Mrs. Ida H. Harper, of New York, declared at the hearing, "a committee whose appointment will hold out to us the hope that ultimately our question will be considered by the National Congress, which is elected to represent all the people, women as well as men."

The Committee on Rules refused to act. Far be it from me to transgress the rules of the House by mentioning what took place in committee in executive session. I am not a member of that committee and do not possess the knowledge to impart even should I desire to do so. I do know that some of us from the West urged the Republican members of that committee to favor the appeal of the women, and we have great confidence in their good judgment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am a member of the Committee on Rules, and I want to say that there was an express resolution that all of the proceedings of the committee should be made public, and if the gentleman knows what those proceedings were he is at liberty to make them public.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I have a newspaper clipping, and I intended to get the action of the committee into the RECORD in that way. If the gentleman from Tennessee, a member of the committee, detects any error in the account, I wish he would call my attention to it.

The newspaper account is one appearing in the Washington Post the day following the adverse action of the committee. The accuracy of the report has never been questioned. I will now read the report from the Washington Post of January 25, 1914:

Democrats of the House put themselves firmly on record against woman suffrage yesterday, when the House Rules Committee, by a vote of 4 to 4, declined to report out a resolution creating a special committee on woman suffrage. * * * Those voting for the resolution were Representatives FOSTER, Democrat, of Illinois; CAMPBELL of Kansas and LENROOT of Wisconsin, Republicans; and KELLY, Progressive, of Pennsylvania.

Those against were Representatives POU of North Carolina, HARDWICK of Georgia, GARRETT of Tennessee, and CANTRILL of Kentucky, all Democrats. * * * Representative HENRY of Texas and Representative GOLDFOGLE of New York did not attend the meeting. Both were in the city. Both are said to be against the resolution.

I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if that is correct?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will allow me, so far as the vote is concerned, it is correct; and, so far as the absentees is concerned, it is correct; but the attitude of the absentees I have no knowledge of.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS GOES ON RECORD IN OPPOSITION.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Finally, desirous of definitely fixing responsibility, it was determined to put the question squarely up to the Democratic caucus, whose dictum is final unless a higher authority intervenes. Sufficient signatures were obtained after some little effort on the part of those interested—many Members of the Democratic Party being reluctant to sign without the word from headquarters—and the caucus was finally convened on the night of February 3.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. REED. I would like to know who the gentleman's authority is for making the assertion that many were reluctant to yield without higher authority.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Because ladies who circulated the petition gave that information.

Mr. REED. But sometimes mistakes are made in the transmission of such messages, as this occasion on which the gentleman has spoken. I was one of the Members who signed it.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I can not yield to the gentleman further to make a speech in my time.

There was much oratory in the caucus, we learn from newspaper accounts, but finally our colleague from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who has been the most active influence against suffrage in the House, carried the caucus with him by a vote of 123 to 67, the Democratic Party declaring that suffrage was not a national issue. Regardless of this action, I predict that when the next campaign is on they will find this to be one of the most live national issues. A very striking peculiarity of a Democratic caucus is its soothing effect upon those who participate. Members enter roaring like fighting lions and come out meek as lambs.

HOUSE LEADER UNDERWOOD STATES POSITION OF DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

To further emphasize the position of the party, I quote the following colloquy from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 4.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman [Mr. UNDERWOOD], as leader of the majority, use his influence in the House to report that resolution so that we may have an opportunity to vote on it?

The resolution referred to was the one pending for the submission of a constitutional amendment by Congress for the enfranchisement of the several States. To this inquiry Mr. UNDERWOOD replied:

I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I would not, because I am not in favor of it. If there is one fundamental principle that my party stands for, it is local self-government.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Being interrogated further he said, and I again quote from the RECORD:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I not only said I was opposed to it, but I said the party on this side of the Chamber was opposed to it, and the party that has control of the legislation in Congress certainly has the right openly and aboveboard to say that it will not support a measure if it is not in accordance with its principles.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true; but there is a distinction between supporting a measure and giving the House a right to vote upon the measure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman recognizes the fact that we can not vote upon every measure.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, if the gentleman wishes to take the position that the Members on that side are unwilling to let the House of Representatives vote upon this question, then he is entirely welcome to take that position.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Wisconsin began his first remark by stating that the Democratic Party had taken its position last night, and it did, when by a two-thirds vote it fixed our position on that matter.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I want to ask the gentleman this question: If after he has stated the Democratic Party's position on the suffrage question he will favor us with the position of the Republican Party?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. It is always a weak argument to attempt to shift responsibility; the women of the country are looking to the party in power.

Mr. KEATING. I agree with the gentleman that the women do not expect the Republican Party to take any action, but I wish the gentleman would state the position of the Republican Party, nevertheless.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I can not, except so far as I am concerned.

Mr. KEATING. Can the gentleman as far as his party is concerned?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I am not authorized to speak for the Republican Party.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman does not know what the position of his party is, but he knows that they never declared in favor of woman suffrage.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I do know that they have never declared against woman suffrage as the Democratic Party has recently done in caucus and in committee.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman say that the Republican Party has in the House or out of the House declared in favor of woman suffrage?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is a man of great intellectual integrity, and I want to ask the gentleman if he in his heart has any quarrel with the position taken by the Democratic caucus? The Democratic Party did not declare against woman suffrage; it declared that it was a State and not a Federal question.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. The Rules Committee declared against creating a special committee. I believe your party was wrong in that action, and I likewise believe that constitutional amendment ought to be submitted.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman believes it is a Federal and not a State question?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I believe it is largely a Federal question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman willing to follow that matter to its logical end? The gentleman from California knows that his State has its local troubles that are very grave and not of interest to other sections of the country.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. We saw an instance of that the other day, when the House voted against Japanese exclusion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; and the gentleman knows where the sympathy on the Japanese question comes from. Would the gentleman be willing to assert as a distinguished Republican, or once a Republican, asserted that the Nation would have a right to force the Japanese into the schools of the State, that the Federal Government ought to do it over the protest of the State; does the gentleman think so?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. No; I do not, but that is not a parallel case.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Suppose the majority of the States so opposed to woman suffrage should undertake to interfere with California and the women of the State and exercise that right, would the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I maintain that in this instance the women have a perfect right to ask that an opportunity be given the House to vote on the proposed amendment. That is the question involved here. You are depriving Congress of an opportunity to express itself. If a majority believe as the gentleman does, then they could defeat the amendment; but you are now depriving Congress of an opportunity to even vote upon this question. That, I take it, is what the women object to particularly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. I yield to the gentleman from California five minutes more.

Mr. CURRY. If a majority of the States were opposed to the adoption of this constitutional amendment, then they would not vote it in the Constitution, even if the House and the Senate submitted it?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Of course not.

Mr. CURRY. Is it not a fact that the State conventions that have indorsed woman's suffrage have, with the exception of two, been Republican?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. That is true.

Mr. CURRY. Does the gentleman know of any Democratic State that has indorsed it?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I do not.

WIDESPREAD CRITICISM.

I understand that so widespread has been the criticism against the attitude of the Democratic Party upon this question that leaders have condescended to grant the women a hearing before the Judiciary Committee; but as the party has gone on record in caucus, by a two-thirds vote, the hearing will, I fear, be without result.

NO OPPORTUNITY GRANTED TO VOTE UPON THE QUESTION.

It would be useless at this time to enter into a discussion of the general subject, for it has been decreed that the membership of this House, during this session at least, are not to be granted an opportunity to vote upon this question. If accorded the opportunity, I shall, of course, support the proposed constitutional amendment. Nearly 15 years ago, while a member of the Legislature of California, at a time when the movement was not popular, I did not hesitate to go on record in favor of granting the right of suffrage to women, and I have never regretted my early attitude.

ADVANCED POSITION OF CALIFORNIA JUSTIFIED.

The experience of California under equal suffrage has fully sustained the judgment of the voters of my State in taking the advanced step. Husband and wife, sister and brother, mother and daughter accompany each other to the polls. The election booths are more orderly than ever before. Women closely scrutinize candidates and fully acquaint themselves with their public records. They are most conservative, and not easily swayed. A just cause strongly appeals to them.

In closing, let me say to my Democratic friends that the success of the equal-suffrage movement is inevitable. You might as well capitulate now as later. The strength of the cause is its justice. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I had not supposed that an occasion would arise on which I would care to discuss the suffrage question, so called, but the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND] seem to render it at least proper, if not necessary, to state, as perhaps it has not been fully stated, the reason that controlled those of us who occupy the same position that I occupy, in declining to vote for the creation of a House committee on equal suffrage. The only purpose, let it be understood here and now, for the creation of that committee was that it should be a committee favorable to the submission of a constitutional amendment. The ladies who appeared before the Committee on Rules at the hearings that were held upon successive days did not desire the creation of a committee merely to have a committee, because there is already a committee of the House that has jurisdiction of the suffrage question. It was because that committee has been unfavorable that the ladies desired the creation of a new committee. That, of course, every man understands. The purpose was to create a committee which either now or at some time in the near future would be favorable to the submission of a Federal constitutional amendment.

So far as I am concerned, without reference to the merits of the question of suffrage, I am opposed to the submission of any such constitutional amendment, and since the only purpose of creating a committee was to get a committee which would do that, how could one who was opposed to the submission of a constitutional amendment logically vote for the creation of a committee to do that to which he was opposed? What is the logic of the position taken by the gentleman from California? That it is a Federal and not a State question. Suppose the matter were reversed? Suppose the question were submitted in the form of permitting three-fourths of the States to declare that any State should not have suffrage? Does the gentleman believe that three-fourths of the States should be permitted to prevent his State from having woman's suffrage? I apprehend he would not be willing to support that, and yet in principle that is precisely the proposition which the gentleman would advocate. The Democratic Party, in taking its position in the caucus, did not take a position against suffrage. It did take a position which is sound and which, in my judgment, is approved in the hearts of four-fifths of the membership of this House, without regard to party, and that is that there should not be a provision whereby three-fourths of the States or any number of States could fix the qualification of voters in all the States.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Does the gentleman personally favor suffrage?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will be entirely frank with the gentleman. There are some matters upon which I favor suffrage. There are some objections, I do not know whether they are sentimental or intellectual, though I think both, that I have against the general exercise of suffrage by women.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. As the gentleman probably knows, I voted in favor of reporting this resolution. I now see in the newspapers where a lady with whom I am intimately acquainted, in the city of Chicago, and who is organizing the Democratic women in my district, is quoted as saying that she is in accord with the action of the Democratic Party in the House, and that the Democratic women of that locality are, and that lady is the wife of Congressman BUCHANAN, of Chicago. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that, after all, it is a principle of government that is involved here, a principle that must be considered in connection with our peculiar system of government, our duplex form of government, State and Federal. I should oppose, I will say to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND], just as earnestly any proposition whereby three-fourths of the States could prevent a State from giving the right of suffrage to women as I do now oppose a provision whereby three-fourths of the States can give the right in other States against the wish of such State or States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13612, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 21, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 21, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we worship Thee. We come to ask that there may be vouchsafed to us that miracle of grace whereby our wills may be brought into a blessed accord with Thy will. Thou dost stand so near to us in life as that all the interests committed to our hands are one with the interests of Thy kingdom; and Thou art offering to us such measures of grace as that our personal life also may be brought into accord with the great purposes of Thy kingdom.

So we pray that our life and our country may be brought into accord with God's will, and that we may live to glorify Thy name and to extend the interest of the kingdom of Thy grace among men. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11269) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 278) thereon.

Mr. BURLEIGH, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 3176) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Bangor, Me., reported it with amendment and submitted a report (No. 279) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4618) to increase the limit of cost for increased quarantine facilities at the port of Portland, Me., reported it without amendment.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 4182) to authorize the installation of mail chutes in the public building at Cleveland, Ohio, and to appropriate money therefor, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 280) thereon.

Mr. STEPHENSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5487) to authorize an additional appropriation for the erection of the United States appraisers' stores building at Milwaukee, Wis., reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 1832) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Georgetown, in the State of Delaware, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 281) thereon.

Mr. CATRON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 227) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William M. Carroll, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 282) thereon.

Mr. RANSDELL, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4395) to regulate the importation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products, to regulate interstate traffic in said articles, and for other purposes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 4565) to readjust the lineal rank of certain officers of the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 4566) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4567) to embrace in fourth-class mail matter all seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and plants; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. CATRON:

A bill (S. 4568) for the relief of the First National Bank of Albuquerque, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 4569) to regulate the payment of salaries of post-office clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 4574) for the relief of Francis J. Mattier (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. LODGE. I introduce a joint resolution to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution in the class "other than Members of Congress." I do so owing to the fact that the late Senator from Georgia, Mr. Bacon, was one of the regents, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is another, is absent, and I am the only Senator present of this class. I am not sure to what committee it is customary to refer such a joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs the Chair that such joint resolutions have been taken up when brought in and acted upon at once.

Mr. LODGE. I thought that had been the case. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) for the appointment of a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution in the class "other than Members of Congress" shall be filled by the reappointment of Charles F. Choate, jr., a citizen of Massachusetts.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. OLIVER. I submit a proposed amendment to the interstate trade commission bill and ask unanimous consent that it may be read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the amendment was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Add as an additional section:

"This act shall not apply to or in any way affect—

"(a) Corporations or associations having a capital of less than $100,000;

"(b) Corporations or associations transacting a business amounting in the aggregate to less than $100,000 a year;

"(c) Corporations or associations engaged exclusively in selling goods at retail;

"(d) Corporations or associations engaged exclusively in the publication of newspapers, magazines, or other periodicals.

"Any corporation may petition the interstate trade commission to be exempted from the operation of this act. Upon receipt of such petition it shall be the duty of the said commission to make an investigation as to the nature and character of the business carried on by such corporation, and if, after such investigation, the commission shall find that the business conducted by such corporation is of such a character that the corporation can not be guilty of violating the Sherman antitrust law or the amendments thereto, it shall issue an order releasing such corporation from the operation of this act until the further order of the commission."

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of 15 division superintendents of the Railway Mail Service from $3,000 each to $3,500 each, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. KENYON submitted an amendment relative to the use of moneys due the estate of deceased colored soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment authorizing the Ponca Tribe of Indians residing in Oklahoma and Nebraska to appear in and be made parties to any suit or suits in the Court of Claims heretofore instituted, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

JAMES F. SELLERS.

Mr. OLIVER (for Mr. PENROSE) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 278), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to appoint James F. Sellers an additional messenger, who shall be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, until otherwise provided for by law.

THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. KERN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 279), which was read and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule XXV be so amended that the clause thereof providing for a Committee on Naval Affairs shall read as follows: "A Committee on Naval Affairs, to consist of 16 Senators."

THE BATTLE OF LEXINGTON.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a paper, being the remarks of Galliard Hunt at the meeting of the Sons of the Revolution in the District of Columbia, April 19, 1913, on the anniversary of the Battle of Lexington. I ask that the paper may be referred to the Committee on Printing, with a view to having it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

CONDITIONS IN MEXICO.

Mr. FALL. In the nature of a petition, I present two telegrams and a series of resolutions adopted yesterday at a meeting of citizens of El Paso, Tex. I ask that they may be read. I have nothing to say with reference to them, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the telegrams and resolutions were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

EL PASO, TEX., February 20, 1914.

Senator A. B. FALL, Washington, D. C.:

At an indignation meeting here to-night, attended by 2,000 people and hundreds unable to get into the building, a preamble and resolution was unanimously and enthusiastically adopted, copy of which has been wired to the President and sent out through the Associated Press to all the world. Feeling very bitter over the brutal murder of Benton. Letter explains fully and will be pleased to supply any additional information which you may want. Please advise CATRON and FERGUSSON.

GEORGE CURRY, Chairman.

EL PASO, TEX., February 20, 1914.

A. B. FALL,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

William Benton was murdered like a dog by Villa. Almost certain Villa did it personally. No evidence that Benton was the aggressor. Everything shows it was cold-blooded murder. Castillo, a guest of our Government with safety from punishment. Villa boasting of his crime. Is there no protection anywhere? El Paso full of rebel officers. The business affairs of the rebellion openly done here. Your thousands of friends out here want to hear your voice in Senate in our behalf. Watchful waiting a failure.

R. M. DUDLEY.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

Whereas Mr. William S. Benton, a highly respected and honored citizen of the State of Chihuahua and subject of Great Britain, was brutally murdered and assassinated at Juarez, Mexico, by Francisco Villa, we, the citizens of El Paso, Tex., and refugees from Mexico, at an indignation meeting held in El Paso, February 20, 1914, wishing to protest most emphatically against the cruel and violent treatment which has been accorded foreigners during the last three years of revolution in that country, beg to submit to the world and the American people the following brief statement of facts:

The cold-blooded and heartless assassination of William S. Benton without any cause whatever other than the fact that he went to Juarez to protest against the confiscation of his property, the Los Remedios ranch in northern Mexico, which has been repeatedly looted, is but another crime to be added to the hundreds that have already been committed against all foreigners living in Mexico who have been driven from their homes, their property destroyed; in many cases women have been outraged and foreigners murdered in cold blood, and for no other reason than on account of their nationality.

We believe that the State Department at Washington has persistently suppressed facts concerning the true conditions in Mexico and endeavored through inspired newspaper articles and by other means to mislead the American people and form public opinion for political purposes in support of a policy that is ruinous to all foreign interests in Mexico and the Mexican people themselves.

HATRED OF AMERICANS BLAMED.

In support of the statement we would call attention to a recent article in the New York World which purported to be a semiofficial interview coming from the Secretary of State's office, and which stated that while a great many Americans had lost their lives in Mexico not one had been murdered solely on account of his nationality; this statement we know to be absolutely false, and we believe there are reports on file in the State Department from their own consuls to the contrary. We recall in the last few months such cases as the assassination of Mr. Burton at Santa Rosalia, Mr. Hayes and Mr. Thomas at Madera, and Mr. Brooks in northern Chihuahua, and in every one of these cases they were brutally murdered for no other reason than that they were American citizens.

Some months ago the State Department officially declared in one of its messages to Mexico that it would hold the Mexican leaders personally responsible for outrages committed against American citizens. At the present moment our Government is harboring Gen. Ynez Salazar, who has an unbroken record ever since he took the field in Mexico of outrages committed against our citizens. There are many citizens of this city who were cruelly and brutally treated by this man, many who have been held for ransom and at least one, Mr. Fountain, who was shot by his order, and thus far he has been immune from all punishment by our Government.

At the present moment Maximo Castillo, who for many months has been at the head of an outlaw band in northern Mexico, holding our citizens for ransom and perpetrating all kinds of outrages, whose band recently burned alive between 50 and 60 passengers in the Cumbre Tunnel on the Northwestern Railroad, is being given asylum and protection by our Government.

WEAK POLICY BLAMED.

We submit these facts as evidence that our Government is, through a weak and vacillating policy, encouraging these lawless leaders to commit all kinds of outrages against foreigners, and doing a great injustice to our own people, resulting in a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars of foreign capital, the murder of many of our citizens, the raping of American women, and ruination of Mexico itself.

The career of Francisco Villa, a man who has been an outlaw and a murderer for many years, and who is now wielding an arbitrary and despotic reign of terror in northern Mexico, is more cruel and barbarous in his methods than any tyrant in the world's history. It is a fact that he has treated with contempt the representatives of nations and that he does not hesitate to put a man to death for the slightest cause and for in any way incurring his displeasure. We believe it a disgrace to our Government and the American people to tolerate such a man, much less to give him moral support: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this message be sent to the President of the United States, the British ambassador at Washington, to our United States Senators, and those of New Mexico, with the request that it be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and we apply to them and to all our representatives in both branches of Congress to adopt a resolution to compel the State Department to transmit to Congress its records pertaining to the outrages committed against Americans and foreigners in Mexico and to take such action as will give our people the protection guaranteed under their constitutional rights and maintain the honor and prestige of our country in the eyes of the world. We apply to you to make known the facts to the American people and to see that our citizens who are living in Mexico and have invested their money there in good faith are given the protection justly due them.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 2 hours and 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

LAND AT POPLAR, MONT.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 185, being Senate bill 656, and I wish to say a word in regard to it.

This is the bill which passed the Senate the other day with an amendment, recommended by the Interior Department and by the Committee on Public Lands, to grant to the Episcopal Church in Montana two lots in the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. The amendment provided that the church authorities should be allowed to purchase the lots at the appraised value. The votes whereby the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed were afterwards reconsidered so as to see whether a way could be provided for donating the lots to the church without the payment of any purchase price. I am informed by the church authorities that they are entirely willing to pay the appraised value and are satisfied with the amendment incorporated in the bill. I also am satisfied with it, and so I ask that the bill may be passed in the same form in which it was passed by the Senate a few days ago.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator that it was not because of the amount involved in the bill that I objected, but it was the principle that would be thereby established. I have no objection whatever to the bill passing in its present form.

Mr. MYERS. As I have stated, I am satisfied to have the bill passed in the same form in which it was passed a few days ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 656) granting to the trustees of the diocese of Montana of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for the benefit of "Christ Church On-the-Hill," at Poplar, Mont., lots 5, 6, and 7, in block 30, town site of Poplar, State of Montana.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to ask if the amendment which I find in the text of the bill has been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has heretofore been agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, morning business was not closed this morning when the motion was made to go into executive session. I therefore ask that the motion made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], for the change of reference of Senate bill 4425, may go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken, and, without objection, this will also be done in the case of the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 23, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 21, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, our heavenly Father, who hast ever been the inspiration of men to heroism and glory, we thank Thee that our beloved Washington lives in the hearts of his countrymen and has become the patron saint for the lovers of liberty in all the world. We remember with gratitude the great men who wrought with him, but we realize that his was the most conspicuous and inspiring figure of the American Revolution, a most potent factor in the formative and constructive periods of our Republic. The Nation has honored itself in the splendid monument reared in his memory, but the monument he reared for himself will remain when it has crumbled into dust. His heroic deeds as a soldier, a statesman, a Christian philanthropist will live on so long as men cherish life and liberty. He will be remembered by a grateful people to-day in song and story, in eulogy and encomium. Thus may we ever be inspired as citizens of a great Republic by his sublime example, and pæans of praise we will ever give to Thee. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative work between agricultural colleges in the several States and the Department of Agriculture, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7951) with Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 7951. An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture.

The Clerk began reading of the Senate amendments,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to dispense with the reading of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. LEVER was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, and Mr. HAUGEN.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13612, the urgent deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13612, the urgent deficiency bill, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13612) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the Chair kindly tell me how much time I have left?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty minutes, and 16 minutes remains to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, early in the session I had occasion to make some remarks criticizing the attitude of the Democratic administration toward the civil service, and showing, as I thought, that there had been more of an aggressive and successful attack upon that system, and greater injury inflicted upon it during the nine months of Democratic administration than there had been in any similar period during the whole 30 years since the law was passed. When I made those remarks I felt myself that, although the President and Congress were equally responsible for the legislation, because, while we originated he approved it, yet, I will admit, that I felt that Congress was the party which was chiefly culpable, culpable in my opinion, praiseworthy, I presume, in the opinion of the Democratic majority, for what had happened.

I knew that President Wilson before he assumed his high office had been always openly and avowedly a friend of the civil-service system. He had been a vice president of the National Civil Service League at the time he was nominated, and he had not hesitated afterwards to affirm his strong adherence to the principles of that organization. When he signed the urgent deficiency bill, which contained the first step backward in legislation about the merit system which had been taken for 30 years—when he signed that he even then avowed that, although he signed it, he still favored the theory and practice of civil-service reform, and he said:

The control of the whole method and spirit of the provision in this bill which concerns the appointment of these officers is no less entirely in my hands now than it was before the bill became a law.

Upon that declaration the organ of the National Civil Service Reform Association, Good Government, suggested to the President that he should let his conduct square with his profession, and that he should do as his predecessors had sometimes done and order the various officers throughout the country affected by the bill to select their deputies from the civil-service list. The President did not see fit to do that, but instead he issued the following general order:

Collectors of internal revenue:

Referring to that portion of the urgent deficiency act approved October 22, 1913, relating to the appointment of deputy collectors of internal revenue, collectors are advised that the object of this provision of law is efficiency, and only efficiency, and that any tendency to use this class of appointments merely for personal reward or for anything that savors of the spoils system will be regarded as a very serious disregard of public duty and that they will be expected to deal with these matters in a spirit which the whole country will approve.

Hereafter when vacancies in this class of offices occur or changes are contemplated, and before such vacancies are filled or such changes are effected, collectors will forward to this office the names of the persons whom it is desired to appoint, together with a statement of their qualifications and records.

No appointments in this class of officers shall hereafter be made by collectors without the approval of the department.

(Signed) W. H. OSBORN,
Commissioner.

By direction of the President.

(Signed) W. G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury.

How much effect that would have we can readily imagine. The spoilsmen would smile at his suggestion and openly disregard it, knowing that it was impossible for any President to decide whether they made their appointments for efficiency or not.

We had an illustration a short time ago in Massachusetts which, I think, charmingly illustrates the effect and efficiency of such an order. I do not know the full details, because my Democratic colleagues naturally did not take me into their confidence. I can only speak of what I read in the press. The collector of internal revenue in Massachusetts had the appointment of nine deputies. Did he appoint those whom he wished, as the opponents of civil service always say he would do? They criticize the civil-service system, because they say that officers who are responsible for their deputies ought to have the power to appoint the men for whom they are responsible. Did our Boston collector appoint the men he wished? Why, no; of course not. The law exempting those offices from civil-service examination was passed by Congress. The Democratic Congressmen were the victors, and to them belonged the spoils of office. Accordingly, the Democratic Congressmen were allowed to nominate the deputy collectors. Unfortunately, there were only eight Democratic Congressmen, while there were nine deputy collectors to be appointed, and I understand that was quite a disturbing element in the arrangement, and the question arose who should have the ninth deputy. In some way that was adjusted. Possibly the collector himself was finally allowed to select that one. I do not know. But it was finally adjusted; and the nine deputies were installed in office. And when the collector began to perform the duties of his office, he found around him a collection of men, not simply moderately and indifferently bad, but so insufferably bad that they were impossible, so bad that he could not go on with the conduct of his office, and he had to come to Washington. There was a meeting here of the Massachusetts Democratic Congressmen, and there were consultations with the Treasury officials, and finally in some way—I do not know how—the worst of these men were gotten rid of, and he was given a force with which he thought he could do business. If the men had been only tolerably bad, as I presume they were in most of the country, then the collector would have gone on and done business as best he could and the Government would have suffered; but, unfortunately for him, in this instance they were so utterly bad that it was impossible to do business, and the whole machine broke down.

This incident beautifully proves the fallacy of that stock argument of the opponents of civil-service reform, that there should be no competitive examination, but that the officer himself ought to be allowed the appointment of the men for whom he is responsible, because this shows that he is never allowed these appointments. They go to the politicians. And the ground upon which civil service is supported, by myself at any rate, is not that it always gets the best men, it is not that the collector can not pick out a better assistant than the competitive examination will bring, if he were left free to do so, but as the experience in this case illustrates, if you do not have competitive examinations, you will have a system of patronage and favoritism that will bring inefficient and unfit men into office.

Now, after the deficiency bill was enacted the Democratic majority, emboldened apparently by their success; delighted, no doubt, to find that their President, whom they undoubtedly supposed originally was a vigorous and active friend of civil service, would acquiesce in their encroachments upon the law, went still further, and at this session of Congress brought in on the Post Office appropriation bill an amendment taking all the assistant postmasters out of the classified service. But apparently at last they went too far. The President's patience was exhausted. I confess I still think it was not his own willing acquiescence that brought him to sign the previous bills, but that he was overborne by the hunger for spoils and the pressure from the legislative branch of Congress. He was anxious to appease them. He has certainly shown himself a wonderful master in the distribution of patronage. The most experienced politician has never shown greater skill in pacifying a voracious animosity by the distribution of loaves and fishes than this college professor, and I have no doubt that it was that pressure for patronage that compelled him to yield his own convictions and his wishes in the former bills. But, as I say, the limit of his patience was reached, and on this Post Office appropriation bill he let it be known that he would not sign such a bill. Immediately the opposition collapsed. The rule that was expected was not granted. Those in favor of it threw up their hands, and the bill went peacefully through without that amendment.

This makes me regret the more that in the last session, when the deficiency bill went through by a majority of only four, he did not then let his wishes be known, because a whisper from the White House would certainly have changed more than those four votes, and he might have prevented that irreparable damage to the civil service.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman aware that a provision for the elimination of the assistant postmasters in the Postal Service from the civil service is pending now in the form of a bill recommended by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; I appreciate the fact that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has not given up; but I have not the slightest idea, and I fancy nobody has, that the bill can become a law after what the President has stated.

Now, as I say, in these matters I supposed that the President was a reluctant victim rather than a willing accomplice. [Laughter on the Republican side.] But there are other branches of the public service over which the House has less control. There is the whole Diplomatic Service. President Eliot, late president of Harvard College, whose unselfish devotion to the public service no one will doubt, declared in a recent address that the distribution and appointment of the diplomatic posts under this administration were a reproach to the Secretary of State, whom he marked out for his criticism. I recognize that for many years diplomatic posts have been treated as political appointments, and that partisanship has ruled very generally, and that those places have been given as a reward for party service, although of late experience and merit have gradually come to be more and more recognized in the selection of men to fill those posts, and——

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON. The recognition of the merit system in the filling of these posts——

Mr. GILLETT. I yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman says the merit system has been recognized, but it has not been recognized until after all the offices have been filled by Republicans.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not see the point of that remark.

Mr. GORDON. Is it not true of late years?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; in some measure, but——

Mr. GORDON. After the offices had been filled with Republicans.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; but the personal wishes of the President have not been so much exercised, and I do not think that all the offices have been filled by Republicans. I admit at once that those have been considered as partisan places, but I do believe that under our last Republican Presidents they have tried more and more to keep them out of partisanship, and that merit and experience should be rewarded.

Mr. GORDON. Can the gentleman name any Democrats who were appointed in the Consular Service in the last administration?

Mr. GILLETT. I know a great many were, but I can not name just now anyone in our Consular Service.

Mr. GORDON. If there were any, they were Democrats who voted the Republican ticket.

Mr. GILLETT. The Consular Service, to which the gentleman refers, is the one branch of our foreign service in which for years favoritism and partisanship has been systematically and invariably checked by rules intended to let merit and experience prevail. The attempt was inaugurated by President Roosevelt to make of our Consular Service a sane business institution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Was not the first Executive order of the character the gentleman refers to issued by President Cleveland and written by Richard Olney?

Mr. GILLETT. Very possibly. I hope so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know the gentleman wants to be correct.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly. I hope it was; but it certainly was not as far-reaching as the late one to which I refer. That attempted to build up our Consular Service so that it would advance the business of our country and inform our business men of conditions and opportunities abroad. I believe that purpose has been largely realized. In June, 1906, President Roosevelt issued the following regulations:

INFORMATION REGARDING APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE CONSULAR SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS.

Executive orders.

Whereas the Congress, by section 1753 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, has provided as follows:

"The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations for the admission of persons into the civil service of the United States as may best promote the efficiency thereof, and ascertain the fitness of each candidate in respect to age, health, character, knowledge, and ability for the branch of service into which he seeks to enter; and for this purpose he may employ suitable persons to conduct such inquiries, and may prescribe their duties, and establish regulations for the conduct of persons who may receive appointments in the civil service."

And whereas the Congress has classified and graded the consuls general and consuls of the United States by the act entitled "An act to provide for the reorganization of the Consular Service of the United States," approved April 5, 1906, and has thereby made it practicable to extend to that branch of the civil service the aforesaid provisions of the Revised Statutes and the principles embodied in the civil-service act of January 16, 1883.

Now, therefore, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by the Constitution and laws of the United States, the President makes the following regulations to govern the selection of consuls general and consuls in the civil service of the United States, subject always to the advice and consent of the Senate:

1. Vacancies in the office of consul general and in the office of consul above class 8 shall be filled by promotion from the lower grades of the Consular Service, based upon ability and efficiency as shown in the service.

2. Vacancies in the office of consul of class 8 and of consul of class 9 shall be filled:

(a) (As amended by Executive orders of December 12, 1906, and April 20, 1907.) By promotion on the basis of ability and efficiency as shown in the service, of consular assistants (as amended by the act approved May 21, 1908) and of vice consuls, deputy consuls, consular agents, student interpreters, and interpreters in the Consular or Diplomatic Service, who shall have been appointed to such offices upon examination.

(b) By new appointments of candidates who have passed a satisfactory examination for appointment as consul as hereafter provided.

3. Persons in the service of the Department of State with salaries of $2,000 or upward shall be eligible for promotion, on the basis of ability and efficiency as shown in the service, to any grade of the Consular Service above class 8 of consuls.

4. The Secretary of State, or such officer of the Department of State as the President shall designate, the Director of the Consular Service, the Chief of the Consular Bureau (as amended by Executive order of December 8, 1909), and the chief examiner of the Civil Service Commission, or some person whom said commission shall designate, shall constitute a board of examiners for admission to the Consular Service.

5. It shall be the duty of the board of examiners to formulate rules for and hold examinations of applicants for admission to the Consular Service.

6. The scope and method of the examinations shall be determined by the board of examiners, but among the subjects shall be included at least one modern language other than English; the natural, industrial, and commercial resources and the commerce of the United States, especially with reference to the possibilities of increasing and extending the trade of the United States with foreign countries; political economy; elements of international, commercial, and maritime law.

7. Examination papers shall be rated on a scale of 100, and no person rated at less than 80 shall be eligible for certification.

8 No one shall be examined who is under 21 or over 50 years of age, or who is not a citizen of the United States, or who is not of good character and habits and physically and mentally qualified for the proper performance of consular work, or who has not been specially designated by the President for appointment to the Consular Service subject to examination.

9. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the eighth or ninth class of consuls which the President may deem it expedient to fill, the Secretary of State shall inform the board of examiners, who shall certify to him the list of those persons eligible for appointment, accompanying the certificate with a detailed report showing the qualifications, as revealed by examination, of the persons so certified. If it be desired to fill a vacancy in a consulate in a country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, the Secretary of State shall so inform the board of examiners, who shall include in the list of names certified by it only such persons as have passed the examination provided for in this order, and who also have passed an examination in the fundamental principles of the common law, the rules of evidence, and the trial of civil and criminal cases. The list of names which the board of examiners shall certify shall be sent to the President for his information.

10. No promotion shall be made except for efficiency, as shown by the work that the officer has accomplished, the ability, promptness, and diligence displayed by him in the performance of all his official duties, his conduct, and his fitness for the Consular Service.

11 (as amended by Executive order of Dec. 12, 1906). It shall be the duty of the board of examiners to formulate rules for and hold examinations of persons designated for appointment as consular assistant (as amended by the act approved May 21, 1908) or as student interpreter, and of such persons designated for appointment as vice consul, deputy consul, and consular agent, as shall desire to become eligible for promotion. The scope and method of such examination shall be determined by the board of examiners, but it shall include the same subjects hereinbefore prescribed for the examination of consuls. Any vice consul, deputy consul, or consular agent now in the service, upon passing such an examination, shall become eligible for promotion, as if appointed upon such examination.

12. In designations for appointment subject to examination and in appointments after examination due regard will be had to the rule that as between candidates of equal merit appointments should be so made as to secure proportional representation of all the States and Territories in the Consular Service; and neither in the designation for examination or certification or appointment will the political affiliations of the candidate be considered.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 27, 1906.

No officer or employee of the Government shall, directly or indirectly, instruct or be concerned in any manner in the instruction of any person or classes of persons with a view to their special preparation for the examinations of the boards of examiners for the Diplomatic and Consular Services.

The fact that any officer or employee is found so engaged shall be considered sufficient cause for his removal from the service.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 23, 1910.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING EXAMINATIONS PROMULGATED BY THE BOARD OF EXAMINERS DECEMBER 18, 1906.

1. The examinations will be the same for all grades and will be to determine a candidate's eligibility for appointment in the Consular Service, irrespective of the grade for which he may have been designated for examination and without regard to any particular office for which he may be selected.

2. The examinations will consist of an oral and a written one, the two counting equally. The object of the oral examination will be to determine the candidate's business ability, alertness, general contemporary information, and natural fitness for the service, including moral, mental, and physical qualifications, character, address, and general education, and good command of English. In this part of the examination the applications previously filed will be given due weight by the board of examiners, especially as evidence of the applicant's business experience and ability. The written examination will include those subjects mentioned in the Executive order, to wit, at least one modern language other than English—French, German, or Spanish (as amended by the board of examiners Feb. 18, 1911); the natural, industrial, and commercial resources and the commerce of the United States, especially with reference to possibilities of increasing and extending the foreign trade of the United States; political economy and the elements of international, commercial, and maritime law. It will likewise include American history, government, and institutions; political and commercial geography; arithmetic (as used in commercial statistics, tariff calculations, exchange, accounts, etc.); the modern history, since 1850, of Europe, Latin America, and the Far East, with particular attention to political, commercial, and economic tendencies. In the written examination composition, grammar, punctuation, spelling, and writing will be given attention.

3. To become eligible for appointment, except as student interpreter, in a country where the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, the applicant must pass the examination outlined above, but supplemented by questions to determine his knowledge of the fundamental principles of common law, the rules of evidence, and the trial of civil and criminal cases.

4. The examinations to be given candidates for appointment as student interpreters will follow the same course as in the case of other consular officers, provided, however, that no one will be examined for admission to the Consular Service as a student interpreter who is not between the ages of 19 and 26, inclusive, and unmarried; and provided further, that upon appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service so long as his services may be required within a period of five years. (As amended by the act approved May 21, 1908).

5. Upon the conclusion of the examinations the names of the candidates who shall have attained upon the whole examination an average mark of at least 80, as required by the Executive order, will be certified by the board to the Secretary of State as eligible for appointment in the Consular Service, and the successful candidates will be informed that this has been done.

6. The names of candidates will remain on the eligible list for two years, except in the case of such candidates as shall within that period be appointed, or as shall withdraw their names, and of candidates holding subordinate positions in the Consular Service, when eligibility shall not expire until appointment to consular rank or until separation from the service. Candidates whose names have thus been dropped from the eligible list will not again be eligible for appointment unless upon fresh application, designation anew for examination, and the successful passing of such second examination. (As amended by the board of examiners Oct. 25, 1911.)

That was the order issued nearly eight years ago, and the purpose of that order was, as its terms indicate, to raise the Consular Service into a business branch of the United States.

I believe the purpose has been largely realized and that during the past eight years our business men have relied with increasing confidence on our Consular Service, have appreciated more and more its value, and have come to look upon it as a business branch of our Government honestly and wisely separated from politics. During these eight years there has not been a single instance when the order issued by President Roosevelt and strengthened by President Taft has been departed from. I think the business interests of the country would deplore any breach of this custom and would resent any attempt now to do away with the invariable examinations and introduce favoritism into the appointments as of old.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I do not see any of my Democratic friends from Nebraska here to defend our distinguished Secretary of State, who comes from the State of Nebraska, but I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he seriously wants us to understand that the present head of the Department of State is now or ever has been, in or out of office, a partisan?

Mr. GILLETT. I will not undertake to decide offhand such a difficult problem as that.

Now, from that day in June, 1906, nearly eight years ago, until last week, there has never been a single instance where a man had been appointed a consul without passing these examinations; but last week, under date of February 10, the following Executive order was issued:

Otis A. Glazebrook, of New Jersey, may be appointed to a post in the Consular Service without regard to the Executive order of June 27, 1906.

WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. For a question.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does not the gentleman think that that is a better way to do it than to do it as it was done under a previous administration where a so-called examination was held in October and two certain fellows failed. There were vacancies to fill, but these were held open, another examination given in the following January, and these two fellows passed and were given the positions. Does not the gentleman think it better, if you want to favor a man, to do it aboveboard than in an underhanded way?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I do not. [Laughter.] I do not believe there has been any such instance as the gentleman cites. I do not know anything about it. When did the gentleman say this happened?

Mr. HAMLIN. The examination was held in the first instance in October a year ago, and the subsequent examination for these two particular fellows held in January a year ago.

Mr. GILLETT. I thought the gentleman said that a year elapsed. That is only three months.

Mr. HAMLIN. No; from October to January.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know anything about it or the details.

Mr. HAMLIN. And there are a good many details which the gentleman does not know.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course there are. Nobody can know all of the details; but I venture to say that when the facts of these cases are investigated the gentleman will find that there was good reason for the action taken.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think I can give the gentleman the reason.

Mr. GILLETT. Well, the gentleman can do it in his own time.

Mr. HAMLIN. It was political influence back of it.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course the gentleman can make attacks and insinuations, but I venture to say that when investigated he will find the deductions he wishes to draw from it can not fairly be drawn. At any rate, there has never been a waiver of the requirement of examination.

Now, for the first time in eight years President Wilson, a friend of the merit system, comes forward and makes an order exempting a New Jersey gentleman from an examination required by the regulations. That nomination was confirmed by the Senate two or three days ago in executive session. Of course I do not know what transpired in executive session, but I venture a yankee guess that no statement was made——

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman read the morning paper?

Mr. GILLETT. I do; but I did not see any mention in executive session of the fact that the requirements of an examination had been waived by a presidential order in behalf of Mr. Glazebrook. I venture to guess again that the administration made no revelation of the fact when this confirmation was made by the Senate.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Not until I get through. I venture to say that no such statement was made. This administration has not been chary in advertising its wares in the newspapers. Whatever was of benefit to the administration has generally found its way into print. And yet this Executive order has slumbered since the 10th of February and I have seen no mention of it in any newspaper. I happened to run across it, and I was surprised and grieved that President Wilson, who I hoped was a sincere and genuine friend of the merit system, had for the first time in eight years waived the requirements of an examination, and waived them in behalf of a gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. No; not now. I know nothing of Mr. Glazebrook's qualifications. He comes from New Jersey. That to my mind is no disparagement. The fact that he is a friend of the President is to my mind a certificate of character and ability. I know nothing about his personality, about his qualifications, or about his ability. I suspect, from the fact that an examination was waived, that there are some requirements of the rules which he could not meet. But as to that I do not know. I take no account of his fitness or unfitness; that to me is a matter of minor importance. No matter what his qualifications may be, I think it most unfortunate for the Consular Service and for its standing with the business world that any man should be appointed to it who has not passed the regular examinations. It matters not how fit he may be for the position, he should have been compelled to go through that routine which has wisely been prescribed for all, and excepting him is a return to the old system of favoritism and spoils. What I deplore is not the appointment of an unfit man—as to that I know nothing—but what I deplore is that a system which has been carefully nurtured for eight years and which has established itself in the confidence of the business world and has seemed to mark a new step in our administrative development should suddenly receive a staggering blow from one who we had reason to suppose would be its friend. Whether Jerusalem gets a good consul is of little importance compared with the overthrow of a system which we know would in the long run insure us everywhere good consuls. If the President waives the examination for a friend of his from New Jersey, how can he refuse to accept the opinion of the Vice President or the Speaker or a Senator or a Congressman that some friend of theirs is preeminently fit for a consular position and that the examination ought to be waived in their favor by an Executive order? And soon the bars are quite down again and we have returned to the old patronage practice. The only safe course is to make no exception and reply to every applicant that the rule is invariable, the entrance to this service is only by proven merit; there is no place for a favorite. And it is peculiarly unfortunate that the first breach in the merit system, the first instance of unrestrained favoritism in eight years, should be made apparently from the President's own circle of State friends.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman might wait until I get through.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the question would illuminate the situation so much.

Mr. GILLETT. Very well.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the gentleman know that this appointee to Jerusalem holds a degree of doctor of divinity, and, therefore, did not require any further examination?

Mr. GILLETT. I was not aware of that fact, but I appreciate the gentleman's humor, particularly from a Democratic standpoint. As I have tried to indicate, I do not charge him with unfitness. What I regret and deplore and criticize is the overthrow of this system, which is establishing itself in the confidence of our business world.

Mr. Chairman, I had believed that the President was a genuine friend of civil-service reform, and that his conduct in signing these bills which Congress has passed was forced upon him by the political exigencies of the case; that he did it reluctantly; but here is a case where the President alone, by his own personal official act, has waived the examination. No one can share that responsibility with him. It is but fair to say that I appreciate that cases of great exigency may arise where it would be right and wise to waive these requirements. There may be great need of some particular man in some particular place to meet a particular emergency. It may be that to-day Jerusalem is in just that condition, and that this Mr. Glazebrook, of New Jersey, was the one and only man who for great reasons of state could properly and adequately fill that position. That apparently would be the only justification of this appointment, from the President's own standpoint, for last summer the following statement was given out to the press:

The President has had under consideration the matter of appointments to the Consular Service and has authorized the Secretary of State to make the following statement:

"The civil service was by an Executive order issued June 27, 1906, extended to the Consular Service, and the President is entirely in sympathy with the purpose which the order was intended to subserve. He believes that the consular appointments should be made upon examination and that promotions should be made upon merit. If vacancies occur they will be filled from within the service where this can be done without injury to the service. If a vacancy occurs in one of the higher positions and he does not at the time find within the service a person entirely qualified to fill such a position, he will feel at liberty to exercise the right vested in him to suspend the Executive order in respect of that particular appointment, but such an appointment will be an exception to the rule and will be made only when he is convinced that the good of the service clearly requires such an exception."

If the good of the service clearly required this exception at Jerusalem, we shall undoubtedly be favored with the facts that establish it, and the State Department can undoubtedly show that its list of eligibles was carefully scanned and studied, and that there was no one fitted for this emergency post. Until so informed I think all friends of the merit system and all friends of a business Consular Service must deeply regret the action of the President.

Mr. MADDEN. May it not well be that the man who has been named by the President, being a doctor of divinity, might be considered better qualified to act as a judge over there than a good lawyer would be?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, one of the favorite claims of our Democratic friends has been that we ought to place the new tariff law on the statute books in order that we might go out and capture the markets of the world. That is a great catch phrase of our Democratic friends. We have had a little experience with that law, and I wish just briefly to submit a few figures to show how we have been capturing the markets of the world under this Democratic tariff law.

That great efficiency expert at the head of the Department of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, day before yesterday submitted some figures for publication on our foreign trade, but he gave the entire years 1912 and 1913. I want to show the effect since the present law has been in force. I take the last figures I have been able to obtain. I will give some of them. Our imports for December, 1912, were $154,000,000; for December, 1913, $184,000,000. We captured the markets there by $29,000,000 in favor of the foreigner. The exports for December, 1912, were $250,000,000, and for December, 1913, $233,000,000.

There the foreigners captured our market to the extent of $17,000,000, or, in other words, in December the loss of trade by us was $46,000,000, the first time that this has been true in the history of this Nation since the old Wilson tariff law went off the statute books. [Applause on the Republican side.] The customs receipts for December, 1912, were $24,000,000; for December, 1913, $21,000,000, a loss of a little over $3,000,000. Customs receipts for January, 1913, were $29,000,000; for January, 1914, $23,000,000, a loss of about $6,000,000. What a familiar story that is! For the first time since the old Wilson tariff law disappeared this Nation is running in debt! Every day that the new tariff law has been upon the statute books our loss of trade has been more than $2,000,000. Every day that law has been upon the statute books this Nation has run in debt over a half a million dollars. That is the way we are capturing the markets of the world.

Now, I will submit some further information. Every nation of Europe and North America and South America——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. When I finish the sentence. I do not want to be interrupted in the middle of a sentence. I will go back now and start in again. Every nation of South America, North America, and Europe under the new tariff law have increased their trade with us, and our trade with every one of them has decreased. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact up to this date last year, before the Underwood tariff law was in effect, and in previous years, there was a deficit at that time of year as a result of the inadequate customs receipts under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Up to this time this year and last year under the tariff bill was there not a deficit at this time?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If it is true, that deficit is six millions greater now, because I am comparing December a year ago, 1912, and last December, 1913, so whatever the decrease may have been it is that much greater now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman is aware the payments under the income-tax provision of the tariff law will not commence to be made until the 1st of June. By that time payments aggregating $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 for the 10 months of the last calendar year will commence to be paid.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If present conditions continue, there will not be very much to receive from income taxes and not very many people receiving an income. [Laughter.]

Now, will the gentleman permit me to proceed? You take Europe, and in December, 1912, we bought from Europe $81,000,000 worth of products. In December, 1913, we bought $91,000,000 worth. From North America in December, 1912, we bought $21,000,000; December, 1913, under the new tariff law, we bought $33,000,000. From South America in December, 1912, we bought $19,000,000; in December, 1913, we bought $25,000,000. That is the way we are capturing the markets of the world. Let me call attention in the same way to what we have sold. December, 1912, under the old tariff law we sold to Europe $170,000,000 worth of products. In December, 1913, we sold $156,000,000 worth. December, 1912, we sold to North America $47,000,000 worth; December, 1913, we sold $41,000,000. To South America in December, 1912 we sold $12,000,000 worth; in December, 1913, we sold $11,000,000. Behold how we are capturing the markets of the world under this tariff law.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will.

Mr. MOORE. This is a loss of $26,000,000 in one instance in——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The loss was about $20,000,000 to Europe.

Mr. MOORE. And, I understand, under the new efficiency system we will save $40,000 by turning out a number of customs employees, at least in one customhouse.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will give the figures for a few of the leading countries. In December, 1912, we bought from Argentina $2,500,000 worth; in December, 1913, we bought $4,569,000 worth—almost double in a single month. In December, 1912, we bought from Brazil $11,000,000. I am just giving the millions. In December, 1913, we bought $14,000,000 worth.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Just as soon as I get through reading these figures:

December, 1912, we bought from France, $14,000,000; December, 1913, $17,000,000; December, 1912, we bought from Germany, $14,000,000; December, 1913, $18,000,000.

Here is the way we are capturing the markets of some countries:

December, 1912, we sold to Canada, $29,000,000; December, 1913, $26,000,000; December, 1912, we sold to Germany, $40,000,000; December, 1913, $33,000,000.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is giving out figures, of course, for the purpose of information. He ought to add to the rest of his figures the fact that the largest manufacturer of builders' hardware, and so forth, that there is possibly in the United States is in the State of Connecticut, and on the 20th of February of this year he issued a 100 per cent stock dividend. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman ought to give all the truth and not suppress part of it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It may be that he issued the stock because he did not have the money with which to run his business. I suspect that is a fact. I suppose he got his business into a prosperous condition under Republican administration, and now has to issue stock to keep it from closing up. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, if the gentleman will listen, I will give him some more figures. These are from the Treasury Department. I do not know whether the Democrats will dispute them or not. However, they are their own figures and furnished by Democratic officials.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think, as my time is about up, I will wait before I yield.

Mr. DONOVAN. There is one observation that I wish to make. In the stock market to-day all stocks are more valuable than they were when the bill went into force.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not yield to the gentleman, and I did not hear what he said. [Laughter.]

Now, in December, 1912, this country imported of foodstuffs in crude condition and food animals, $17,000,000. In December, 1913, under the new Democratic tariff law, we imported $30,000,000.

I wish to state in this connection that these figures are for December throughout and not for the year.

For foodstuffs, wholly or partly manufactured, in December, 1912, $11,000,000; in December, 1913, $16,000,000. That is the way the farmers of this country are capturing the markets of the world under this new tariff law. On page 18 of the report of the Underwood bill these words are used: "In our judgment the future growth of our great industries lies beyond the seas." How significant that statement in view of the figures I have given. The foreigner is capturing our markets. We are losing theirs. Can any clearer demonstration be given for our closed mills and factories and for the great army of idle men in this country?

For crude materials used in manufacturing——

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not just now; not until I get through with these figures.

Of crude material used in manufacturing we imported in December, 1912, $56,000,000; in December, 1913, $62,000,000.

Now, I will go down the list and show you how we have been capturing the markets of the world with the stuff we have been selling.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not until I know whether I can get the time to do so or not.

This country in 1912 sold in foodstuffs during the month of December $18,810,000 worth; in December, 1913, $9,977,000 worth. That shows how we are capturing the markets of the world with our food supply. Foodstuffs, partly or wholly manufactured, we sold in December, 1912, $30,000,000; in December, 1913, $27,801,000.

Of crude materials for use in manufacturing, in December of 1912 we sold $104,000,000; December, 1913, $97,000,000; material for further use in manufacturing, December, 1912, $32,000,000; for December, 1913, $30,000,000. And so it runs all the way through. I will put the detailed figures in the RECORD. I want my Democratic friends to look them over. I want them to understand how we are going out and capturing the markets of the world under this new tariff law, and that if we keep on at the same rate as we have started so far, the loss of trade next year will be over $550,000,000 against us.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Just for a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Very well. What is the question?

Mr. POU. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he would favor the repeal of the Underwood law and the income-tax law and put back on the statute books the old Payne-Aldrich bill?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would favor the repeal of the Underwood tariff, and would put back on the statute books a law that would permit us to sell in the markets of the world and permit us to feed the world, instead of depending upon the other nations of the world to feed us, as we are now. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now I think, while I am on my feet, I will say a word further.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that the woolen schedule did not become effective until the 1st of the year 1914?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, I am taking the figures that were furnished me, but if that were so it would be worse still. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I want to be fair with the gentleman. I do not want to use something that has not happened yet. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GORDON. Does not the gentleman understand that the holding back of imports until the law became operative would affect the business for 1913?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly; and after the bill became effective there would be only that much more coming in.

Mr. GORDON. It would be just the other way.

Mr. MANN. He is complaining now because the imports are so large.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman consider it a national calamity that we are importing foodstuffs more than ever before?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think it is a national calamity that we are in a condition where we have to.

Mr. GORDON. That is exactly why I voted for this tariff law—to let in foodstuffs free, if possible.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Let me tell the gentleman what we have done on the foodstuff proposition. We have brought in and contracted for about $9,000,000 worth of corn from Argentina.

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. And the Corn Food Products Co. has already bought most of it and has made a profit of $3,000,000. And the Whisky Trust has bought a lot of it and made a profit of over $2,000,000 out of it. I want to ask the gentleman if he is buying his whisky any cheaper? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GORDON. I will say, in answer to the question, that I do not buy whisky. I do not use it. But I would like to have the gentleman tell this Congress whether or not he thinks the importation of food products on an increased scale is a bad thing or a good thing. That is the question I ask the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will append as a part of my remarks the following:

The usual monthly statement of the foreign trade of the United States as completed by the statistical division of the Bureau of Foreign and

Domestic Commerce for the months of December, 1912 and 1913, showing the imports and exports by great groups is as follows:

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] is recognized.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech by my colleague [Mr. CALDER] delivered in a debate with Mr. Bainbridge Colby on February 7, 1914, at the Logan Club, Brooklyn, on "The future of the Progressive Party."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address made by his colleague [Mr. CALDER]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I must admit that what I have to say on this bill has very little connection with the urgent deficiency measure itself; but it has a vague and remote connection with deficiencies in general, because what I have to suggest and what I have heretofore suggested in connection with this same matter by my votes and by my speeches will have a tendency, if carried into law, to prevent deficiencies.

I want to quote, Mr. Chairman, as a text for my few brief remarks, something that I read in the Post this morning. Col. Goethals, known to fame in connection with a great engineering enterprise, says:

> I know little about the legal questions involved in the toll problem, but I have always been opposed to toll exemptions for coastwise shipping. I want all the money we can get for the canal.

That, I am pleased to say, Mr. Chairman, has been my attitude from the beginning. I have always thought that the traffic through the canal, built at the expense of the taxpayers and dedicated to commerce in general, should pay for its own transportation through the canal. I do not believe, and I never have believed, that there should be exemption from the usual charges on any traffic passing through the canal.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I regret I have not time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Just a question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, go ahead. Shoot it out fast, please. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman if he was of the same opinion when the Democratic platform was written?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes. I have already stated as plainly as I could the opinion I entertained then and now that the traffic through the canal should pay tolls and that these tolls should be used for the maintenance of the canal, as far as reasonable and fair charges for the service will go. We are going to need all the money we can get from all the traffic through the canal, as Col. Goethals says, to help us for a long time to come, as the gentleman from Washington knows as well as I do. Moreover, I am not in favor of a subsidy to shipping on the Atlantic or on the Pacific coast. I am not in favor of putting a burden on the taxpayers in general for the benefit of a monopoly that has already been established by law.

I am pleased to say, Mr. Chairman, that we are having the support in this measure of reform of the President of the United States, who, if the newspapers are to be credited with exactness, will lend the great weight of his name and office to a change in the Panama law by which coastwise shipping was exempted from the payment of tolls.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Massachusetts remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is a "stand-pat" Republican, and it would require the logic of such a man in public life to understand the argument advanced by him.

The contention of the gentleman from Washington is that the Underwood tariff is bad for the country, because it reduces customs duties. He asserts that its effect is so extensive that there is a marked depression in business, so much so that, in his opinion, there is unlikely to be anyone who will be affected by the income-tax requirements of the tariff law. To sustain his contention he quotes figures to prove that importations have been larger under the present law than under the Payne-Aldrich law. Yet if the country were in the condition depicted, why would there be such increases in imports? If this country were in such a deplorable financial depression, if the people were so straitened financially, it would take some more ingenious effort than that of the gentleman from Washington to explain our ability to make these remarkably large increases in purchases of articles imported from abroad. When economies are enforced by the masses of the people, they are not indicated by increased imports.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss the gentleman's speech. I have in hand the daily Treasury statement for February 18. If the same ratio continues for the balance of the fiscal year, the customs paid under the existing tariff law for the current year will be about $27,000,000 less than were paid the last year of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act. As it is estimated that there will be paid this year some $80,000,000 under the income-tax provision of the tariff law, it is apparent that there will be no falling off of the revenues as a result of that legislation.

The committee has before it, Mr. Chairman, an urgent deficiency bill. The estimates submitted for the consideration of the committee aggregated $11,738,798.77. The amount recommended in this bill is $9,639,397.79, or $2,100,000 less than the estimate submitted by the department.

For the benefit of some of those who have intimated that the committee has not been sufficiently liberal in dealing with these estimates, I desire to remind the committee that the appropriations for the conduct of the public service during the current fiscal year were made by a Congress in which there was a Democratic House of Representatives. The estimates were considered with that careful scrutiny demanded in the distribution of the public funds, and ample funds were appropriated to conduct all of the various services of the Government in an economical and efficient manner. The Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore in 1912 contained this paragraph:

REPUBLICAN EXTRAVAGANCE.

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government, and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

If that declaration was good Democratic doctrine before election day, Mr. Chairman, it is good Democratic doctrine now that the Democratic Party has come into power. Such promises, however, can not be performed and this pledge can not be kept unless those in the executive branches of the Government cooperate with the legislative branch and conduct the Government efficiently and economically. It is the duty of this House, more than of any other branch of the Government, to scrutinize with care the estimates that are submitted for the conduct of the public service, and to insist that officials in the executive departments shall conduct their various services within the amounts determined by the Congress to be sufficient to meet their needs. Any other system in this country means extravagance run riot.

During the entire history of this Government there has been a constant conflict between the legislative branch of the Government and the executive departments as to which branch shall determine the amount of money which shall limit the activities and the services of the various functions of the Government. The control of the purse under the Constitution is primarily in this House, the body which represents most directly the people of the country, and the responsibility is primarily upon this House to see to it that moneys shall only be appropriated for legitimate functions of the Federal Government and shall be expended with that care and frugality which befits a democratic government.

I make this statement at this time, Mr. Chairman, because the time is at hand when the Members of this House, particularly those in the majority, must take some effective steps to curtail the rapidly increasing expenditures of the Government if the party, in view of the declaration in the platform I have just read, is not to become the laughingstock of the country.

The appropriations for conducting the Federal service during the present fiscal year are liberal. They are not parsimonious. For the fiscal year 1913 the total appropriations were $1,019,412,710.91. For the current fiscal year they were $1,098,678,788.40. Practically every one of the great supply bills of the Government for the conduct of the service during the current fiscal year exceeded the amount of money carried in similar bills for the preceding fiscal year.

I am aware of the constant and incessant demand and pressure from all over the country for the extension of the activities of the Federal Government into fields which more properly should be occupied by the State Governments or by private enterprise. I know that there is constant pressure to have the Federal Government do those things which are determined to be beneficial when the expense seems to be so great that it would require some effort on the part of the State or locality to bear the burden. But, Mr. Chairman, unless there be some cessation of the extension of the activities of the Federal Government along lines not within the contemplation of the founders, but into those fields foreign to the spirit of our institutions, then new and onerous means of taxation must be devised in order to supply the funds to enable the Government to carry on its various enterprises. One of the reasons that made me rejoice at the enactment of the income-tax law, one of the reasons that induced me years ago to favor such a law and a smaller exemption, was that it would tend to bring home forcibly to the people a knowledge of the expenditures made by the Federal Government, and thus aid in stopping the indiscriminate demands for grants from the Federal Treasury. I believed it would arouse the people to an interest in such matters and make them more critical about the means for which public funds were to be expended and the manner in which they were to be expended.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COX. If this extravagance—if it may be called extravagance—these enormous appropriations are not stopped in some way, does not the gentleman believe that in the course of a short period of time the Government will have to come to a system of direct taxation, such as it had in 1861 to carry on the war?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, while I do not desire to commit myself to the form of taxation to which it would be necessary to resort in order to meet these increased obligations, I am of the opinion that the Government would not speedily resort to direct taxation. The ingenuity of legislators has not yet been exhausted in devising means to extract money from the people in taxation by such indirect methods that they will not realize that they are paying taxes. Under the system we have enjoyed gentlemen, like the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], continuously argue that taxes are a blessing to the country and that the greatest misfortune from which it has suffered in recent years was in the action of a Democratic Congress in removing many of the burdens with which it had been afflicted by the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. This has been the line of argument always resorted to when the tax is indirect and not directly felt. Everyone desires and endeavors to persuade himself that however burdensome taxes may be they do not affect him, but are borne by others.

The only unpopular tax is the tax that the individual is convinced he pays himself. He is indifferent to taxation so long as he believes or is convinced that some one else must bear the burden.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For a question.

Mr. MANN. Is there not a much stronger argument against taxation than the one the gentleman has stated, the requirements of the Constitution? The tax of your State would be so small that you would be in favor of it. By the Constitution a direct tax is to be levied in accordance with the population of the State, and hence, without making any invidious comparison, the State of Arkansas, which comes early in the list, would pay a much larger proportion according to its wealth than would New York according to her wealth. Having more States that would do that than States like that which the gentleman and I represent, I predict that we will never have direct taxation, because they propose to make us pay the taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the details of the bill can be explained as we reach them in their order. I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, CONSTRUCTION AND SITES.

For sites, commencement, continuation, or completion of public buildings within the respective limits of cost authorized by law, including rent and removal expenses in cities pending extension and remodeling of buildings, as follows:

Birmingham, Ala., post office and courthouse: For additional land, $185,000.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will ask the chairman of the committee when that authorization was first made for the Birmingham (Ala.) post office?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the public-building bill passed in the last session of Congress.

Mr. COX. That was the date of the authorization?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COX. Here is a hard thing for me to understand. I am occupying a position similar to that occupied by a great many other Members. I have had an authorization for the last four years and have been unable to get that brought forward, and I want to know how this came to be brought forward so early?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is for the purchase of land. A contract was made by which the price was fixed, conditioned upon immediate acceptance. The Secretary of the Treasury has transmitted to the House at this session estimates for all moneys required to pay for sites authorized, where negotiations had reached that point where it was likely the money would be needed to be paid before the end of the present fiscal year, and the committee has in every instance given the money. As these sites are selected and arrangements completed, estimates have been transmitted, so that provision could be made for them.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If authorization was made four years ago for the purchase of a site, and no action taken upon it, what special reason can there be given for the urgent need for an appropriation for a site that was authorized only last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In this instance the site adjoins the present building, and the provision of the bill, as I recall it, not only authorized the acquisition of this additional land but the construction of an entirely new building on the site, and arrangements have been made with the persons who own the site to make the conveyance at once.

Dallas, Tex., post office: For new site, $250,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if he will yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. This is for Dallas, Tex. The same condition does not apply in Dallas, Tex., I presume?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The limit of cost for the site in Dallas, Tex., was fixed at $300,000, and arrangements were completed by which a site was selected. Arrangements were completed upon condition that the site should be purchased at once for $250,000.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood it to be the policy of the administration to select sites in the order in which they are authorized, and that the plan is being uniformly followed to purchase, first, the site that is authorized first and to erect the building first that is authorized first, and that under the plan adopted by the executive branch of the Government the ordinary time in which a site will be purchased and building erected after authorization would be four years. While I have heard a number of men on the floor complain that action had not been taken with respect to authorizations in their respective territories, the reply has always been made that under the plan it would be necessary to follow in consecutive order. These sites seem to have been taken out of the consecutive order and placed in advance of the plan which is purported to be the policy of the department; and while I have no objections to the appropriations I thought it might perhaps be illuminating to place in the RECORD the reasons why one place can be favored as against another.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the public-building act of 1913 authorized the acquisition of additional land or land adjacent to the present public building at Dallas or for an entirely new site. The site was selected, the price of which was placed at $325,000. As a result of negotiations, a contract was made for the acquisition of the site for $250,000. The information was that the examination of title was practically completed and the department was ready to take title. The Committee on Appropriations did not attempt to regulate or to control the administration of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MADDEN. The question that occurred to me was whether this was an urgent deficiency; whether, as a matter of fact, the expenditures in either of these cases was made necessary by the urgency of the case?

Mr. COX. And if so, what that urgency was?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Here is the situation: The transaction is ready to be completed and the money paid. In that instance where such a situation was presented to the committee the amount requested was carried in the bill, if within the authorization.

Mr. MADDEN. The question then would arise whether it would not have been possible to complete the transactions in every case authorized up to the point of making the appropriation, and whether, if that was done, it would not be an urgent deficiency and entitled to go into the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would have been according to the position taken by the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not know but that the position occupied by the two distinguished gentlemen who happen to be identified with Birmingham, Ala., and the State of Texas might have something to do with the urgency of these cases?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has nothing to do with the action of the committee, whatever it might have had to do with the activity of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MADDEN. That is perhaps where the urgency came in.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I wanted to inquire of the gentleman whether the fact that all of these places where the appropriations are provided are located in districts that are represented by distinguished gentlemen on the majority side has anything at all to do with the urgency of the case?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman I wish to say that I have enough to do in connection with the preparation of these bills without hunting out the particular Member who may or may not be interested in the particular items.

Mr. COX. I do not wish to be captious about this thing, but it has been going on for three or four years, and I have been very meek and mild in my requests for my district.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it for a new site?

Mr. COX. No; it is for an addition. Now, here is the query——

Mr. FITZGERALD. These are sites.

Mr. COX. I understand these, but here is the query I want to put to the gentleman. I understand in the wording of this bill these are sites. Now, I have been told I had to wait, and wait the Lord only knows how long, until my turn came. I have gone to the Treasury Department time and time again, and that would be the same old story. Now, here is the query: This proposes to buy sites, and now, when it comes to the question of making appropriations for the building and constructing the building on the site, will these places take precedence over our fellows who have been waiting here three or four years in order to get our appropriations made? If the gentleman can give me light on that, I will be glad to know it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the Treasury Department pursues the policy which has been followed up to this time, they will not. Whether there is to be any change of policy I am unable to state.

Mr. COX. Then, if I understand the gentleman, his understanding is if the Treasury Department pursues in the future the same policy it has in the past it will go back and take charge of those uncompleted jobs where sites have been authorized heretofore?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unless the policy be changed. No statement has been made that the policy is to be changed.

Mr. SISSON. I will answer further the gentleman from Indiana. He can not charge this committee or this subcommittee with being in any way influenced by the demands for items that are pushed forward——

Mr. COX. I thought possibly the gentleman had some information, being on the committee.

Mr. SISSON. For I will state that I am exactly in the same attitude that he is, and I am just as anxious my project should get through as he is.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest another thing. The very fact that the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Indiana have not items in here is an evidence these items are not put on as a result of pull, because there are no more powerful men in the House than those gentlemen.

Mr. COX. I beg the gentleman's pardon; look at Birmingham, Ala., and Dallas, Tex., and see who represents them. I must appeal from that statement.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from New York whether the items in reference to public buildings and grounds are simply for those which have been already authorized by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is one that is not authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. Which one is that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is in connection with the barge office, city of New York, which is in excess of the limit of cost.

Mr. MANN. All the others are?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. That item is to provide landing piers and slips at the barge office in the city of New York, and that is in excess of the limit of cost. All the other items are authorized.

The Clerk read as follows:

Georgetown, Tex., post office: For site, $5,000.

[Mr. DIES addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I suppose the chairman can give me the information I would like. Under the public-buildings bill which was passed last year a Public Buildings Commission was created. Does the gentleman know whether or not that Public Buildings Commission has had any meetings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The commission has had, as I understand, a number of meetings, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] yesterday in his remarks said that their report was almost ready for submission, and had been delayed somewhat because of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury, on account of his duties, had been out of the city, and therefore it had been impossible to confer with him. I know personally a very large amount of work has been done by the commission along certain lines. What its report is to be, I do not know.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason I asked the gentleman was because, when this bill was up the last time we tried to put an appropriation on in order to care for these 47 delayed projects, and we were informed that the Public Buildings Commission would remedy that matter in some way. That is why I wanted to get the information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That commission was required by law to report on the entire question of the construction of public buildings.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood from the Secretary of the Treasury that he was going to leave that question largely to this commission.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He is on the commission. He is chairman of it.

Mr. HARRISON. I know he is, but there are other members of that commission.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. There are two members from the House, two members from the Senate, the Postmaster General, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

New York, N. Y., barge office: For additional amount necessary to provide landing piers and slips for the Ellis Island Ferry, the boarding vessels, and the revenue cutters, $50,000, together with the unexpended balance, amounting to $39,935, of the appropriation for rental and moving expenses of the barge office, which sum is reappropriated and made available for these purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. On what item?

Mr. MADDEN. The New York barge office. Will the gentleman state to the committee what the sum authorized originally for this work was?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The sum was $500,000.

Mr. MADDEN. And the department let contracts for the sum of $50,000 in excess of that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the situation is this: Five hundred thousand dollars was authorized to build a barge office, which is the building situated at the Battery in the city of New York. The shipping commissioner's office is there, as well as other offices. They have it completed with the exception of the slips and landing piers, which are for the revenue cutters, and the ferry slips for the ferryboat from Ellis Island to New York City. There is an unexpended balance of $64,334.

Mr. MADDEN. The barge office is at the Battery, is it? There are no slips at the barge office, are there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The barge office is at the Battery.

Mr. MADDEN. But there are no slips there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are no slips there. They have an unexpended balance of $64,000, with which, they say, if this balance be not given, they will provide a slip by the use of dolphins, which will serve temporarily for three or four years, at the end of which time it will be necessary to ask Congress for $150,000 to do the work properly. Forty thousand dollars was given for rent of offices when the work was commenced, and a little less than $1,000 was used, and a balance of $39,000 was unexpended. They ask to have that reappropriated, and $50,000 additional, so that they may build the slips and the landing piers.

The Supervising Architect said that he had no excuse to make for the situation; that the limit of cost had been fixed and the work had not been done. They were there with the building completed and with the Government vessels utilizing space needed by the city of New York for other purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. The purpose of this appropriation, then, is to transfer the $39,000 originally appropriated for rent to the building of a pier at Ellis Island?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at Ellis Island.

Mr. MADDEN. It says here that it is for the Ellis Island boat; a slip for ferryboats and the customs boats there.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire briefly to refer to some statements made yesterday by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. In his speech he reflected in a certain way on a former Secretary of the Treasury because that gentleman had adopted a plan according to which $12,000,000 a year were allowed for building purposes.

I think that plan was an eminently wise one. It was not, as the gentleman from Florida intimated, an usurpation of the powers of Congress in any way. The Secretary of the Treasury had come to the conclusion, after consultation with the supervising architect, that all the work which that office could do in any one year was about $12,000,000 worth, according to their present force. So the Treasury Department simply decided that $12,000,000 every year should be allowed for building purposes. And that was just about in accordance with the action of Congress, because we generally passed a public-building bill carrying between $24,000,000 and $25,000,000 every two years. Consequently, according to the plan of the Treasury Department, adopted previously, $24,000,000 would be appropriated in two years—namely, in each Congress—and hence there is no valid reason that I can see for criticizing the action of the department under the last administration.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In just a minute. I wish Congress would always be so generous as to enable the people to get $12,000,000 worth of new buildings every year.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman's statement is correct, that we only appropriated $12,000,000 a year, or more, for the session, and had $12,000,000 worth of building done, how does he reconcile that with the fact that we have gotten so many years behind?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. For the reason, Mr. Chairman, that this plan of appropriating $12,000,000 each year was adopted only three years ago, and during that time they did not complete as many buildings as would call for the expenditure of $12,000,000. Besides, the appropriation for the Supervising Architect's Office was cut down, so that at one time from 80 to 90 draftsmen had to be discharged.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, may I have an extension of five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In his speech the same gentleman also reflects to a certain extent upon the present Supervising Architect. He says we want to get a live business man for that office. Having had the honor of serving as chairman of that committee for a number of years, I can say with some degree of knowledge that, in my judgment, we could not find in the whole United States a man who is more competent, more efficient, and more wide-awake to fill that office than the gentleman who occupies it now. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Furthermore, it is wrong and unjust to the personnel of that office to say that they are behind in their work. It is not so. Congress has dumped omnibus bill after omnibus bill upon the office, and with the force they had and the appropriation you made for the force it was simply impossible to keep up with the legislation and complete the buildings in time; so that, in fact, they are not behind. They have done as effective and as rapid work as they have always done. It is only because of the increased appropriations for buildings and the lack of force, superinduced by the reduction of force, that created the present situation. The only way we can get our buildings completed in a reasonable time is for Congress itself to make sufficient appropriations not merely for new buildings, but for an increase of the force in the Supervising Architect's Office.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. KREIDER. I am very much interested in this matter and the question of standardization has been brought up. What is the gentleman's opinion in regard to that and the practical working out of that proposition? It seems to me that when the Supervising Architect's Office draws a separate plan for each and every building all over the United States, it is useless. I think we ought to be able to adopt one plan and stick to that.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In answer to that, let me say that standardization, I think, is possible only to a certain extent, and to that extent it is being practiced now. But there are some things that limit its operation. For instance, you appropriate $50,000 for a building to be erected on the Pacific coast, and then you appropriate $50,000 for a building in Ohio. You should not suppose that because the appropriation is the same you use identically the same plans and erect the same kind of a building in both localities. Not at all. You must have different plans, for the reason that a building on the Pacific coast will probably cost one-third more to erect than a building in Ohio. For that reason, while standardization is desirable, there is a limit to it.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. KINDEL. I would like to inquire of the gentleman why it requires one-third more in California? Is it because of the higher freight rate?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No. It is because labor and materials are more expensive there. At any rate, that is the experience of the Supervising Architect's Office.

Mr. KREIDER. The plans could be the same, and the materials could be changed, and the cost might be changed. But the plans, so far as the office of the Supervising Architect is concerned, could be the same, though the materials used might be brick or stone or something else. That might be changed.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is true. But when gentlemen are advocating standardization here it means that when $50,000 is appropriated for a building in Maine and the same amount for a building in Ohio and the same amount for a building in California the same plans could be used for all those buildings. That can not be done. And, aside from other reasons, such as the difference of the grounds and sites, I doubt very much whether it would be really desirable to establish an absolute sameness and uniformity of style and character in Government building operations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

New York, N. Y., courthouse: For repairs of the old courthouse and post-office building, including alterations, rearrangements, fittings, miscellaneous repairs and painting, changes in the mechanical equipment, lighting fixtures, etc., and the cleaning of the exterior walls of the building, in order to provide increased accommodations for the United States court, and, so far as practicable, for all Government officials now occupying rented quarters, including moving expenses incident thereto, $200,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wanted to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if the measure now being promoted in the other Chamber of Congress, to secure a new post office in New York, will not result in abandoning this site?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I believe a bill is pending to acquire a site for a new courthouse in the city of New York. It contemplates the abandonment of this building and a return of the site under the deed to the city of New York to become again a part of the City Hall Park. But the Post Office Department is moving out of this building, and it will be in such condition that in order to utilize it it must be thoroughly renovated. The building cost $8,000,000 40 years ago. The district attorney's office and the courts are in a very crowded shape. This appropriation is to rearrange and to utilize the building.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am familiar with the condition that the gentleman speaks of. What I wanted to get at is to ascertain whether the new quarters could not perhaps be provided for the new courts under this plan.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Even if the bill passed for the acquisition of a new site and the erection of a new building so many years would be required to complete such a building that this building should continue to be utilized.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is very wise that we should make this appropriation of $200,000 for the purposes named in the paragraph.

In the first place, the building that it is proposed to renovate and remodel is a very expensive one. It cost about $8,000,000. It has the facilities that New York needs for the purposes for which it was erected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDEN. It will have when we expend this $200,000 upon it, and I am rather inclined to believe that the expenditure of the $200,000 will take away any excuse that may possibly be made for an appropriation for a new site and a new building. And if by the expenditure of $200,000 we can save an expenditure of $10,000,000 and preserve this ground for the purposes for which it is now being used, instead of turning it over to New York City for a park, we are in duty bound to adopt the plan proposed in this bill for the expenditure of $200,000. And I sincerely hope that when this is adopted and the improvements are made under the appropriation now proposed New York will not be so avaricious as to come, either to another body or to this, for an expenditure of $10,000,000 for a purpose that has already been provided for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not quite accurate. This does not provide fully for the facilities required in Manhattan, which is the southern district of New York, for court purposes. Here is a building that cost $8,000,000 about 40 years ago. Only $400,000 has been spent on it in 40 years. It is in very bad condition.

Mr. MADDEN. It ought to be repaired, and I am for the $200,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The district attorney's office is very badly crowded and embarrassed, and it is impossible to conduct the courts as they should be conducted. This appropriation should be made, regardless of any suggestion as to another building. If the temper of Congress continues as it has been, if we are to authorize public buildings at the rate they have been authorized, I have no doubt that the movement to have a Federal court building in the city of New York for the transaction of its public business will not only be stimulated but, in all probability, will be approved by Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that my only fear was that possibly this measure to abandon this present site and restore it to park purposes—because it would be a restoration for park purposes—might have such an impetus, in view of the power back of it, that perhaps the site might be abandoned even before this $200,000 could be expended. Of course I am in thorough sympathy with any expenditure of money to put the interior of that fine old building in proper shape; but I was fearsome that perhaps the movement to acquire a new site and erect a new building might obtain such velocity that you could not possibly get this appropriation expended before we would find that building torn down.

Mr. MADDEN. Let us hope that the gentleman's fears are unfounded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Chicago just referred to possible future voraciousness for a public building in New York. I wish to compliment the distinguished gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. FITZGERALD], who earnestly and ardently protects the Treasury against all sorts of assaults upon it. I notice that this bill carries appropriations amounting to about $790,000 or $800,000 for public buildings, of which about $350,000 goes to the city of New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There would have been more if it had not been for me.

Mr. MANN. I suppose every man is tempted, and at times yields to temptation; and while it is the duty of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to protect the Treasury against the raids of other Members of Congress, it is the duty of the other Members of Congress to protect the Treasury against the raids of the gentleman from New York, and not his duty. I do not know how careful we are in the performance of our duties, for while the rest of us get $450,000 out of these appropriations, the gentleman from New York gets about $350,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. None of these appropriations are to be expended either in my district or in my county. The gentleman will remember that the city of New York has 22 Members in Congress.

Mr. MANN. The city of New York is represented on the rolls by 22 Members of Congress and is represented in the main in the House by the gentleman from Brooklyn [Mr. FITZGERALD]. [Laughter and applause.] The rest of the city of New York is not represented upon the subcommittee which makes up this deficiency appropriation bill. The gentleman from New York can not say properly that this is not in his district. His district comprises the entire city of New York, if not the State of New York, locally, not to mention the rest of the country; and I simply wish to pay my respects to my friend from New York for not missing the opportunity of taking what he could get. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois I simply wish to say that in my position as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I have been very greatly embarrassed by the conclusive case made out by the departments in favor of these items, which compelled me, in spite of my desire to keep this bill down, to acquiesce in the action of the committee in inserting them in the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from New York will not ruin his reputation at home now.

Mr. SHERLEY and Mr. KINDEL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL] asked recognition a long time ago; therefore the Chair will first recognize him, and then will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am sorry that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] did not answer the questions I put to him last evening as to what benefit the parcel post will be, with rates 100 per cent higher than the express rates. Is it not a paper tariff? I asked the gentleman that question, and he refused to answer. Noticing in this morning's RECORD that the gentleman from Maryland made a speech afterwards on that subject, while I do not impugn his motives, I challenge the statements made therein.

In order to get at this matter properly——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Of course, the gentleman is out of order in discussing, under the five-minute rule, a subject which does not relate to this bill. We will probably finish this deficiency bill to-day, and the gentleman will have an opportunity to come in during general debate on some other bill, when he can have the necessary time.

Mr. KINDEL. I just want to make one particular suggestion, and that is that the express rates, of which the railroads get one-half, are lower than the parcel-post rates by one-half.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman want to consume?

Mr. KINDEL. I know the matter is coming up in the Senate, and I would rather consider this under leave to print, where I can say what I want to. I can not get before either the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads or the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I would like to reach the members of those committees in that way. But I want to say now that I challenge any of them to reconcile the parcel-post rate as now in effect——

Mr. MANN. I give notice now that after the gentleman finishes his speech I shall make a point of order against taking up time in general debate while we are considering this bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. KINDEL. Possibly 10 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may address the committee on this subject for 10 minutes; and then, in order to get the bill finished, I shall request the members of the committee to confine themselves to matters which are germane to the items in the bill.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall insist that whatever the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL] has to say must be said on the floor of the House. I shall object to any request for unanimous consent that the gentleman have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. I shall do that because of the manner in which the gentleman abused the privilege which was extended to him when we were discussing the resolution to investigate the Colorado strike, when, under cover of a request for unanimous consent, he made a personal and unfair and untruthful attack upon myself.

Mr. KINDEL. I challenge the statement——

Mr. KEATING. So that I must insist that whatever the gentleman says shall be said upon the floor, and not under leave to print.

Mr. KINDEL. I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this can not be said inside of an hour or five hours. It is a showing that must be made in a series of tables——

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado objects.

Mr. DYER. To what does the gentleman object?

Mr. KEATING. I object to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Colorado has not asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] did request that the gentleman from Colorado have 10 minutes, and I object.

Mr. MANN. We will get the gentleman time in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL] may proceed for 10 minutes. Objection is made to this request.

Mr. DYER. Is not the gentleman still entitled to some time under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. KINDEL. Well, amen; let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. STRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 494. An act to establish a branch hydrographic office at Los Angeles, Cal.;

S. 656. An act granting to the trustees of the diocese of Montana of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for the benefit of Christ Church on the Hill at Poplar, Mont., lots 5, 6, and 7 in block 30, town site of Poplar, State of Montana; and

S. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution for the appointment of a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Taylor, Tex., post office: For site, $5,000.

[Mr. DIES addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, has the paragraph beginning on line 5, page 7, been read?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to assure the gentleman from Illinois and others who may have any doubts on that subject—I think he really has none—that the total appropriation of $339,000 for the city of New York contained in the items just read are not so much a monument to the activity and industry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as they are to the needs of that great city, though they do reflect the industry of the gentleman in looking after, in a proper way, the part of the country which he so ably represents. New York is a great city; New York transacts a very great amount of public business. These items are not only needed but they are urgent, and therefore properly on this bill. I hope when we reach other items a little later that ought to be on the bill but which are not, and in regard to which some of us are quite as familiar with the needs of the public service as the gentleman from New York is in regard to those items, the gentleman from New York will regard the amendment we may offer with the same generous eye with which we have regarded these items for the city of New York.

There is a great public service out West that has to do with the making of homes, with the building of an empire, and that service is in need of a little money in order to keep the land offices running. Unfortunately, the gentleman from New York, who is better informed in regard to the needs of the public service generally than any other man in the House or in the Capitol, can not be equally familiar with all parts of the public service. Therefore he was not particularly impressed with the needs of this particular service. I ask of him that when the amendment of $30,000 is asked a little later to keep the land offices running he may look on the appropriation with the same eye of approval with which we have now looked on the appropriations for the great city that he so ably represents. We are quite as familiar with this service as he is with the service involved in the New York items.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman is so much interested in my activities in connection with these items, I believe I shall make a statement regarding the course I have followed in connection with all matters in the locality I represent. I believe I was alone in the last session of Congress in antagonizing the item of $350,000 to enlarge the post office in my own district. I do not recall that any other gentleman in the House acted in a similar way. I asked to have it stricken out of the bill, and it was stricken out by the House committee, and then, against my protests, the House conferees agreed to the item when restored by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knew his action was perfectly safe, did he not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I still believe it was indefensible and should not have been made. I had no sympathy with the action of my colleagues in doing it. In regard to this item of $50,000 to furnish the new post office in the city of New York, let me say that last session the department asked for $200,000 and I was instrumental in keeping the item out of the bill. They have now found a way to accomplish all that they desire, and $50,000 will suffice for this particular purchase.

When the new post office in New York was authorized, proposals were invited for its construction. By—I will not say manipulation; that word might be misunderstood—but by a readjustment or arrangement of the bids $300,000 was eliminated by the substitution of certain alternates, and a contract was let to one of the largest and most powerful construction companies in the country, with offices located in the city of New York.

Following the usual practice, as soon as the contract was awarded, that construction company and the architect attempted to have the limit of cost increased, in order that the $300,000 of eliminated items might be restored, so that the builders could do the work and the architect get the additional commission. Continuously the Committee on Appropriations is compelled to make provision for restoring items eliminated in that way under just such circumstances.

I served notice on the construction company and the architect that it just so happened that unless I died or resigned I would be the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations during the period within which that building must be completed, and that they would never get a dollar of the $300,000 in order to restore items eliminated when the contract was awarded.

I could go on and cite other actions on my own part, where the mere fact that matters were located in the community which I represent in part not only did not influence me to try to obtain what was requested, but which I believe made me scrutinize them more carefully, and insist, when my judgment was that way, that they be eliminated from the bill, and I commend my action. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I commend my action to those gentlemen who are so vitally interested in matters affecting the localities from which they come. I hope I shall have their hearty cooperation in endeavoring to discharge the very difficult duties that come to me as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman to strike out his own item from the bill. When anybody accuses me here or elsewhere of getting something for my district, whether I am guilty or not, I never deny the accusation. I do not know whether the gentleman intends to deny the accusation against himself or not. If he does deny it, he makes a mistake. He should take the credit for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I neither admit nor deny.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from New York is only undertaking to prove the truth of the old saying, that considering his opportunities he marvels at his moderation. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Well said. The gentleman from New York comments upon the fact that, contrary to his position in the House, Congress inserted in the last public building bill an item for a building in his district, and he seems to be still opposed to that item. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York. The public building bill of the last Congress, while it was signed by the President, was never passed by both Houses of Congress and is subject to attack. It is worth no more than any other paper which the Speaker and the Vice President should sign stating that it had been passed by Congress, and which was signed by the President, even if the particular matter had never been introduced in Congress at all. The gentleman has a very effective way of disposing of that public building, either by attacking the public building bill or by refusing to make appropriations for it. But when the time comes, as it may in the course of years, I hope that he will consent to waive his present animosity toward that building, for I take it that he will still be a member on the Committee on Appropriations, though not its chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I suppose I will be outvoted under those circumstances. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Just as the gentleman was outvoted before, when he knew it was perfectly safe to make the proposition. I commend him not only for what he gets for his district, but for the clever manner in which he gets it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, sometimes I do not know whether these gentlemen are in earnest or whether they are in jest in some of the remarks in which they indulge in reference to my friend and colleague on this committee. I have been a member of the subcommittee on deficiencies since he has been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I want to state to the members of the committee now that I doubt extremely whether there is a Member of Congress in either branch who opposes as many demands from his own district as does the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SISSON. I state without hesitation that he evinces a great deal more courage when it comes to resisting appropriations for his own district than I would be able to. I do not believe that any criticism of any kind can be lodged against the gentleman from New York, the chairman of this committee, in reference to the manner in which he deals with items affecting the city of New York, and if anyone will serve on the subcommittee with him, as I have done, he will find that he acts with absolutely a judicial mind in reference to the appropriations for his own city, and I sometimes marvel at his courage in doing so. The demands made upon him and the demands of that great city are larger than those of any other portion of the Union, and necessarily so, on account of the great amount of Federal activity in that great city. The city is not at all backward in making demands on Congress, and while my friend was perhaps jocular in commending his conduct to the Members of the House, I seriously commend his conduct in reference to appropriations for his own district to other Congressmen as an example, because I have never seen any other Member of Congress who was willing to oppose an appropriation which goes into his district with the same amount of courage that the gentleman from New York opposes items affecting his district. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For mechanical equipment, machinery, furniture, and fixtures for the new building authorized by act of Congress approved May 27, 1908, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in connection with the sum heretofore appropriated for these purposes and in such manner as to complete in every detail the equipment and furnishing of said building, $190,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a few questions. In the matter of the sums of money that were submitted as necessary for the compensation of employees I see the figures are $96,072 and the amount reported to the House is $64,048, leaving a reduction of $32,024. The amount submitted for plate printing was $280,725, and the amount reported to the House $187,150, a reduction of $93,575. For materials and miscellaneous expenses the amount submitted was $50,928, and the amount reported to the House $33,952, a reduction of $16,976. Will the chairman please explain why the difference in the figures and the reasons for the reductions?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the estimates for distinctive paper, compensation of employees other than plate printers, compensation of plate printers and their assistants, engravers' and printers' material, were based on the idea that 15,000,000 additional sheets of distinctive paper could be utilized in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing during the present fiscal year. The committee, after investigation and its knowledge of the situation in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, believes that if provision were made for 10,000,000 additional sheets of distinctive paper, with proper care and economy, without yielding to excessive demands for new notes, there should be sufficient to conduct the service. It had very grave doubts, even if that were not more than should be given.

We are now in the second year in which power presses are being used to print the backs of United States notes, so that two-fifths of those are being printed on power presses. The committee was not satisfied that the very greatly increased demand for notes was justified by existing conditions or that the department could not have been able to take care of the demands that have been made upon it. A few years ago, in an investigation of these matters, it was ascertained that there was hardly a fair relation between the amount of notes issued and the legitimate demand by the commerce of the country, and an attempt was made to bring about economies that would prevent the increased cost of this work, which will increase, if care be not exercised, to such an extent that there could be no justification whatever for it. All I can say is, from the information the committee were able to obtain at this session, and its knowledge of the conditions cover a period of some years, that they reached the conclusion that the sums recommended would be sufficient, particularly as part of the estimate was for the purpose of providing a reserve in excess of what it had been customary to retain on hand in past years, although not in excess of what the department would consider desirable. The committee gave two-thirds of the requested amounts, and did that with a good deal of misgiving as to whether the action was justified.

Mr. LONERGAN. Did the gentleman's committee hear from Secretary McAdoo on this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; the Secretary sent me a copy of the letter which he sent to Mr. LOGUE.

Mr. LONERGAN. This is a letter to Mr. LOGUE I have here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And a statement from the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; but as I said at the outset, Mr. Chairman, in my remarks on this bill, Congress must determine the money to be utilized each year in the conduct of the various public services. If the Congress is to turn over the determination of that question to those in charge of every service, then we will only automatically ratify what they request. It will be necessary to appropriate more than $100,000,000 for the conduct of the public service each year than is now appropriated if that course be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the last word. Everybody in charge of the different services in the Government look only at that service. They can not see, they can not, in my opinion, properly judge, the amount that is necessary. We are charged with the duty of keeping some relation between the expenditures of the Government and its income. Very frequently we are compelled to refuse appropriations to conduct some services to the extent desired by the head of the service because there must be something eliminated, and the thing eliminated must be that which is relatively least important. If we were to accept out of hand the recommendations of all of those in charge of the executive departments for money, we could save considerable work, although we would not conserve the Treasury of the United States. Here is a bill carrying almost $10,000,000. There is the testimony taken by the committee, nearly 500 pages of printed matter, in the effort to obtain the information that would enable us to do justice and give the money necessary to conduct the public service in the manner that the Democratic Party promised it would be conducted—economically and efficiently. It can not be conducted either economically or efficiently if the recommendations of those in charge of the public services, regardless of their politics, be accepted and not reviewed, carefully analyzed and judged by some one with some responsibility to a constituency. I do not agree with those in charge of many of those services that more money is necessary, neither did the committee, and we have submitted our recommendations to the House for its approval.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may incorporate in the RECORD a letter from Mr. McAdoo to Representative J. WASHINGTON LOGUE, a letter addressed to Hon. C. S. Hamlin, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, signed by J. E. Ralph, director, and a communication to Assistant Secretary Hamlin from George Fort, Deputy Assistant Treasurer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from Secretary McAdoo and the other letters mentioned. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I insert the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to Mr. LOGUE, a Member of this House, together with memoranda attached thereto:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 21, 1914.

Hon. J. WASHINGTON LOGUE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of February 20, addressed to Deputy Assistant Treasurer Fort, with reference to the appropriation carried in the urgent deficiency bill for plate printing, etc., at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, has been referred to this office.

The director of the bureau had submitted a memorandum on this subject before the receipt of your letter, and I am transmitting herewith a copy of his memorandum, which I think will give you the information you desire.

I also transmit herewith a memorandum from the Treasurer of the United States, in which he advises that he will require the present schedule of the bureau to be continued to the end of the year.

In view of the facts submitted, it is urgently necessary that the appropriations be made in the amounts estimated.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO,
Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING,
February 20, 1914.

Hon. C. S. HAMLIN,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you of the fact that the urgent deficiency bill as reported to the House of Representatives yesterday contained only two-thirds of the amounts requested for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing under the three heads of "Compensation of Employees," "Plate Printing," and "Materials and Miscellaneous Expenses."

The amounts submitted, the amounts reported, and the reductions are as follows:

	Submitted.	Reported to House.	Reductions.
Compensation of employees	$95,072	$64,048	$32,024
Plate printing	280,725	187,150	93,575
Materials and miscellaneous expenses	50,928	33,952	16,976

The amount submitted was for the purpose of printing and delivering to the Treasurer of the United States 15,000,000 sheets (60,000,000 notes) of United States notes and gold and silver certificates during the current fiscal year in excess of the 60,000,000 sheets (240,000,000 notes) provided for in the regular appropriation, and the amounts reported by the Appropriation Committee of the House of Representatives will permit of 10,000,000 sheets (40,000,000 notes) additional being printed and delivered.

At the request of the Treasurer of the United States and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury the daily schedules of deliveries to the Treasurer were last fall established on the basis of obtaining a deficiency appropriation for 15,000,000 sheets (60,000,000 notes). Consequently, unless the prospects are that the deficiency be increased by the Senate Appropriations Committee and concurred in by the House of Representatives, the daily deliveries of notes to the Treasurer should be at once reduced from 270,000 sheets (1,080,000 notes) to 220,000 sheets (880,000 notes).

This would result in great embarrassment to the office of the Treasurer of the United States, in view of the condition of his reserve, which has been considerably reduced during the past year, and it is, according to his statements, comparatively necessary to retain the present schedule during the remainder of the fiscal year. It was expected, if this deficiency appropriation had been allowed, to deliver 75,000,000 sheets (300,000,000 notes) to the Treasurer during the present fiscal year; and his estimates for next year contemplated to deliver 5,000,000 sheets (20,000,000 notes) in excess of this quantity. Therefore if this larger quantity for next year should not be allowed and the full quantity estimated for the deficiency appropriation not permitted, the Treasurer's reserve would be still further depleted and additional embarrassment follow.

Incidentally to the shortage of notes in the Treasurer's office the failure of Congress to allow the present deficiency asked for would result in the immediate discharge of 400 employees, or their furlough without pay until July 1, 1914, when the appropriation for the fiscal year 1915 becomes available, which may permit of some or all of them to be restored to their positions.

Or the deliveries to the Treasurer could be continued as at present until about June 5 and during the remainder of that month no deliveries made, and during the latter period 2,050 employees now engaged in the manufacture of United States notes and gold and silver certificates would be furloughed without pay.

I have the honor to recommend that if the Treasurer requires the present schedule to be continued to the end of the year, the Secretary take up the matter with the Senate Appropriations Committee, with a view to having the appropriation increased to the amount submitted.

Respectfully,

J. E. RALPH, Director.

MEMORANDUM FOR ASSISTANT SECRETARY HAMLIN.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 21, 1914.

If the Treasurer is to be permitted to build up his reserve of new currency that it may be properly seasoned before going into circulation, and also be prepared for the hurried demands incident to a revival of business, the present daily delivery of 270 packages by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing should undoubtedly be continued.

Respectfully,

GEO. FORT,
Deputy Assistant Treasurer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNAL REVENUE.

For paper for internal-revenue stamps, including freight, $15,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the inquiry made by the gentleman from Connecticut a moment ago and the answer made by the chairman of the committee remind me of the great amount of labor and study that the subcommittee in charge of this bill gave to its preparation and the splendid manner in which they have presented for the information of the House the hearings which were had in connection with the bill and the papers filed in connection therewith. A few days ago, in the consideration of another appropriation bill, attention was called to the fact that, while there had been extensive hearings, those hearings had not been indexed, and that it was practically impossible for any Member of the House to find the pages of the hearings that contained information on a specific item. At that time there was a somewhat sweeping statement made that that is the usual practice of appropriation committees. I desire to call attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations indexes its hearings carefully and fully, and that therefore the Members of the House can readily inform themselves with regard to the information that the committee had before it and upon which it determined upon the items of the bill.

I think it is a practice that all appropriation committees should follow, not only of having full and complete hearings, but having the hearings printed as speedily as possible after they are held and carefully and fully indexed, in order that the Members may inform themselves in regard to the items in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Public Utilities Commission: For necessary personal and other services and expenses in making valuations of public utilities as provided by section 8 of the District of Columbia appropriation act approved March 4, 1913, to continue available until expended, $100,000.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 22, strike out the words "until expended" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "during the fiscal year 1915."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of this committee how the estimate of $100,000 for this purpose was arrived at? I might explain, in asking this question, that the properties of the railroads of the State of New Jersey were revalued at an expense of only about $107,000. That included the survey of some 5,500 miles of railroad, besides the inventorying of the terminals and other property of those railroads. It seems to me $100,000 is an excessive amount for the appraisal of the utilities in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this matter was first presented to the Committee on Appropriations when the District of Columbia appropriation bill was under consideration. After obtaining all the information possible, the committee deferred action until this bill was considered, and directed the public utilities commissioners, who are the Commissioners of the District, to make further investigation. The valuation in the District of Columbia includes not only street railways, but the gas company and the electric light company and telephone company. Commissioner Harding said they had reached this conclusion in several different ways. They had the representative of a firm of engineers in New York, Ford, Bemis & Davis, to send a man here, who spent 10 days in the city, and, without submitting a bid to do the work for this money, they estimated it would cost $125,000. They inquired of the public-service commission of the first district in New York as to the manner in which they would proceed, and, applying their rule, they reached another conclusion, and by combining the two estimates decided it would cost $110,000. In addition, they corresponded with Prof. Bemis, who is now engaged by the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with the physical valuation of railroads. I shall read Prof. Bemis's letter, so that it may be in the RECORD for the information of the committee. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 28, 1914.

Hon. CHESTER HARDING,
Chairman Public Utilities Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to yours of January 24, relative to the reasonable cost and necessary time required for such an investigation of the physical valuation and other important matters connected with your public utilities as are covered in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the law creating your commission, I beg leave to say that an expenditure of $125,000 and two years' time would be reasonable for carrying out the requirements of the above paragraphs for all the public utilities of Washington.

You are required to determine not only the estimated cost of reconstruction of all the physical properties of these utilities but, as closely as possible, the actual expenditures for their construction. You are required to study the history of their stock and bond issues and also of the floating indebtedness. You must ascertain the receipts and operating expenses in much detail. Thus it is necessary not only to secure a physical appraisal but also an exhaustive examination of the street railway and telephone and, ultimately, of the electric-light and gas records.

I have charge of a similar examination, for gas and electric light only, for the city of St. Paul, upon which $35,000 has already been spent, and which will require about $5,000 to complete it. Yet St. Paul had a population in 1910 of about 215,000, or only two-thirds of the district covered by your investigation, and no street railway or telephone investigation was included in the Minnesota work. This St. Paul work has been conducted with unusual economy.

A comparison can not be made with the cost of ordinary appraisals where no attention is paid to the accounting and financial history. This phase of the work is responsible for over one-third of the cost in the St. Paul work. Yet even a simple appraisal is expensive.

For example, in Chicago it cost the Chicago Telephone Co. $200,000 merely for the appraisal in 1912 of their telephone property within and immediately outside of the city, embracing 350,000 telephones, or about 60 cents per telephone. I was closely in touch with this work, as I represented the city of Chicago, and had charge of the accounting investigation for the city in the case. I have been also personally associated with many other appraisals during the past few years, and feel that the price of $125,000 above mentioned is none too large for a thorough investigation of the physical properties and accounts.

Further, it would be very difficult to complete such a piece of work short of about two years. With tens of millions of dollars' worth of property at stake, the work must be done with extreme care to stand the test to which it is likely to be exposed in subsequent court investigation.

Unless Washington shall have a different experience from other cities, however, the reduction in charges that would probably result from a thorough investigation, made in the public interest and under the direct supervision of as strong a board as your own, would be likely to save to the patrons of your utilities in a single year much more than the cost of the entire investigation, the effects of which reduction will be felt for many years to come.

Very respectfully, yours,

EDWARD W. BEMIS.

The committee, on this information, and other information submitted by Col. Harding, recommended that $100,000 be appropriated at this time. In the District appropriation act for the current fiscal year $40,000 was appropriated. Part of that sum, however, is for the expense of maintaining the ordinary force of the Public Utilities Commission, which has considerable current work in connection with complaints of various kinds against these public-service corporations. So far as the committee was able to ascertain, it was believed that this money would be required.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is there anything in the hearings to give the committee information as to the number of miles of electric railroads in the District of Columbia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That information is in the hearings before the committee, taken when the District of Columbia bill was up for consideration. I do not have them at hand, and I do not recall the information.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I thought the gentleman might know approximately.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not the figures in mind.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The expenditure of this sum, if appropriated, will make a total expenditure, for the purpose indicated, of $140,000. It seems to me the work can be done for much less than this and the sums already appropriated. The longer the time taken in the conduct of the work the more expensive it will be. There is a short period in which the work might be done and a long period, either of which might be most expensive, and there is an intermediate period within which the work could be completed, which would make it the most economical.

I have given some attention to the work that devolves upon the Public Utilities Commission of the District under this act, and I was rather inclined to think that this work might be done in six months. But I think if it were done within that period it might be a very expensive method, and there would have to be expensive methods employed. The commission thought it would take about three years. That would be still more expensive, but a happy medium between the two, it seems to me, would be about 15 months, perhaps a year, and that would be the most economical, because the longer the period in which the work goes on the more money you will have to expend for overhead charges, and the shorter the period used in the conduct of the work the more force would have to be employed and might be more economically employed if a longer period than the shortest were used. I think that this work could well be done for at least $65,000, in addition to what the commission has already had at its disposal. If a few experts to direct the work were employed under contract, the commission could employ its own rank and file force at the ordinary compensation paid to men who are expert clerks. While Prof. Bemis said it would cost $200,000 to investigate and obtain the information sought concerning the Chicago Telephone Co., it must be remembered that that company has over 350,000 telephones, and the territory embraced covers an area of 200 square miles.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Do you not think that an investigation of the cost of telephones in Chicago will go a long way toward determining the value of the telephone system in the city of Washington?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, surely. Then it must be remembered that the magnitude of the Chicago telephone service is enormous as compared with this. Chicago has more than twice as many telephones as London has, and three times as many telephones as Paris, and more telephones than London, Paris, and Berlin combined. And the city of Washington is a very small user of telephones as compared with a great city like Chicago, and the matter of ascertaining the value of the telephone, electric light, and the electric railroad systems here is not a complicated task.

It is a task that ought to be accomplished within a year. It ought not to cost anything like $140,000, but it ought to be gone at systematically and scientifically and expeditiously. If the work is going to be strung out forever and a day, nobody on earth will know what it is going to cost, and the information gained will not be of any use in determining the value of these public utility corporations or the prices that ought to be paid for the facilities granted to the public.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman is an expert, or at least very familiar with large operations of this kind, and I wanted to ask him a question for my own information. In determining the value of construction, for instance, of a trolley line having a subway conduit, would not an examiner, arriving accurately at the cost of 1 mile, come pretty near knowing what the cost of every other mile of equal physical construction was?

Mr. MADDEN. If the construction were made under like conditions, yes; certainly; there would not be any difference. They would not have to examine every mile. Only one would be sufficient, because all the construction work here in this city is made under like conditions.

Now, for example, the capitalization of these companies is enormous compared with the actual cost of construction. The ordinary overhead trolley line can be built anywhere, depending on conditions, for from $30,000 to $60,000 a mile. But these trolley lines here are capitalized at over $600,000 a mile. The ordinary underground trolley line, built under such conditions as we have in the city of Washington, could probably be built at $150,000 a mile, including asphalt pavement and everything pertaining to them. But I understand they are capitalized at much more than $600,000 a mile. It would be an easy matter for this Public Utilities Commission to exercise the discretion necessary to arrive at a correct conclusion without going into all the technical details and depending upon somebody's imagination for the facts and at the same time reach a conclusion sometime before the millenium arrives. For example, the present conditions in the city of Washington are such as would justify the railroad companies in giving universal transfers, and the Public Utilities Commission, with its present information and power, could require them to do that, but they do not.

I do not think we ought to wait forever to get some results from the authority granted to the Public Utilities Commission. They ought to begin to exercise some of the authority they have in giving the public some of the advantages which the law contemplates, and I believe that this appropriation really ought to be cut down to $65,000 and a direction given to the Public Utilities Commission to get to work in earnest instead of working just on paper and behind closed doors.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I agree heartily with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has just said. I am inclined to believe that the Commissioners of the District have made the estimate of the cost of the valuation of the various properties to be valued by them rather high. But the responsibility resting upon this subcommittee and upon the Committee on Appropriations is a very peculiar one, and for this reason: We all desire that the valuation should be made just as quickly as possible. Now, if we should decline to give the commissioners the amount of money that they say is necessary, then the responsibility for a bad valuation, or for an incomplete valuation, or for an unsatisfactory valuation, would be charged at the door of the committee and at the door of Congress, beginning with the Committee on Appropriations, which declined to give them the money that they say is necessary.

Mr. MADDEN. Probably that is true.

Mr. MOORE rose.

Mr. SISSON. And the committee also took this view of the situation: We believe that the physical value of these properties in the District of Columbia will have great weight in the action of other cities throughout the United States. Whether they ought or not, people in other cities will lay weight and put great stress upon the system in vogue in the city of Washington.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. But in order that Congress might be relieved from any criticism, the eyes of the people of the country being centered upon the Capital City here, the committee gave them not what they asked for, but within $10,000 of what they asked for.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. The expenditure of this money will be under the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE. They will employ experts, will they?

Mr. SISSON. The manner in which the money is to be expended by the commissioners has not yet been given out. They still have the matter under consideration. They have employed only a small force, and they have endeavored to assemble and get together a lot of information which will enable them to select and choose a correct line of operations in the valuation of these properties.

Mr. MOORE. Who constitute the utilities commissioners?

Mr. SISSON. The three District Commissioners.

Mr. MOORE. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia themselves?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are the utility commissioners.

Mr. MOORE. No other commissioners are to be employed?

Mr. SISSON. No.

Mr. MOORE. And then there is no extra compensation or extra salaries to be paid, or anything of that kind?

Mr. SISSON. The only extra compensation authorized to be paid was a thousand dollars, given in the law as it passed, to the attorney for the District. He gets a thousand dollars additional for the advice he gives to the commissioners in the performance of this work. But that is already done. He gets an extra thousand dollars.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I agree with the gentleman that the physical valuation should be accomplished, and that it would be an incentive to other cities throughout the country to follow the example of the National Capital. But does not the gentleman think that it is important that correctness and accuracy should characterize the work that is to be done?

Mr. SISSON. I am not an expert, and I do not believe that any Member of Congress is an expert. In casting about to find somebody who knew something about this matter we found that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who just took his seat, had been connected with the municipal government in Chicago, and we had Mr. MADDEN come before our committee in the presence of Col. Harding, and he and Col. Harding then went down to the commissioners' office and went carefully over the matter, and Mr. MADDEN revised his first figures, and said that the task in the District of Columbia was broader and larger than he had at first thought it was.

If you will look at the act, you will see that it places upon them the burden not only of making the physical valuation of the property, but also that they are compelled to value the franchise. This becomes the basis for the fixing of rates and the value of all the public utilities in the city of Washington; and the District Commissioners insist, and Col. Harding insists, that the amount of money that is asked for is needed. The committee did reduce it a little, but they finally settled upon $110,000 in addition to the $40,000 already appropriated, a part of which is not used. Your committee did not feel that they were warranted, nor did they feel that they would be doing themselves justice, if they arbitrarily took away from these men who are making the investigation the amount of money that they say is absolutely necessary to do this work properly.

Mr. TUTTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. TUTTLE. Did the gentleman get some of this information from experts who have actually been engaged in this valuation work, or was this information and this expert advice given by engineers?

Mr. SISSON. The information that we got came chiefly from Col. Harding and the letters and estimates which he had from other sources. They had some bids from companies that do work of this kind, and he took those as a basis. They have been considering the matter for quite a while.

Now, if this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union see fit to assume the responsibility of cutting down this amount and reducing this appropriation, then the burden and responsibility will rest on the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and not on the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know where to cut. I am frank to tell you that I do not believe a single member of the Committee on Appropriations knows where to cut, and I do not believe that even the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who says $65,000 will do the work, can sit down and make an outline of how much it will take to value each of these separate utility corporations.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to ask the gentleman if his committee went into the methods by which this physical valuation was to be had.

Mr. SISSON. We made just a general inquiry. The extent to which we went into it is easily ascertainable by reading the hearings. We went into it as fully as we could, taking into consideration the time that we had.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you understand that they are to have hearings at which the owners of the property will be heard?

Mr. SISSON. I am going to state to the gentleman that, so far as the committee knows, this commission did not inform us just exactly the method of procedure which they are going to undertake, because they themselves said they did not know exactly how they were going to proceed.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there any disposition to let out this work by contract to any of the companies that have made bids?

Mr. SISSON. I think not. I do not know whether the commissioners will finally decide upon that or not.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you think that is a wise method to pursue?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know. It might be a very wise method to pursue, if you got the right sort of a company to value the properties.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think the responsibility of making this estimate ought to rest on the commissioners?

Mr. SISSON. It would at last rest on the commissioners. The commissioners themselves, however, are going to be compelled to rely upon the experts and engineers whom they employ to do this work.

I will state that in addition to the hearings which were had before the subcommittee which reported this item to the full Committee on Appropriations, and the full Committee on Appropriations which reported the bill to the House, the gentleman will find by looking at the hearings on the District of Columbia appropriation bill that a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which considered that District appropriation bill, gave quite a number of days to hearings upon this subject.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was kind enough to come down and give us the benefit of the experience which they had in the city of Chicago in valuing the properties there; and I state that my own judgment is that the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is perhaps correct; that this work could be done for $65,000; but he occupies a different position than that which I occupy. The burden of responsibility was upon me to be able to say to the House that the amount of money appropriated would do the work. I will say that it is a work which must be done as rapidly as possible, and if it is lengthened out over a year or two years, the deterioration in the value of the properties might be such as to materially affect the worth of the estimates placed upon the value of the various properties.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask for two minutes more to complete this statement. This is an important item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. If the work is to be done rapidly and efficiently, they must have sufficient money with which to do it. If the money given them is inadequate, they will have to construct machinery for the making of the valuation in accordance with the amount of money which we give them. Then, if the money gives out, they will have to come back and get more money; and if they should fail to make an accurate valuation, they would be able to come back to us and say the reason they had not made what we wanted was because they did not have the necessary funds. Then the responsibility would be with us.

This physical examination is a very important matter, and I think it is of great consequence to the people throughout the country that the District Commissioners be given every dollar they need to make this valuation, because every community in the United States is interested in this physical valuation.

Mr. COOPER. I was impressed with the force of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] that this is to furnish a precedent for other cities.

Mr. SISSON. I stated in my opening remarks that this valuation will be of very material assistance to all the cities throughout the United States. The committee took that into consideration.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman and his committee have confidence, have they not, in the integrity and good judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. I know of no reason why we should not have absolute confidence in the District Commissioners; and if you will examine the hearings you will find that they stated to us that if $100,000 proves to be a greater amount than is necessary they will not expend it.

Mr. COOPER. I was about to ask a question along that line. I will ask this further question: The gentleman believes, does he not, that before making this estimate the District Commissioners carefully investigated the matter?

Mr. SISSON. They say they made a very careful investigation, and I am sure they have done the very best they could, because the District Commissioners had the time intervening between the grilling which they received before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which considered the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and the time when they came before the subcommittee which reported this bill. They had that length of time in which to obtain further information and revise their estimates.

Mr. COOPER. Under the circumstances I am disposed to vote with the committee, and for the appropriation which they recommend, although it does seem to me to be quite a large amount.

Mr. SISSON. It does look like a large amount, and I do not believe any member of your subcommittee would feel in any way offended if the House saw fit to assume the responsibility of cutting down the appropriation.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 10, line 23, strike out $100,000 and insert $65,000.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because the State of New Jersey has had actual and practical experience in this revaluation work. I am very much impressed with the opinions of the experts and engineers and with the statement of Prof. Bemis; but very much of the detail referred to in the professor's letter is a matter of record and can be tabulated and compiled by clerks and expert accountants.

In no State in the Union is there a more complex system of railroads or a greater variety of railroad properties than in the State of New Jersey. We have great terminals; we have railroads great and small, short lines, trunk lines, country roads, and city roads, and yet the entire work of valuing all properties was done there for $107,000. An exhaustive report was prepared, and that report was approved by Gov. Wilson, who warmly recommended the commission for its work. The railroad companies were satisfied that it was a fair and proper valuation, and the State board of assessors also complimented the commission.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TUTTLE. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. If the railroads were so thoroughly satisfied with the valuation of the railroads in New Jersey, I am afraid the valuation did not amount to much.

Mr. TUTTLE. I want to say that their statements were indorsed by Gov. Wilson, and I have heard no intimation from any quarter that the commission was not entirely fair to both the public and the railroads.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TUTTLE. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER. Has there been any litigation in the courts of New Jersey which would test the accuracy of that valuation?

Mr. TUTTLE. I do not know of any.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TUTTLE] seems to me to form a basis for the judgment of the committee. Mr. Prouty, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, made a speech in Baltimore a few days ago, in which he stated that the commission expected to value the entire railroad mileage of the United States for a sum between $25 and $70 per mile, and they expected to make this valuation within the next four or five years. I intended to ask the gentleman from New Jersey if the valuation in his State was performed under contract, or whether it was performed in another way, the appropriation being made prior to the contract.

Mr. TUTTLE. I am not informed as to that. The information was reported to me to be at a cost of $107,000. I am not informed as to the method under which the valuation was made.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. This matter is bound to be popular throughout the country, and we will soon have a new order of professional valuation experts, who will go about endeavoring to secure contracts from cities and States; and it seems to me that Congress should be careful in a matter of this character, and therefore I desire to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by Commissioner Prouty in his speech the other night was not new information to Members of Congress who have been following the matter of the physical valuation of railroads. When the bill authorizing the physical valuation of railroads in the United States was under consideration by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, statements were made that it would cost about $3,500,000 to do the work. The maximum estimate, the outside estimate, was about $5,000,000. At the last session of Congress, the law having been enacted, the Interstate Commerce Commission submitted an estimate of the amount of money required to do the work. During the investigation of that estimate Commissioner Prouty made the statement that unless Congress was prepared to spend at least $12,000,000 it ought not to undertake the work. I agreed with him that it would cost before it was ended nearer $20,000,000 than $12,000,000.

The committee recommends $100,000 to do the work required under the so-called physical-valuation provisions of the District appropriation act for the current year. The estimates ran from $125,000 up. The commission decided that it could probably do the work for $110,000. The committee recommended $100,000. I am frank to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have no way of knowing how much should be spent to do the work required under the provisions of that act. I have to form my conclusions from information furnished to the committee. Col. Harding, Engineer Commissioner of the District, the Army engineer and chairman of the commission, sought information on the question from all of the available sources at his command. He consulted the public-service commission for the first district of the State of New York, which has to do with public-utilities concerns in that city. He conferred with Prof. Bemis, now in the employ of the Interstate Commerce Commission under Commissioner Prouty in connection with the valuation of the railroads of the country. He conferred with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who contributed considerable information about the work done in Chicago and other places. With all the information he was able to acquire and all the information the committee were able to acquire they arrived at the conclusion that probably $100,000 would be required.

These valuations are to form the basis of prices to be fixed for the services to be furnished by these companies. These valuations must be thorough, they must be accurate, they must be able to stand the test of challenge in the courts. If the work is to be done at all, it ought to be done with thoroughness, efficiency, and in a manner satisfactory to everyone concerned. When finished, it should be impartial, fair, and just to all. For these reasons the committee recommended $100,000 for the work.

The statement was made that it would take 18 months to do it, and we provided that the work should be done during the 18 months. If $65,000 is appropriated, the commissioners will have to organize the work on the theory that that is all that will be allowed. I prefer to make it $100,000 and let them do the work properly.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the chairman of the Appropriations Committee believe that if the work is done in a year the overhead charges by high-priced experts would be very much less than if it is done in 18 months or 2 years? These men will all be kept on the pay roll for 18 months or 2 years if that is the time limit. If you cut them off in a year, you will save these overhead charges.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois has no more horror of high-priced experts connected with the Government pay roll than I have myself. I know that when they attach themselves to the Government pay roll it seems to be impossible to separate them from it. The statement of those who had whatever information could be obtained, however, was that it was believed it would take 18 months to do the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 16, noes 23.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Refund of erroneous collections: For amount required to refund erroneous collections, including the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, $520.79.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the committee please explain what is meant by "erroneous collections"?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, there are quite a number of them. That is all stated in the hearings. This is in reference to amounts collected on various assessments and properties for water and things of that sort, and upon investigation it is found that when the matter is closed up they have collected too much or too little. Commissioner Newman goes into details. You will find it stated on page 184 of the hearings, and they are itemized on page 185 as, for instance, lot 27, special assessment, streets, $9.03. That is where the work is done by the city. The property owner fails to do the work, and under the law the city does the work and collects a certain amount of money, and after having the work done they may find that they have collected a little bit more than is necessary, sometimes on repairs. It may occur in various ways.

Mr. MADDEN. Have they not authority to pay that back without an act of Congress?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; they have. There is an appropriation of $500 for erroneous collections and assessments, but the $500 frequently does not cover the amount.

Mr. MADDEN. That is exhausted?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse James F. Oyster, late president of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, for amount paid in settlement of judgment for costs in the case of Mary E. Nalle v. James F. Oyster and others, at law No. 50569, $183.20.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. I have read carefully what is stated in the hearings in respect to this matter, and I would like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that this is a case in which Mr. Oyster and others were sued in their official capacity, in which the plaintiff was seeking to recover from the District of Columbia a certain sum of money, and the District of Columbia won its suit, and these were costs that were incurred and assessed against the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILLIS. I have the case before me, and here is the closing paragraph of the decision of the court:

We are therefore of the opinion that the main question of fact involved in the present case is shown by the record not only to have been put in issue in the former case but to have been there decided adversely to the plaintiff. The judgment is affirmed with costs, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SISSON. Here is a statement made by Commissioner Newman.

Mr. WILLIS. I am familiar with that. I have read it.

Mr. SISSON. Let me read:

Mr. NEWMAN. Mr. Oyster was the president of the board of education, and as president of the board of education he, together with the other members of the board, was sued by a teacher whom they had dismissed. The case went to the Court of Appeals of the District, and the final decision upheld the action of the board of education. They won the case, but the costs were assessed against them. The teacher was suing them for damages and reinstatement.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it an action at law?

Mr. NEWMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. There are some cases in which the court can put the cost on either party.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a judgment, and Mr. Oyster has paid it?

Mr. NEWMAN. Yes, sir; his property was attached for it, and he paid it.

Mr. WILLIS. But the decision of the court to which I have referred does not bear out the statement of the commissioner.

Mr. SISSON. I have not seen the decision of the court.

Mr. WILLIS. It reads:

The judgment is affirmed, with costs, and it is so ordered.

In other words, the decision was in favor of the defendants. Of course the costs were assessed upon the plaintiff, and, if so, I do not see how there could be any claim against the District for any costs.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio, the only information the subcommittee had was the information given us by Mr. Newman. We did not investigate the case to ascertain whether that was the fact about it or not. Mr. Newman states here that Mr. Oyster paid these costs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the Committee on Appropriations, before it recommends the payment of a judgment, require some official to certify the fact that there is such a judgment?

Mr. SISSON. Commissioner Newman——

Mr. MANN. But he is not the man who certifies to a judgment. He evidently did not know what he was talking about.

Mr. SISSON. In cases of this character, where the estimate comes from an official who knows the facts about it, we have always taken the statement of that official as being the truth.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the estimate.

Mr. SISSON. Except that the District Commissioners included this item and sent this estimate up to the committee, and Mr. Newman appeared before the committee and made the statement that I have just read.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, unless we can have more definite and satisfactory information, a certification from somebody who has authority to make it, it does not seem to me wise to let this go through, especially in view of the rather strong statement made at page 460 of the hearings, which I will not take time now to read. There is no definite information showing that this is a just claim, and the decision of the court would indicate that it is not. In other words, it does not indicate that any costs were assessed against Mr. Oyster or the District of Columbia, and unless we can get the matter explained, I shall have to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. We would like to have this Oyster opened before we eat it.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; and the only opening that I can make of the Oyster is to simply refer you to the statement of the commissioner.

Mr. COOPER. Was not this to reimburse James Oyster for expenses incurred in defending the litigation?

Mr. SISSON. No; I do not think so.

Mr. WILLIS. It does not appear so.

Mr. SISSON. The record does not say so; it is for costs.

Mr. WILLIS. Costs were assessed, so far as we can determine from this case, upon the other party. Then how can there be any claim for costs against the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. If a party incurs costs in defending a suit, and the cost can not be made out of the other party, the costs could be made out of the party who actually wins the case.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman know that is the case in this instance?

Mr. MANN. Not unless there is a judgment to that effect, he can not.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know what the law of the District of Columbia is in reference to that matter, but the law in a great many States is that the plaintiff, if he wins the suit, may be compelled to pay his own witnesses and——

Mr. WILLIS. Did the committee make any inquiry to determine whether there was any judgment of the court to that effect?

Mr. SISSON. We made no inquiry about the judgment. The only thing your committee did was to take the statement of Mr. Newman as to the facts in the case.

Mr. WILLIS. Until we get some further light upon the question I will have to insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know from what book the gentleman read.

Mr. WILLIS. A decision of the court of appeals. I read from the appealed case, District of Columbia, volume 36, Tucker, 1910 and 1911.

Mr. SISSON. What is the number of that case?

Mr. WILLIS. It is the case of Nalle against Oyster.

Mr. SISSON. No. 50569?

Mr. MANN. That is the number in the lower courts.

Mr. WILLIS. It is the same case—a case where a schoolteacher sued the board of education. This teacher sought first, through proceedings in mandamus, to secure her former position, and, failing in that, she sued the board for libel, basing her action on certain allegations made by the board in the mandamus proceeding.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Oyster had to pay these costs. Now, it was not Mr. Oyster's personal litigation or lawsuit, but he was sued as a member of the board of education.

Mr. MANN. It was a suit for libel.

Mr. SISSON. For his action in dismissing a teacher?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. WILLIS. Does not the gentleman think it would be an exceedingly bad practice to establish the precedent of paying a claim of this sort by an appropriation on the mere statement of somebody that it should be paid, and without a certification?

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman, as a matter of fact, nearly all the appropriation committees and all the committees, and nearly every Member, and the gentleman himself is as guilty as anybody, rely upon the statement of the heads of departments and those men who ask for the appropriation and come and make the explanations. I have heard the gentleman get up and read statements from the departments in reference to these matters.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman never heard me read a mere statement from somebody when it would be perfectly easy to get record evidence. Here is the statement of the only official record we have, so far as we have any record at all, which shows apparently exactly the reverse of the statement made by this officer upon whose mere statement the committee relied in inserting this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that if this committee attempted to examine all the judgments certified for payment we could not do it in a session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Nobody is asking the committee not to take certified judgment. In this case they have taken a sloppy statement of an official that a court judgment exists, and we have not a certified judgment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement is very clear that not only the jugdment was made, but that Mr. Oyster paid it.

Mr. MANN. It is a sloppy statement and there is no information in it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not a sloppy statement. I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. We have already had it. There is no information there.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee——

Mr. MANN. It has all been read once.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nevertheless I shall read the record. I asked this question:

> This is a judgment, and Mr. Oyster has paid it?
> Mr. NEWMAN. Yes, sir; his property was attached for it, and he paid it.

It may be the commissioner did not know what he was speaking about. It may be that he made an incorrect statement; it may be that somebody fooled him; but if we can not rely upon the statement of the Commissioner of the District as to whether this judgment was actually paid by a man who was president of the board of education, the committee can not do its work.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES BOARD OF MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION.

To enable the United States board of mediation and conciliation to carry out the objects of an act entitled "An act providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees," approved July 15, 1913, for the fiscal year 1914, $40,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, what this United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation does, how much money it has expended during the last fiscal year, and why there is a deficiency of $40,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The board was created by the act approved July 15, 1913, and in the act $25,000 was appropriated. In the deficiency bill at the last session of Congress an additional $10,000 was appropriated, and the commissioners requested $50,000 additional at this time. The committee recommended that they be given $40,000. They are now engaged in an attempt to arbitrate a controversy between 42 railroads east of Chicago. I shall be very glad, if the gentleman wishes, to give a statement concerning it. The commissioner is paid $7,500 a year and the deputy $5,000 a year, and the commissioners who are appointed in these cases have been paid $10 a day, and in addition there is an allowance for subsistence, traveling expenses, and so forth.

Mr. MADDEN. The work of the board is only at times when there are questions to arbitrate, to which employer and employee agree?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In all controversies affecting employers and employees engaged in interstate commerce the commissioner intervenes and attempts to bring about a situation where the parties are willing to arbitrate.

Mr. MADDEN. It is all voluntary, anyway?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And then, when that is done, they appoint arbitrators. In New York City at the present time, in the controversy between these railroads, the arbitrators are Hon. Seth Low, Mr. John H. Finley, superintendent of education of the State of New York, and some others.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to inquire what the definition of those working in interstate commerce has been? What workmen are they?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe the statement was made that, following the decisions arising under the Erdman Act, it related to those actually engaged in the movement of trains, such as trainmen, railroad conductors, engineers, firemen, and switchmen.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It would not include those handling freight?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe it would.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The Erdman Act, I think, did not so apply.

Mr. MANN. It did not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall whether it included them or not. I have not looked at the terms of the act.

Mr. MANN. If my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has finished, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if there was any inquiry made by the committee as to whether these boards of arbitration made any effort to live up to the law limiting their time of service? The law provides they shall render a report within a certain number of days, which is a very brief period. My recollection is, from newspaper reports, that in no case have they pretended to live up to the law, although the law does not permit any extension beyond the period named in the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There have been some extensions in the cases, and, if I recall correctly, it was with the consent of both parties to the arbitration.

Mr. MANN. Well, I suppose that is the case, but the law does not permit it, with or without the written consent of both parties, and I wondered whether the terms of any of these commissioners were likely to string out because they were being paid for their services?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was not inquired into, because the cases cited by the commissioners seemed to be cases of such magnitude that it easily took longer than the law allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

For continuing the inquiries and investigations authorized by the act of August 23, 1912, entitled "An act to create a commission on industrial relations," and to provide the expenses of such inquiries and investigations as are enumerated in section 2 of said act, $50,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of this committee what the Commission on Industrial Relations is doing that requires an urgent deficiency appropriation? How much money have they expended during the last fiscal year, and what duty do they perform for the money expended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The life of the commission was limited to three years. Fourteen months of the three years elapsed before the commissioners were appointed and confirmed. My recollection is that President Taft nominated the commission and later President Wilson named them. It was not until the fall that the commission was finally confirmed by the Senate. One hundred thousand dollars was contained in the act creating the commission. Up to about the 10th of February they had expended in the neighborhood of $25,000 or $30,000, leaving about $70,000 available about the 10th of February. The chairman of the commission said they had made their plans and had now arranged to put out their field forces very extensively, and they believed that if they were permitted to go right ahead they would complete their work in the time originally fixed without any extension.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the field force do when it is put out? Does anybody know?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They investigate.

Mr. MADDEN. Is this industrial commission intended to take up such cases as the case in Michigan and the case in Colorado, on which we appointed committees of the House the other day? If they are intended to look into cases of that sort, and they have already expended $25,000, and have $75,000 at their disposal, and are asking for $50,000 more in this bill, why is it that the House felt called upon to appoint a special committee to go into each one of these places to investigate a local matter over which the State had ample jurisdiction and in which the States alone, it seems to me, were interested? But if, perchance, there is a case of the United States involved, then, although having the commission, as we have, supposed to be looking after things of this sort, and spending vast sums of money out of the Public Treasury—and which does nothing but look wise, and not succeeding in that—it compels us to pay out of the contingent fund of the House sums of money that ought to be paid out of the appropriations made for the men who are supposed to be acting in the capacity of the Industrial Relations Commission, whose duties, I assume, would lead them to an investigation of the things involved in these two strikes. If there is no purpose of the commission except to expend the public money, I would suggest its disbandment. If they have a purpose and they do not perform the duties called for by that purpose, then they ought to be called to account for it. And surely no public money ought to be appropriated to carry on the work of a commission when the commission itself is doing nothing along the lines called for in the law that created it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, in order to give the chairman of the committee a chance to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I might perhaps follow the course of the chairman of the Industrial Commission when pressed for information along somewhat similar lines, when he said:

Perhaps I had better read from the act creating the commission.

And he read section 4 of the act creating the commission, authorizing the work, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the commission shall inquire into the general condition of labor in the principal industries of the United States, including agriculture, and especially in those which are carried on in corporate forms; into existing relations between employers and employees; into the effect of industrial conditions on public welfare and into the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith; into the conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting the life, limb, and health of the employees; into the growth of associations of employers and of wage earners, and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employees; into the extent and results of methods of collective bargaining; into any methods which have been tried in any State or in foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employees and employers; into methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations; into the scope, methods, and resources of existing bureaus of labor, and into possible ways of increasing their usefulness; into the question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions, and of the methods by which such Asiatics have gained and are gaining such admission, and shall report to Congress as speedily as possible with such recommendation as said commission may think proper to prevent such smuggling and illegal entry. The commission shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation and report its conclusions thereon.

After reading that act, he said:

Now, we started by making a study of the conditions, first, a practical study of the conditions right in the field. That is to be followed by the same agencies in connection with the commission in finding out how far they are available and what is being done now. Then an additional line of investigation, as I stated a moment ago, is the investigation into the underlying causes of industrial unrest, and the gathering together of the results of other investigations of that subject and ascertaining what has been done. We have, of course, the information furnished by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and there are private agencies upon which we can draw, and, in fact, there are a great many other agencies upon which we may draw for information. We are trying to get all of that information together and prepare it in such form that it can be presented to the commission as a whole.

Mr. MADDEN. Anybody can do that. A clerk can do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He further says:

We have undertaken to gather together the whole material that is available on this subject.

Mr. MADDEN. Where do they get it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He further says:

I will state, for instance, that we have outlined an investigation of the bituminous, anthracite, and metalliferous mines. There are a great many serious troubles, as you are aware, in several parts of the country with reference to these mines, and we consider it our duty to study that whole situation. For instance, instead of going right to the place where there is trouble, we will, perhaps, start at Scranton where there is no trouble now. We have already had investigators at work on this, and have a preliminary report on the places in which there is no trouble, or practically no trouble.

Mr. MADDEN. They get away from trouble, then. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. He proceeds:

For instance, our investigations will cover the coal fields of Trinidad, where the trouble is very marked; the Butte, Mont., field, which is filled with labor unions and in which there is no labor trouble at present; and the Michigan field, where, as you know, at Calumet, Mich., particularly, there is very serious trouble.

The commission, if the gentleman will permit me, furnished additional valuable information of the same character; and as the law provided that this work should be done within a certain time and the cost was limited to a certain amount, the committee came to the conclusion that the more quickly it was done the better it would be, because then we would have these results to utilize in whatever way might be desired.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from New York takes a totally different view of this situation from what he took of the situation with respect to the ascertainment of the physical valuation of the public utilities of the District, where he thought that the longer it took the better it would be. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this commission was created before the Department of Labor was created. I believe it is doing a work that belongs to the Department of Labor. That is the situation.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman believe——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I could have my way and not stir up a dozen hornets' nests in doing it, I believe it would be advantageous to transfer this work to the Department of Labor and permit the gentlemen and gentlewoman on this commission to go their busy ways, attending to their various private matters. But I shall not have my way about it.

Mr. MADDEN. But does not the gentleman think, inasmuch as we appropriated a vast sum of money last year and are now seeking to appropriate a vast sum more this year, that this commission should have made investigations in the cases of Colorado and Michigan, where two special subcommittees of the Committee on Mines and Mining were sent at the expense of the contingent fund of this House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman would hardly expect me to criticize the action of this House in a matter of that character.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not asking the gentleman to criticize anybody, but I am simply asking him to give us information as to the wisdom and desirability of what we did in that case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a new paragraph the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, after line 30, insert as a new paragraph the following: "On and after July 1, 1914, unless otherwise expressly provided by law, no officer or employee of the United States shall be allowed or paid any sum in excess of the expenses actually incurred for subsistence while traveling on duty outside of the District of Columbia and away from his designated post of duty, nor any sum for such expenses actually incurred in excess of $5 per day; nor shall any allowance or reimbursement for subsistence be paid to any officer or employee in any branch of the public service of the United States in the District of Columbia unless absent from his designated post of duty outside of the District of Columbia, and then only for the period of time when actually engaged in the discharge of official duties."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that that is new legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. COOPER. I make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will reserve it for a moment, I will state to him what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] raises the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not subject to a point of order in itself.

Mr. COOPER. It is not shown upon the face of the amendment itself that it would reduce the expenditures of the Government. I do not know that it would be admissible, as I understand it. Under a proper interpretation of the Holman rule, it must be shown on the face of the amendment itself that such is the case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The object of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to correct what is believed to be an abuse. It provides that unless specific authority is given by law, no sum shall be allowed for subsistence in excess of the amount actually expended, nor in any event in excess of $5 per day unless there is a special provision of law authorizing it, and that the allowance shall be made only when the person to whom the allowance is made is absent from the headquarters to which he is assigned to duty. This provision is designed to eliminate an abuse that should not exist.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in the interest of economy, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to give any special enlightenment on the subject of this amendment, but the paragraph to which this amendment is offered is one that is worthy of some consideration.

When this Commission on Industrial Relations was created it was stated in the House, and it seemed to be apparent on the face of the bill itself, that it was created for the purpose of investigating and devising methods by which industrial disputes might be avoided. President Taft named some persons as members of that commission, but owing to a deadlock in the Senate they were not confirmed, and President Wilson finally named a commission which was confirmed.

What they have been doing I do not know, but apparently they are taking the opinion entertained by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], who stated to the House when we were considering the resolution for the investigation of the mining strikes in Michigan and Colorado that it was the duty of this commission to make the investigations. They say it is their duty in the hearings before the committee, but they have made no effort to carry out their duty, and I apprehend they have no intention of using any of this money for that purpose.

I do not think it is the duty of that commission to investigate particular strikes. We have the authority to do that in the Department of Labor, as to employees who are not engaged in railroad transportation, and we have a special board authorized to act where employees are engaged in railroad transportation.

This Commission on Industrial Relations grew out of efforts which had been made here for a number of years past to find a way, through the law, of preventing strikes or lockouts. Now they have found something new to do. We wanted to increase the appropriations for them last summer, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] strenuously resisted my proposition to increase any of these appropriations, and the proposition of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to increase some of these appropriations; but since the tariff bill has been passed and a political exigency exists in reference to the unemployed, now comes along a proposition to give them $50,000. And what do they propose to do with it? I hold in my hand a statement, furnished to the press the other day by this commission, which statement was largely published in the papers; and when you read it in the papers you did not know whether it was official or whether it was the writing of some newspaper correspondent, but the information was furnished by the industrial commission itself—I suppose by Mr. Walsh, because he is the one who is quoted:

[For release in morning papers of Monday, Feb. 16.]

Stirred by reports of 350,000 men and women out of work in New York City alone, the United States Commission on Industrial Relations has undertaken an immediate investigation looking toward action by the Federal Government to relieve unemployment.

During the next six weeks the activities of four of the commission's investigators will be restricted to a rapid survey of unemployment in industrial centers from Boston to Kansas City and a critical analysis of public and private employment agencies.

I shall not read all of this—

Frank P. Walsh, chairman of the commission, in a statement announcing the investigation, said:

"Hundreds of thousands of men, industrious and anxious to work, are either out of employment or without assurance that their jobs will continue another week or another day.

"Groups numbering from 100 to 1,000 stand on the docks outside our great industrial plants each morning at 6 o'clock, hoping the foreman will pull them out of line and put them to work. They are thankful if they get only a few hours' employment.

"Poorly nourished and thinly clad, these men gather each morning for the foreman's inspection, submit to his rapid scrutiny, and then many drift away to the cheap saloons or cheap lodging houses to wait for another chance.

"None can see this spectacle without realizing that here is something society can not afford to tolerate. An employer never thinks of laying off his bookkeeper or clerk after employing him three or four hours in a day or three or four days in a week. The problem of continuous employment for laborers is more difficult, but it is a problem that must be solved if we are to check the increase in our great army of hopeless, homeless men."

When Mr. Walsh said—

None can see this spectacle without realizing that here is something society can not afford to tolerate—

He left out of consideration our Democratic friends, the Democratic leaders. They see it without a blush or a worry. They simply deny that it exists.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MANN. I do not yield at present. The gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. GARNER. All right.

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to yield in a moment. This commission say they are going to investigate these conditions from Boston to Kansas City. That will take them through Buffalo and various other places. I have an appeal which I received this morning from Buffalo, which appeal, by the way, is not published in the New York Herald, from the Charity Organization Society of Buffalo, the leading charitable organization of that city:

Our halls have been full of cold, hungry, discouraged women, men, and children. Women and children of the unemployed, and men looking and begging for work.

Our visitors have worked early and late, and we have been untiring in our efforts to help all, trusting that a generous public would pay the bill.

This commission will also go by way of Chicago, and I hold in my hand a letter from the United Charities of Chicago, which I shall not take the time to read in full, but here is a short statement from it:

The present is a period of almost unprecedented business depression in many circles. It has resulted in more unemployment among small wage earners than Chicago has ever experienced.

Two weeks ago in one section of Chicago over 6,000 men out of 36,000 normally employed were reported laid off, while one-half of the remainder were working on half time with half pay. We have statements to this effect from superintendents of the plants over their own signatures. The cold fact is that thousands more have been laid off in Chicago since then, and employers unite in saying that not a man will be reinstated for three months.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Not for a moment. These are not political statements.

Mr. BARNHART. I want to know who signed that letter.

Mr. MANN. It is signed by the chairman of the finance committee and the president of the United Charities of Chicago. These are not political statements. They are the statements of men drawn from all political parties, engaged in charity work. You may denounce them as falsifiers, if you will, but you had better go into your pockets and help them, because what they say is true.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman know of any real good that this industrial commission is doing, other than to get out documents that are calculated, as the gentleman shows from the extracts he has read, to be in the interest of the Republican Party?

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they have done much good yet or not. I supported the bill for the creation of the Industrial Commission. I believe that they may work out in some way a solution of the problem between capital and labor and report something to us upon which we may act in the end for the purpose of preventing industrial disputes, although I do not think it is their business to study the present unemployment of labor.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN. I yield now to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], if he is here.

Mr. PETERSON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] has stepped out for a moment. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois why, when he read the article from the Industrial Commission a moment ago, he omitted the part which reads as follows:

The commission, it was announced yesterday, regards the unemployment problem as a permanent one, because the present conditions in the labor field are practically the same as exist every year at this season.

How did the gentleman come to omit that?

Mr. MANN. I did not read all of the article.

Mr. PETERSON. That is pertinent, I think.

Mr. MANN. No; that is not pertinent. That part of the article, by the way, was inspired by politics. If the statement were true, which it is not, there would be no occasion for this commission to have anything to do with this subject.

Mr. PETERSON. Then the gentleman is impeaching his own witness.

Mr. MANN. I am not offering a witness. The gentleman may know how to practice law in a court, but he is not familiar with this situation. I am not offering any witnesses.

Mr. PETERSON. I apologize to the gentleman for not being experienced, but I can understand this situation.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that while he was giving a list of these cities he missed St. Louis, and I have here in my hand a statement by the St. Louis Providence Society in which they are appealing for help. It says hundreds of people need help for the first time. I will ask the gentleman to take this article and insert it in his remarks.

Mr. MANN. I have so many of these that I can not insert it. I have one from the district of my distinguished friend from Indiana, where a few days ago, owing to the cold weather, they commenced to cut ice, and men went out on the ice fields and fought with their implements for the right to be employed.

Mr. PETERSON. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I have another item that appears here from Indiana, which has a bearing on this subject:

Yesterday the Times carried the news of the firing of three additional open-hearth furnaces at the Gary Steel Works. There are now 30 of these furnaces and 6 blast furnaces operating; all of the rolling mills are busy and there is increased activity at the sister subsidiary plants. In the past six weeks operations at Gary have almost doubled.

Mr. MANN. That is it; almost double; and yet six weeks ago the gentleman was insisting that they were running at full capacity. Gentlemen on that side, including my friend from Indiana, six weeks ago insisted that there was no trouble in that country, and now he says that we have doubled in six weeks, and yet you are not running the full capacity.

Mr. PETERSON. It was only about a week ago that I made that assertion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I noticed in the New York Herald to-day that a page is taken up showing how prosperous business is throughout the country, so I wish to insert in the RECORD a copy of a circular I hold in my hand sent out by the St. Louis Provident Association dated February 6, 1914. I also wish to place in the RECORD an article from the Boston Post, supposed to be an independent Democratic paper, showing conditions in Boston and how a Democratic mayor is trying to relieve the condition of 20,000 unemployed in that city.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a circular and a newspaper clipping which he offers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETERSON] and some others who have spoken about the steel and iron industry, that it is true some of the mills have started within the last few days. It is true there are a few more men employed than there were on the 1st of January, 1914. It is also true that the iron and steel industry in this country are not to-day running one-half of their capacity. It is also true that they are employing to-day only about one-half as many men as they did a year ago. I see a distinguished gentleman on that side shaking his head, but nevertheless it is a fact and I challenge him to dispute the correctness of it. I received a dispatch from headquarters—from the Cleveland Daily Iron Trade—the same paper that I quoted from the other day.

Mr. BARNHART. What headquarters?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The headquarters of the steel industry in this country.

Mr. BARNHART. It is not located at Cleveland.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is at Cleveland. The headquarters of the steel industry, as far as obtaining news is concerned and keeping in touch with that industry, is in Cleveland; the question is whether it is a fact or not.

Mr. BARNHART. I know the gentleman thinks that the headquarters of the iron and steel industry is at Cleveland, because some newspaper there published in the interest of the Republicans gave wide publicity to his speech.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is not a question of giving publicity to my speech or any other; the question is whether the facts are true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not make any difference whether it is true or not to a Republican newspaper.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman from New York is always a great stickler for the rules, and I shall not yield to him unless he observes the rules that are ordinarily observed in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, at times the temptation is so great that one unintentionally oversteps the rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I know the temptation is so very great that whenever you begin to present the facts to the House the gentleman can not keep his seat.

Now, I want to continue what I started to say a moment ago. I challenge gentlemen on that side of the House to dispute the correctness of the statement that 50 per cent of the steel and iron mills of this country are closed to-day; that is, the production is not half what it was a year ago.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not yet. If this condition is not true, why does not your great efficiency expert at the head of the Department of Commerce go out and investigate and find out whether these mills are closed or not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Because he is waiting for a more authoritative statement of facts than come from the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is about as good an excuse as you can give. I cite to the gentleman the New York Times, and that paper sent a wire to every mill, and every answer they got confirmed the statement. Does the gentleman say that the mills were not closed at the time I made the statement that they were? Answer that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not have to answer it. I say that the gentleman has produced nothing but a sweeping assertion, which is contrary to all the information we get.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In my statement I gave the names of the mills, location, and number closed, and that list was published in the New York Times, a Democratic paper—at least it supported Mr. Wilson—and it came out the next day and said that every statement I made was true, so far as it was able to get the facts. Does the gentleman deny that the mills I said were closed were not closed at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WORK FOR OUT OF JOBS RAZING HILL—ROURKE SUGGESTS A SOLUTION TO MAYOR.

Mayor CURLEY announced last night that he had made arrangements with Commissioner of Public Works Rourke to use Boston's army of unemployed to level a hill in East Boston and to fill in and grade a city playground there just as soon as the money is raised to pay these men for their work.

FUND FOR UNEMPLOYED.

Morrison I. Swift called upon the mayor yesterday and informed the latter that the chamber of commerce might raise a fund for the unemployed of Boston. The mayor immediately got in touch with Commissioner of Public Works Rourke and directed the latter to report to him as to how the unemployed men could be used to the best advantage.

Commissioner Rourke suggested the leveling of the old reservoir property in East Boston and the grading of the playground. It was stated by the mayor that the city now only awaits the raising of the money to pay these men to have the work of leveling the playground started. He said that the city's finances will not permit of this work being done at present, but that if citizens will provide the money to have this work done he will gladly put the unemployed of the city to work on the hill.

TWENTY THOUSAND OUT OF WORK.

At least 20,000 persons are out of work in Boston and must be given employment immediately, according to Mr. Swift in a statement yesterday. The remedy he suggests is not charity, but public work of a useful nature, to be paid for by private subscription and arranged for by the city. His statement in part follows:

"Many who have been able to exist in some manner until now are at the end of their resources. If something is not done for them, we shall be in the midst of a great calamity. Conditions might begin slowly to mend without appreciably relieving this element for a long time. Charity is not the thing, for self-respecting people never fully recover from its effects.

"The thing needed in this crisis is public relief work of a useful nature. A living can then be earned and the sense of pauperism be avoided. Full-time work is unnecessary; in fact, many would be unable to work a whole day at hard, outdoor labor without injury owing to recent underfeeding or to the indoor nature of their work.

PLANS FOR RELIEF.

"Four or five half-days' work a week, paid for at the trade-union rates, would meet the emergency. The least vigorous could be paid by the hour in order to give them a chance to build up their strength. It is wiser to pay the union-wage rate and to give less work than to adopt the other course.

"City relief work could be given at once if the city possessed the funds. Since these are lacking they must be contributed by the citizens if work is supplied. It should be useful work, such as road building or marsh-land draining, so that new values for the city would be created.

"But complete cure and future prevention of unemployment require the existence of permanent municipal works of various kinds for the absorption of a greater or less number of unemployed as the labor market fluctuates. These factories should be located upon a municipal farm, where expert farming would be one of the pursuits."

An emergency may develop into a disaster if not properly met. Widespread destitution prevails in St. Louis to-day. Unusual scarcity of employment has more than offset the advantages of a mild winter. Thousands of men are out of work.

Hundreds have applied for help for the first time.

The emergency has thus far been met by the St. Louis Provident Association. The hundred families a day that have appealed for aid have received prompt relief and care. Many of them will need help for weeks and scores of new families are coming day after day.

The demands upon the resources of the Provident are very heavy, indeed.

Without further accretions, its funds will soon be exhausted.

It would truly be a disaster to fail to provide food, coal, clothing, and other necessary help for helpless women and children, the sick, the aged, and the deserving families rendered destitute by lack of employment.

What can you do to avert it?

Large contributions are needed, but small ones—no matter how small—will be welcomed and appreciated. Sixty cents will supply food for a man, or $2 for an entire family for a week. A dollar and a quarter will supply a pair of shoes, or coal for two weeks.

These hundreds of families are dependent upon the bounty of our citizens. The Provident has no other resource and all contributions will be used for relief expenditures only.

You may have received other appeals. Do not let this one be in vain. Will you not kindly send something to-day, be it much or little? It is needed.

February 6, 1914.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with more or less amusement and with a good deal of interest to many statements that have been made by the two gentlemen who have just been entertaining us for some time. I have lived in this country some 50 years. I have lived through a good deal of prosperity and some adversity. I take my home papers from Indiana, all of them, Republican and Democratic. I represent a district with widely diversified interests, principal among them being manufactories at South Bend, Elkhart, Michigan City, La Porte, and Mishawaka, all adjacent to Chicago and to the tenth district represented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETERSON], and I have yet to see a single instance where any more suffering prevails at this time than is always caused by severe cold in midwinter time. But there are calamity howlers. I hear them in my own little prosperous city—some Republican agitator trying to make somebody believe that calamity prevails. I see the Republican newspaper from my home city says the farmers are very much dissatisfied with the tariff. Yet I pick up that same Republican newspaper and see it quotes wheat yesterday at 93 cents, corn at 78 cents a hundred pounds——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What was corn before the Argentine corn came in?

Mr. BARNHART. Corn is as high to-day as usual at this season, and a year ago it reached $1.05 a hundred.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will ask whether it was not true that the other day——

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Washington is violating Rule XIV, which requires recognition before interrupting a gentleman.

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, that does not bother me.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am glad the gentleman from Illinois comes to the rescue and assistance of his colleague from Indiana.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon reading these quotations. Corn, at 78 cents a hundred pounds—in Indiana we sell it by the hundred pounds; oats, 38 cents; clover seed, $7.25; eggs, 25 cents; butter, 27 cents; timothy hay, $12; alfalfa, $13; and even wheat straw, $5.

Mr. MADDEN. When was that?

Mr. BARNHART. That was yesterday.

Mr. MADDEN. A year ago——

Mr. BARNHART. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon. I want to get on. Hogs are being sold by the farmers at this time at $8.40 a hundred and beef cattle are as high as $8 a hundred. These politicians who are now attempting to create a panic scare for the sole purpose of trying to revive the practically defunct stand-pat party are trying to do so at the expense of precipitating disaster and distress upon the people.

The words of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] arouse a disposition in many men in the Nation when they read them in the newspapers to say, "I want somebody to give me something." That is the tendency created when a man of such standing and influence in the Nation as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] rises in the Congress and declares that want is widespread and distress prevails everywhere. But let me call your attention to the fact of the difference between the Republican Party and the Democratic Party. When panic prevailed everywhere in 1907, there was no cause on earth for it in comparison to what little there may be now. We have changed the currency system, revised the tariff, and are now talking of regulating the trusts, and in the very nature of things business halted for the time being to readjust itself; but, after having been reassured, it has started in anew. I said, when distress prevailed everywhere in 1907, you know as well as I that the Democratic press and Democratic campaign orators stood up and said to everybody, "Keep your shoulder to the wheel, don't embarrass the banks, and let us keep prosperity going," and if they had done as you Republicans are doing to-day, this country would have gone down into the most tremendous crash in its history.

The difference between the two parties is this: When financial danger comes and disaster confronts us, the Republicans being in power, the Democrats always come patriotically to the front and assist in keeping things going, but the minute that there is a speck on the financial horizon, if the Democrats are in power, you will find the Republican leaders and Republican newspapers not only berating the Democrats for being responsible for everything that might possibly threaten, but they combine in an attempt to precipitate a fright upon the country, much to the disadvantage of every honest endeavor to legislate for public welfare. There are always men who are seeking jobs. There never has been a time when men have not been tramping about looking for work. I read in a newspaper the other day that at the city of Gary 10 days ago it was said in one of the newspapers, in head lines that reached across the page, that every man and woman could have work that day if they wanted it. Gary is within 20 miles of the city of Chicago. I will tell you what happens at any time the Democratic Party comes into power—and that has been the history of the past—Republicans encourage organization of so-called charitable societies, and they announced the other day that there was a free soup house in a prosperous little city in Indiana. And I saw a story in one of the papers this morning to the effect that that soup house had been opened by the wives of five stand-pat Republican politicians of the city. It is the same old political trick; that is all.

Mr. MONDELL. Good women.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; they probably made good soup; and as most everybody likes soup, they were doubtless liberally patronized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to detain the committee just a minute. I notice the discussion that has been going on in reference to the idle men and the idle mills. I think the gentlemen who are discussing the question have entirely overlooked the fact that there is a rate war in progress between the steamship lines, and that they are bringing immigrants in from Europe at $5 a head. I understand that the immigration records show that there are 500,000 men a month coming in.

Mr. COOPER. Five hundred thousand men a month!

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; that 500,000 men have come in during this last summer and fall.

Mr. MANN. There are a million that come in in a year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have not any doubt that a large number of these idle men that are shown in the cities are men that are being brought into the country by reason of this rate war. What I rose to call to the attention of the House, however, is a letter from the Secretary of Commerce in reference to matters that the gentleman from Washington has been calling to the attention of the House a number of times respecting the lumber industries in his part of the country. I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the letter he refers to may be read. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with that letter. It will take about 20 minutes to read it, and I want to ask at the same time unanimous consent that I have opportunity to reply to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman having the time to reply, but as the letter is directed to him and he is familiar with it, and he has not called it to the attention of this House, I do not think it lies in his mouth to raise an objection to the information being given to the House.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Still reserving the right to object, I was waiting, for this very reason, to see whether some Democrat would not put it in. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] That is what I was waiting for. I think gentlemen will not laugh when I am through with it. I am perfectly willing for it to go in. I shall not object, because that report contradicts the evidence upon which it was founded, and evidently the Secretary who made that report never read the evidence.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let us hear the Secretary's letter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Washington a few days ago said to me he wanted to address the House on this subject when there was a chance in general debate. I am perfectly willing for the letter to be read if the gentleman from Washington can have some time. I do not care to take two bites at this cherry and permit the letter to be read to which there can be no reply.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentlemen on that side of the House that it is seldom I ask the courtesy of the House, and I am doing it now on behalf of one of the departmental officers. Of course, if the gentlemen on that side desire that this information be withheld——

Mr. FITZGERALD. How long will it take the gentleman from Washington to muddle up things, so as to try to destroy the effect of this letter?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It will not take very long to muddle up the gentleman from New York.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, if the gentleman desires to object to my request——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am not objecting, but I was inquiring——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not desire to make terms about it if the gentleman wants to object.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am not going to object; I will be glad for the gentleman to put it in.

Mr. MANN. I am going to object; I shall protect this side against any such discrimination.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman from Washington want? He has been challenging this side of the House to reply to these speeches he has been making.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not want any more time than that required to read the letter; and if the gentleman objects to that, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not here to ask for terms on which the letter can be read in my time. If that side of the House desires to pursue that kind of a course, they can do so.

Mr. MANN. Nobody objects; that is not all of the request, and the gentleman is seeking to give an utterly unfair impression of the situation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am asking that the letter be read in my time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the time is up now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, then I will ask unanimous consent that this letter be read if my time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this communication may be read.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know, but it seems to me that the gentleman from Alabama has not occupied a quarter of a minute in stating what the letter was, but the balance of the time was taken up when objection was reserved over there by the gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from Illinois, and therefore it ought not to be taken out of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Alabama permitted the gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from Illinois to consume his time, and therefore the gentleman from Alabama will have to bear the responsibility.

Mr. GARNER. Let us have the request for unanimous consent put and see if there is any objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to say to the committee this, that I have not any objection to the gentleman from Washington answering it. I know the only answer he can make is to deny it, but here is an investigation by one of the great departments of the Government that completely contradicts what the gentleman has been putting in the RECORD here in the past, and if it was me I would not close the door to the answer which the Secretary of Commerce seeks to put in the RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not think the gentleman stands in a position to talk about anybody closing the door, for when he was making his speech in regard to the——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order, and the regular order is whether there is objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MANN. And that is the reading of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And that is whether there is objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the document which he sends to the Clerk's desk be read.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to reserve the right to object for a moment.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman can not reserve the right to object on the demand for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think the regular order is an amendment to the paragraph of this bill offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. MANN. That is what I thought.

Mr. SHERLEY. I submit to the Chair that, having put the request, the regular order is to ask whether there is an objection to the request submitted.

Mr. MANN. The regular order is——

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there is objection, the Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] for unanimous consent that the communication referred to may be read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. When are we going to rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. At about 6 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. We will rise as soon as this is through with, if the gentleman from Washington does not have an opportunity to speak, unless we have a quorum.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that I am not going to object to the gentleman having time, but I may wish to have something to say myself when this document has been read.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am going to ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes when the letter is finished.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman having 10 minutes, so far as I am concerned, but the regular order is the reading of the letter, and I ask for the regular order now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asked unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The regular order is the reading of the letter now. At the end of the reading the gentleman can ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request for unanimous consent. The Chair will state that the request of the gentleman is that he may have unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the reading of this letter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To-day?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right to object, does he mean to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. He means at the conclusion of the reading of the letter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to know if it means to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not answer that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not object if it means to-day, but I will object if it goes over.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order, which is the putting of the request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall object for the present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I call for the regular order, and let me state——

Mr. MANN. I object to that. The gentleman called for the regular order a moment ago, and I call for it now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I make the point, Mr. Chairman, that the regular order is the reading of the letter, which has been agreed to by unanimous consent by the committee. At the end of the reading of the letter the gentleman can then submit his unanimous-consent request, and, so far as I am concerned, it will not be objected to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] made his request for unanimous consent, and the Chair submitted it. It makes no difference whether a Republican or a Democrat makes a unanimous-consent request, and the Chair can not think for a moment of making any difference. The old practice was when the regular order was demanded it set aside any unanimous-consent request, but recently the practice has grown up in the House, if the regular order is demanded when a unanimous-consent request is pending, to put the question for unanimous consent. The Chair so ruled a while ago when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made a request for unanimous consent. I ask the Chair to rule the same way now. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has a request for unanimous consent, which the Chair has already put.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is that the gentleman from Washington had not the floor and was not entitled to the floor to ask unanimous consent at that time.

Mr. MANN. The Chair has submitted the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he did submit the request of the gentleman from Washington to the committee, and the Chair is of the opinion——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Did the Chair ask, when he put the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], whether there was any objection to considering the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object to that. How many times must I object?

Mr. MANN. That is because you are afraid of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Washington asked unanimous consent that at the close of the reading of the document now on the Clerk's desk he be permitted to address the committee for 10 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object again.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CARTER. Three times and out. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 18, 1914.

HON. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington.

MY DEAR MR. UNDERWOOD: On the 15th of December, 1913, Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY, of Washington, sent me a letter, which was largely exploited in the press and which was made by him a portion of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It made certain allegations concerning conditions alleged to arise from tariff changes in the shingle and lumber industries of Washington and called upon the department for an investigation.

That investigation has been made, and the result appears in the inclosed copy of letter addressed by me to Mr. HUMPHREY to-day and in the copy of the report of the special examiners, Messrs. Robertson and England, which is also sent you herewith.

In view of the extraordinary publicity given by Mr. HUMPHREY in Congress and in the press to his demand for an inquiry into the alleged facts which he submitted, I suggest that equal publicity be given to this reply and report. I will arrange to have it given to the press, and I trust you will select some one, if you are unable to do it yourself, who will submit the matter to the House in a public way and see that the papers are made a portion of the RECORD or a public document.

Yours, very truly,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

Senator SIMMONS has taken the matter up in the Senate.

FEBRUARY 18, 1914.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 15th December, alleging certain conditions to exist in the shingle and lumber industry of the State of Washington, was acknowledged by me on December 17. It was promptly referred to the Commissioner of Corporations, with request that an examination be made into the allegations in your letter and a report be presented.

Pursuant to these instructions, Mr. T. M. Robertson and Mr. William H. England, special examiners of the Bureau of Corporations, were sent to the State of Washington. The report, signed by Mr. Robertson and addressed to the Commissioner of Corporations on February 16, is sent you herewith. This report is accompanied by a letter of like date, which is quoted in full below:

"There is submitted herewith a report on conditions in the lumber and shingle industry in the State of Washington. This investigation grew out of a letter addressed to the Secretary of Commerce by Representative WILLIAM E. HUMPHREY, of the State of Washington, under date of December 15, 1913. That letter was accompanied by a list of lumber and shingle mills reported to have been closed down on December 1, 1913, and it was claimed that their closing was largely due to the removal of the duty on their products.

"Under your direction, I proceeded to the State of Washington and made inquiry as to the facts. Mr. William H. England, a special agent of this bureau, accompanied me, and much of the credit for the thoroughness and completeness of this report is due to his earnest efforts and his intimate knowledge of the shingle industry.

"The following principal points are brought out and emphasized in the report:

"(1) The closing of the shingle mills in the State of Washington is not an unusual occurrence.

"(2) It is not claimed by shingle manufacturers that the closing down of the mills in the latter part of 1913 was due to a removal of the duty on shingles.

"(3) There was no general complaint among shingle producers, because of the removal of the duty at the time Mr. HUMPHREY made his speech in the House of Representatives on December 16, 1913.

"(4) The labor cost of producing shingles in the United States and British Columbia does not differ greatly, if at all.

"(5) The cost of timber is probably somewhat greater in the United States than in British Columbia.

"(6) American manufacturers are not abandoning their mills nor are they moving to British Columbia. On the other hand, new mills are being built and old ones enlarged in this country.

"(7) There has been no reduction of wages in the shingle mills, and in only a very few instances have there been wage reductions in the lumber mills.

"(8) There are not more idle men in the State of Washington at this time due to the closing down of shingle mills than there have been at numerous times under a protective tariff.

"(9) The competition of substitutes for shingles seems to be feared more than the competition of Canadian shingles.

"The list of 194 mills reported closed on December 1, 1913, was not an unusually long one. At some time during every year, practically ever since the development of the shingle industry in the State of Washington, almost all of the interior mills and some of those at tidewater are closed about 60 days. Every man who is now or has been connected with the shingle industry declares that during the winter months a large number of interior mills are forced to close on account of weather conditions. The records of the various shingle associations and the files of the lumber trade journals bear abundant testimony to the fact that in practically no year since the development of the industry have the mills generally been operated more than 10 months.

"The facts disclosed by the investigation indicate that the list of mills submitted to the Secretary by Mr. HUMPHREY was made up at his (HUMPHREY'S) own request. There is no evidence to show that there was any general complaint among shingle manufacturers on account of the removal of the duty. There was complaint at that time, and there is still complaint, because of the depression in the price of shingles. It can be reasonably inferred from Mr. HUMPHREY'S letter that the removal of the duty has contributed largely to this condition. No shingle manufacturer was found willing to make such a statement. Many of them, however, declared their conviction that the removal of the duty has been a factor, but they do not consider it the principal one nor are some of them positive that it is a factor at all. In fact, some declare their disbelief in any such theory.

"In order to obtain this list of 194 mills every possible means was employed by the manager of the Shingle Manufacturers' Association to learn of every closed mill in the State. He circularized the mills, and inclosed a postal card requesting reports from them as to whether or not they were closed, and, if not, whether they intended to close, and if so, when. A large majority of the manufacturers were not sufficiently interested in the tariff to respond to this request. In fact, a considerable percentage of the mills reported closed did not make reports, and the information in regard to them was secured by the manager of the association from other sources. Unfortunately, there are no lists of mills in most of the past years. The only other complete list obtained is one of 259 mills in March, 1904.

"A number of the manufacturers responding to the request for information sent out by the manager of the association expressed themselves unequivocally that they were of the opinion that the removal of the duty had nothing to do with then existing conditions.

"Some effort was made to ascertain the causes for closing down the mills reported in the list of December 1, 1913. In this effort 87 mills, or about 45 per cent of the total list, were covered. Not one of those mills reported that they closed because of the removal of the duty. Of the 87, 29, or exactly 33⅓ per cent, stated that they usually closed at that season of the year; others were burned down, and some were bankrupt due to bad management. Some of the mills burned have either begun or soon will begin to rebuild. One of the mills reported in the list had been closed several years. A considerable number of the mills reported closed on December 1 were operating on January 1, 1914, and a still larger number have resumed operations since that time.

"In a speech delivered in the House of Representatives on December 16, 1913, Mr. HUMPHREY declared that when he was making his campaign in the fall of 1912 the shingle industry was very prosperous; that the mills were running; and that more men were employed than ever before; and that higher wages were being paid than ever before. Investigation of conditions at the time referred to fails to substantiate the correctness of Mr. HUMPHREY'S statements in respect to those matters. As a matter of fact, during the month of October, 1912, the time at which Mr. HUMPHREY was making his campaign, a very large proportion of the mills were closed. In fact, the mills were closed in some of the very towns in which Mr. HUMPHREY spoke, and on the very dates on which his speeches were made. It is, therefore, impossible for it to be true that more men were employed in the mills at that time than ever before. In regard to wages, the facts are that there has been no material changes in the rates of wages paid in the shingle industry since 1908. The shingle-mill employees are well organized, and all of the mills in the State, except a group of mills at one point, pay not less than the union scale of wages whether they employ union labor or not.

"A large number of the unemployed men in the State of Washington have come from British Columbia. Many of the shingle mills in that Province have been closed during the present winter and the unemployed have come across the line into the United States. When they have attempted to return to Canada, the Dominion officials have turned them back.

"The statement that labor in the State of Washington can not compete with the cheap labor in British Columbia does not seem warranted. It is true that a large number of Chinese are employed in British Columbia shingle mills. It is true that the rates of pay for oriental labor are lower than the rates paid in the United States, and that they are lower than those paid white labor in British Columbia. It is also true, however, that the oriental labor employed in British Columbia shingle mills is less efficient than white labor. The facts obtained during the course of this investigation lead to the conclusion that if there is any difference between the labor cost of producing shingles in the two countries it is small. Shingle producers who own and operate mills in both this country and Canada declare that their cost of production is no less in British Columbia than it is in the State of Washington. One of the most successful shingle manufacturers in this country investigated producing conditions in British Columbia, with the view to erecting a mill in that country. After making a thorough investigation he concluded that Canada offered him no advantages, and he immediately planned to erect a mill of about 700,000 daily capacity in the State of Washington. The construction of that mill is now in progress. Two other experienced shingle manufacturers have recently organized a company to erect a new mill in the State of Washington with a daily capacity of 350,000.

"That the removal of the duty will not ruin the shingle manufacturers, and that the shingle manufacturers do not believe that such will be the case is thus evidenced by the erection of new mills. In this connection it is important to point out also that the capacity of a number of old mills is being enlarged.

"It seems to be true that British Columbia manufacturers have some advantage in the matter of timber. This, however, is not considered by American manufacturers sufficient to warrant the removal of their mills to British Columbia. In general, however, it is felt by operators of tidewater mills that some provision should be made whereby they can obtain logs from Canada free of duty.

"Some of the shingle mills in British Columbia were visited, and manufacturers in that country generally declare that they have no real advantage over the American manufacturer in so far as labor is concerned. They also declare that the advantage they have in the cost of timber is not as great as appears from a comparison of prices of logs in the two countries. The Canadian mills do not cut their timber as closely as the American mills, and there is consequently more waste. It is but fair to state, however, that they produce a better shingle, or that at least they produce a much smaller percentage of low-grade shingles. The result is that the Canadian shingle brings a better price in the market. While it may be that the British Columbia shingle producers have a slight advantage over the American producer, it is not enough to cause American manufacturers to abandon their mills, nor even to discourage the building of new ones and the enlargement of old ones.

"The effect of the removal of the duty on lumber is universally considered as negligible, if it has had any effect at all; that it has not seemed necessary to enter into that subject in any great detail.

"The report herewith may seem to be unduly voluminous. The vast amount of interesting material available for the compilation of the report made it rather difficult to draw the line between that material that should and that which should not be used. Furthermore, the short time available for the preparation of the report would not permit of as careful condensation as might otherwise have been possible."

To the above let me add by quoting from your letter thus:

"I have placed before you exact and specific information."

And as against this statement allow me to quote from pages 40, 41, and 42 of the report transmitted herewith:

"Inquiry was made in regard to 87 of the 194 mills included in the list. This represents approximately 45 per cent of the total number. The reasons assigned for the closing of these 87 mills are as follows:

Usually close at this season of the year	29
Owned by bankrupt concerns or concerns which were in financial distress and which have been for some time past	7
Cut all their timber, and had quit operations for that reason	15
Closed by high price of logs and low price on bevel siding (of these three it is believed that the real reason for two of these mills closing was on account of financial difficulties caused by poor management)	3
Mills which owned their own timber, which they preferred holding for higher prices	10
Were burned (of these 10, 3 are being rebuilt, or will be in the near future)	10
Were closed for repairs (the majority of these are now running again, and one of two of the plants will resume operations before the 1st of March. One of these is not only undergoing repairs, but is being considerably enlarged)	8
Were not closed	3
Were closed for a short time, but started again before Jan. 1	2

"In regard to the 29 mills reported as being usually closed at this season of the year, it should be pointed out that mills falling in this class close for various reasons. Many of them are located in the foothills, and operations are hindered by snow. Some of these, however, will soon open again. One of these has recently entered into a contract with the Government for furnishing more than 40,000 cords of shingle bolts.

"It is particularly significant that in order to obtain a list of 194 mills closed it was necessary to include therein those mills that are always forced to close on account of weather conditions, those that were compelled to close because they had no timber, those that were burned, and those that were bankrupt or in financial distress. In this connection it should be pointed out that the history of the shingle industry discloses the fact that many concerns have failed in all the past, either from bad management or from some other cause, and that, therefore, the bankruptcy of a few shingle manufacturers at this time can not be attributed to the removal of the duty. At least three mills in the list were not closed at all. It is not thought that those mills that were not running were placed in the list with design. Mr. Traill, the manager of the Red Cedar Shingle Manufacturers' Association, stated that a number of mills included in the list did not report to him directly, and that they were placed in the list upon what he considered absolutely reliable information obtained from various sources."

"These 87 mills are distributed in practically every shingle-producing section of the State. They include both large and small mills. It is particularly significant that not one assigned the removal of the duty as a reason for closing."

I beg to remain,

Yours, very truly, WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us have a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] wish to address the committee now?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to have about three minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] may address the committee for three minutes.

Mr. MANN. You have backed down, have you?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Make it five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better quit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to be fair with the gentleman. I want to give him an opportunity.

Mr. MANN. A few moments ago you would not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] asks unanimous consent for five minutes in which to address the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the letter which has just been read was sent to me day before yesterday. It was accompanied by a report consisting of about 90 pages of typewritten material, as I recall. I have gone through the report, and if I had time to send over to my office to get it I would be ready to make a reply to this letter.

In addition, I received a dispatch on yesterday from a gentleman by the name of E. E. Case, Raymond, Wash., telling me that he was with one of these special agents, and asking me to defer my reply until he could get some information to me. That fact, together with the fact that I did not know there was to be an opportunity to-day to reply, accounts for my not having the report here.

But, Mr. Chairman, I can not refrain from making this statement in regard to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said awhile ago, when he made some statement about the unfairness that I had shown in this matter. I started then to say that I did not think that the gentleman from Alabama was in any position to complain about unfairness when anyone was making a speech. When I made a talk here on the floor of this House and called attention to the closed steel mills throughout the country, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] a short time thereafter made a reply to it, and he refused to be interrupted. I attempted in various ways to interject one question into his speech, but without success, and the reason of it was that three of his own mills in his own city were closed, and he was determined that that fact should not be made known.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman to give me the information now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will not yield at all. The gentleman absolutely refused to yield to me at that time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I doubt the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is it not true?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I never heard of them.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say to the gentleman, if he wants to know, that I have a letter in my office from a gentleman in his own city, who is connected with one of those steel mills, in which he said that at the time I made that statement there were three stacks closed in the gentleman's own town. It is true. Does the gentleman deny it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know of one stack that has been closed in that town for 20 years. That is different from saying that three steel mills are closed down.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will ask the gentleman whether or not it is correct? I made the statement on the floor on that day and called the name of the mill in Birmingham, and said there were three stacks in it closed. Does the gentleman say that is not true?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know what the mills are.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am talking about three stacks in mills in the city of Birmingham. What I said is in the RECORD. I do not recall the names now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that it is nothing unusual for a furnace to shut down for repairs for a month, for relining.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was calling the gentleman's attention to the fact that he was not in a position to call anybody to account for being unfair. I have never refused to yield to the gentleman during my service in Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I was asking for was time to read a letter for myself. The gentleman does not make the proper distinction. The gentleman from Washington wanted to inject himself into my speech when I had but five minutes, and he now takes a very different position.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I submit to the Members of this House who heard the controversy that I did not attempt to inject myself into the gentleman's speech. I simply asked that after the reading of the letter I might have 10 minutes in which to reply to it, and the gentleman refused to consent to the request.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest to the gentleman that the letter which has just been read needs a reply from him far more than any talk about a furnace being shut down.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, they sent a couple of cheap detectives out there. [Laughter.] Oh, you need not laugh. I will put the distinguished Democrat, the Hon. A. MITCHELL PALMER, back of that proposition. They come here with a report based almost entirely on anonymous evidence, and if the gentleman from Alabama had read the evidence he would have been ashamed to submit that report. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will be here when I read some of the evidence that was submitted. It is practically all based upon anonymous evidence, as I have said. They did not find anyone whose names they dared to give. It is about the same kind of evidence that a man uses to impeach the character of his neighbor when he sends anonymous letters. And not only that, but the detailed report itself contains statements that contradict every material statement that the distinguished Secretary of Commerce makes in that letter.

I do not want any better answer to it than that report. I will put it in the RECORD when the time comes. But I was objecting to the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Secretary of Commerce has stated conclusions the reverse of what the report justified?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Do I mean to say what?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That the Secretary of Commerce has stated in this letter conclusions exactly the reverse of what are justified by the report.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is exactly what I mean to say.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Knowing the Secretary of Commerce as I do, the gentleman will have to substantiate that statement.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will substantiate it. There will not be any trouble about it; and in order that the gentlemen on that side may understand it, I assert that the statements made in that letter, sent by the Secretary of Commerce, are contradicted in every material particular by evidence that was filed to support it, and I will prove it; and I repeat what I said awhile ago——

Mr. MANN. Now, gentlemen, you may go and study it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I repeat that if the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] had read the evidence on which that statement was made he would have been ashamed to file it here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that, of course, I have not read the report——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Of course you have not. That is perfectly evident.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I will say to the gentleman that I have served in this House with the distinguished Secretary of Commerce. He is a man of the highest reputation, and I do not for one minute allow the proposition to go unassailed that the Secretary of Commerce would falsify a report in a letter that he communicated directly to the gentleman from Washington himself.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What evidence has the gentleman from Alabama upon which to stand, when he says that the statement made by the Secretary of Commerce is in compliance with evidence that he has not read?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not said that.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have said it was not, and I will convince even the gentleman from Alabama, if he will give me the opportunity. It is perfectly evident that the gentleman has not read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I admit that I have not read the report. I am simply saying that I can not conceive that the Secretary of Commerce would write a letter directed to the gentleman from Washington himself, and misconstrue a report that he sent to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have one minute, and then I am going to quit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, in order that we may have no misunderstanding, either in this House or before the country, I make the direct statement to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that evidence submitted by the special examiner, upon which that report is based, directly contradicts every material statement in that report, and I will demonstrate it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman the report?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; I have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman print the report in the RECORD to-day, so that we may read it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will print it in the RECORD at the proper time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman wants us to read the report. Will he include it in the RECORD?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will choose my own time to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. You can get a copy of it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Gentlemen on that side can get a copy of it. I will read it to you and I will publish it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to have it put in the RECORD to-day, with the Secretary's letter and the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. You are getting very anxious about it now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has the report?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. You objected a few minutes ago——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not seen the report and the gentleman has.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. You objected a few minutes ago to my having 10 minutes to reply.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am giving the gentleman the time now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. You are getting very anxious about it now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has the Secretary's letter, which has been read, and has made a statement about it and the report on which it is based. Why does he not put the report in the RECORD with the letter and his statement, so that anybody who reads the RECORD may decide?

Mr. MANN. Everybody knows that nobody will read either one of them if they are printed in that fine type in the RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Go down to the Department of Commerce and get the report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has it. Why does he not print it. The gentleman from Washington is the only one here who has a copy of it. Why does not the gentleman print it now?

Mr. MADDEN. I submit that the Secretary of Commerce ought to have sent the report with his letter.

Mr. GORDON. He sent it to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have the report published in the RECORD. I will try and get it to-day, and if I can I will send it down to the Government Printing Office before the RECORD for to-day is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the report in question may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall not object to the unusual request to print in fine type in the RECORD what no man of common sense will read. I shall not object, because the gentleman from Alabama makes the request. If anybody else asked it, I would object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that as this controversy has arisen between the Secretary of Commerce and the gentleman from Washington over what is in the report, I think it is fair to both gentlemen that the report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to its being published in some form.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why does not the gentleman from Washington print it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have it in my office, not here. The gentleman knows that we can not carry these documents around.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman from Washington has his copy marked up. He does not care to send down his marked copy.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I ask unanimous consent that I may have the report printed, and if I can not get it to-night that it may be printed when I get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already put the request, and there was no objection. Leave is given to publish the report.

The report is as follows:

[Report of T. M. Robertson, special examiner, Bureau of Corporations, to the Commissioner of Corporations, dated Feb. 16, 1914.]

PRESENT AND PAST CONDITIONS IN THE SHINGLE INDUSTRY IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

PRODUCTION.

The latest statistics for the production of lumber and shingles in the United States are for the year 1912. In that year the production of lumber was 39,158,414,000 feet, and there were produced 12,037,685,000 shingles. Of the lumber the State of Washington produced 4,099,775,000 feet, or 10⅓ per cent of the total. Of the shingles, 9,500,908,000 were made from cedar, and of the cedar shingles the State of Washington produced 7,996,251,000. Cedar shingles represented 78.9 per cent of the entire production of the country. The State of Washington produced 84.2 per cent of all the cedar shingles and 66.4 per cent of the total shingle production of the United States.

There were 395 mills that produced shingles in the State of Washington during the year 1912. Of this number 273 mills produced shingles exclusively, while 122 mills made both lumber and shingles. The production of the exclusive shingle mills was 5,288,022,000, while the production of the mills producing both lumber and shingles was 2,708,229,000.

GENERAL CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH SHINGLES ARE PRODUCED.

In the State of Washington shingles are produced in two distinct types of mills. First, mills that produce shingles exclusively, and which are known as "straight shingle mills"; secondly, mills that manufacture both lumber and shingles, and which are known as "combination mills." The combination mills may be divided into two classes: (1) Those that manufacture only cedar lumber and shingles, and (2) those that produce cedar shingles and also lumber from other woods than cedar.

The number of upright machines, or their equivalent, is used as the basis for measuring the capacity of a shingle mill. Nearly all the machines are of the upright type. It is generally agreed that the most efficient unit of production is an equipment of eight upright machines. Some shingle producers consider seven as the unit of maximum efficiency. A unit of seven or eight machines gives employment to the minimum number of hands, with a maximum output per employee. The operation of any unit consisting of less than seven or eight machines is generally conceded to result in excessive labor cost, whereas the operation of any unit above this size produces like results until the increased unit reaches a multiple of seven or eight.

A striking fact in the shingle industry in Washington is that the equipment of a very large proportion of the mills operating in the State consists of fewer than seven machines. Of the total number, not less than 270 mills are equipped with fewer than seven machines, and as many as 190 mills have not exceeding three machines. There are, therefore, approximately 125 mills with an equipment of seven machines or more. In other words, less than 25 per cent of the mills, according to the generally accepted standard, are equipped for the most economical production.

The machinery necessary for the production of shingles is simple and comparatively inexpensive. Consequently, it requires comparatively little capital to embark in the shingle-manufacturing business. There are no mechanical intricacies in the processes of manufacturing. The efficient sawing of shingles requires considerable skill, and more or less skill is required of the packers. A prominent shingle manufacturer stated at a conference with representatives of the Bureau of Corporations in Seattle on the evening of January 23, 1914, that he could take any man of ordinary intelligence and make of him a skilled shingle weaver within 30 days. (The term "weaver" is applied to shingle-mill employees generally.)

MARKET CONDITIONS.

The consumption of shingles is seasonal. During the winter months outdoor building operations in a large proportion of the country are practically at a standstill, and there is consequently a falling off in the demand for shingles. In past years the shingles produced in the State of Washington have not been ordinarily marketed direct from the mills to the retail dealer. They are loaded in cars as fast as they are produced and started in transit. At certain transfer points they are either diverted directly to retailers who have placed orders or else they are held in storage at such transfer points until orders are received. Under this circumstance, retail dealers, as a rule, do not carry large stocks of shingles, the stocks being carried by the manufacturer or wholesaler at convenient transfer points. At times there may be as many as two or three thousand carloads in transit. The quantity of shingles held in storage at the mills is comparatively small; in fact, many mills never hold them at all. There are three principal reasons for not storing shingles at the mills: First, the amount of money tied up in several cars of shingles is greater than many manufacturers can conveniently command; secondly, in order to reduce the total freight charge to destination, the shingles must be very dry. When put in storage in the damp climate of the Pacific coast the dry shingles, particularly in the winter season, absorb a great deal of moisture, and the advantage of dry weights largely disappears; thirdly, very few mills are provided with storage capacity sufficient for any large quantities.

CONDITIONS REFERRED TO BY REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM E. HUMPHREY.

From the letter of Representative WILLIAM E. HUMPHREY, addressed to the Secretary of Commerce, under date of December 15, 1913, it may be reasonably inferred that the lumber and shingle manufacturers of his State had voluntarily supplied him with information in regard to conditions in their business. It is also a reasonable inference that they had complained, and that their complaint was based upon conditions resulting from a removal of the duty from shingles. A careful inquiry into the matter failed to find such to be the case.

Under date of November 19, 1913, F. A. Traill, manager of the Red Cedar Shingle Manufacturers' Association, addressed a communication "To the shingle manufacturers." This communication or circular was sent out from the headquarters of the shingle manufacturers' association at 4192 Arcade Building, Seattle, Wash. It was as follows:

"Congressman HUMPHREY is anxious to ascertain the number of lumber and shingle mills closed at the present time, to use same in discussing the present tariff, or, rather, lack of it. Will you please advise on inclosed card whether you are operating or not; the number of machines in mill and the number of men usually employed, including the woods crew, if you have one; the value of your plant, if you care to give it; and your approximate monthly output. If not now closed, do you expect to do so, and when? Congressman HUMPHREY will be able to use this information with considerable effect, and it may help us to get some modification of the tariff during the next 12 months.

"Shingle conditions could not be much worse. Orders are scarce and prices seem to be steadily dropping. Some sales on clears are reported at $1.65, with the market generally about $1.70; stars, $1.40.

"Practically everybody concedes the necessity of closing, but in the large centers no one seems willing to take the initiative.

"Please fill out the card and return at once, so we can give Congressman HUMPHREY the information desired."

It will be noted that "Congressman HUMPHREY is anxious to ascertain the number of lumber and shingle mills closed at the present time, to use same in discussing the present tariff, or, rather, lack of it." The author of this letter was interrogated as to what prompted him to make this request of the shingle manufacturers; that is, whether he sent it on his own initiative, whether it had been suggested by complaints that had come to his office from shingle producers in the State, or whether it was suggested by Mr. HUMPHREY. He stated that the inquiry for this information came to him through one of the most prominent shingle manufacturers in the State, who had received a telegram from Mr. HUMPHREY requesting such information, and that he sent out this circular with inclosed postal cards containing certain questions and blanks for the desired information. The manufacturer who brought this matter to the attention of Mr. Traill was seen, and asked whether he had interested himself in this matter on his own initiative, or whether the suggestion had come to him from Mr. HUMPHREY. He stated that he understood Mr. HUMPHREY had made some inquiry among shingle producers as to the effect of the removal of the duty on shingles, and that he (HUMPHREY) had telegraphed him, requesting that a list of mills that had closed down might be furnished. It was under these circumstances that the circular letter above reproduced was sent out to manufacturers.

It thus appears that the idea of attributing the depressed condition of the shingle business to the removal of the duty did not originate with the shingle producers. Inquiry was made among manufacturers by representatives of the Bureau of Corporations, as to whether or not the effect of the removal of the duty from shingles had been discussed among themselves. Most of them said it had not; a few said that it had not been discussed generally, but that they had heard the matter mentioned. As a matter of fact, not half of the mills responded to the request for information in regard to closing down. Not nearly all of the mills reported closed responded. The manager of the Red Cedar Shingle Manufacturers' Association stated that he secured information regarding many mills through other sources than the mills themselves. In other words, the shingle manufacturers were not enough interested in the tariff to answer the few questions on the postal card submitted to them, and some of those answering expressed disapproval of Mr. HUMPHREY's attitude. For instance, one of them wrote as follows:

"Closed most of the time for the past four years. Tell HUMPHREY to 'hump' himself on the currency bill and forget the tariff for a minute."

A very prominent and one of the best-informed men in the lumber and shingle business in the State of Washington, wrote upon the postal card returned by him:

"Do not think tariff has anything to do with shingle business. It is the manufacturers' fault, and they deserve what they are getting for not standing by an association."

Another stated that he did not expect to close, and suggested that Mr. HUMPHREY be told that he should devote his time to getting the currency bill through, as it would do more good than "baying at the tariff."

Still another, writing under date of November 26, 1913, among other things, said:

"Now, as our confidence in Congressman HUMPHREY, as a tariff regulator in the interest of the mills, is very limited, we are sending no information with this letter, but are sending our opinion and a few suggestions in regard to these matters.

"We say to h—l with the tariff. Let it regulate itself. If you want to help the shingle market, work along lines that will help the shingle market. One of these is to devise some plan of closing the mills in the large centers. It is very discouraging to the small millman to close down, as they have time after time, and see the big mills pounding along at full capacity. Get the large mills closed and there will be no trouble with the small ones. * * * This tariff game has been played long enough as a mask to fool us poor simps. If we are going to fight at all to prolong our short life in the shingle business, let us make our fight for something worth while.

"It is a fact that drying shingles, as we have to dry them, is very hurtful, and we do not much blame our eastern customers for using patent roofings. Why is it that we have to ruin our excellent products to get them to the eastern customer at a price which he can afford to pay? The railroads are making enormous profits from our products at present, and we are ruining our product, losing our trade to patent roofing, and at the same time paying these enormous dividends without a single kick. We think that our product would need no advertising in a few years if it were possible to sell it to our eastern customers in its natural state at a price that would not make them faint."

One of the largest shingle manufacturers in the State, and a close personal and political friend of Mr. HUMPHREY, stated that he did not agree with Mr. HUMPHREY in his "raising this political row over the tariff," and that about two weeks before he had written him to that effect.

Under date of November 21, 1913, a manufacturer replied to Mr. Traill's circular of November 19 as follows:

"We return herewith your card for statistics, but we have not filled it out, as we do not see any advantage in starting out Congressman HUMPHREY with any more misleading statistics. He has enough of that kind of dope in his files now. Our mill is closed, but we do not regard our shut-down as caused by the change in the tariff. We can make shingles in our mill as cheap as any mill we know in British Columbia, if the timber speculators will only get off our backs. The ridiculous prices that our laws here have encouraged for stumpage in this country is what is holding back our industry, and it is time for Congressman HUMPHREY to stop barking up the wrong tree and get after the 'nigger in the woodpile.'

"To my mind, the thing to work for now is free logs. The British Columbia men are starting to try and take full advantage of our tariff act by stopping log exportation altogether, and if they succeed they will then have us properly 'up a tree.' They have to keep timber cheap at home to beat us, and if we let them do it a tariff of $1 per M won't help us. Let Congressman HUMPHREY work for a law that will prohibit the importation into the United States of any wood product from a country that puts an export duty on timber. Then our mills will be able to run and our consumers can also get cheap lumber; no one will be hurt but the timber speculator both here and in British Columbia, and it is time for us to put him out of business."

The above letter appears to be a fair and frank statement of conditions. It strongly supports the conclusion that an unusual effort was made (whether at Mr. HUMPHREY'S instance or not is of no great importance) to magnify the fact that a number of shingle mills were closed and to leave an entirely erroneous impression as to the cause therefor.

THE CLOSE-DOWN CAMPAIGN AMONG SHINGLE MANUFACTURERS IN THE FALL OF 1913.

As will be shown hereafter, it is usual for the shingle mills to close down for longer or shorter periods practically every year. These close-downs are generally brought about by the systematic efforts of some official of the shingle manufacturers' association. Whenever prices begin to show weakness, mills are urged to restrict the output, either for the purpose of maintaining existing prices or for the purpose of advancing prices.

As early as September, 1913, the manager of the Red Cedar Shingle Manufacturers' Association began a campaign to bring about the closing down of the mills. This campaign was conducted in much the same manner as former ones had been, and the same argument was used with the mills as in former years, namely, that a restriction of output would result in better prices. On September 12, 1913, Mr. F. A. Traill wrote as follows to B. W. Bodine, Edgecomb, Wash.:

"Unless some decided curtailment takes place in the manufacture of shingles, we are going to see lower prices, but the reports we are getting in from the mills would indicate that we may get quite a material curtailment, which would unquestionably bring prices back to a more normal basis, although we can not hope for anything very good for the balance of this year."

Under date of September 18, 1913, Mr. Traill wrote the Carlson Shingle Co. as follows:

"We have your favor of the 10th instant, and note that you are in favor of a close-down. We are sorry that we can not get enough of the same opinion. We are, however, mighty glad to know that you are going to close down whether the others do it or not. If more of the mills would look at the situation in this light, the whole industry would be better off."

Under date of September 26 the following letter was addressed to C. B. Weatherwax, of the Drayton Bay Shingle Co., at Blaine, Wash.:

"Quite a number of the mills have closed, and we are sending out a circular to the mills to-day giving a review of the situation. With the closing of the lake navigation we will probably see lower prices, as that will turn all of the shingle into the rail territory. The Western Transit Co.'s rates are withdrawn the 30th of this month. The Grand Trunk have already withdrawn theirs. The Mutual Transit and Anchor Line will probably withdraw theirs very shortly, so that the prospects are decidedly poor. However, a good many mills have closed now that there seems to be little hope of any betterment in prices. The Anacortes mills are all closed at the present time."

On October 6 Mr. Traill wrote the Bear Creek Mill Co., at Snohomish, Wash., to the effect that the mills in Snohomish County had not been very eager to close down, but that there was a large number of mills closed in the balance of the State, probably one-third of them.

Apparently to encourage closing down and holding for better prices, Mr. Traill wrote Sturdevant & Pellerin, at Port Angeles, Wash., under date of October 8, 1913, as follows:

"The Canadian mills are holding their shingles at a higher price than our shingles, and as soon as the trade in the East finds out that they can not get any cheap stock from Canada they will probably begin to buy more freely."

The circular mentioned in Mr. Traill's letter of September 26, above quoted, among other things, contained the following:

"We are glad to advise that about 100 mills have already shut down and that more will close by the 1st of October. We understand the large Whatcom Falls Mill Co.'s plant expects to close in a few days, indefinitely. The Anacortes mills are all closed at present. There is no immediate prospect of any improvement in prices and will not be until the production is materially lessened. Will you kindly advise on inclosed postal card whether you are running or not and when you contemplate closing your plant for the winter, if at all?"

The circular continued by quoting prices at Indianapolis and Detroit, and stated that wholesalers were accepting business on the basis of $1.85 per thousand, in the belief that they would be able to cover these sales at $1.75 or less. It stated that the mills had only themselves to thank for present conditions and for the worse conditions that were almost sure to come. He pointed to the fact that the lake season was closing, that the transit companies connecting with water lines were refusing shipment, and that soon everything would be turned over to the weak all-rail market. The circular urged closing down the mills in order to help an industry which was needing help just then. It also called attention to the fact that reprints of articles from the Lumber World Review, dealing with the Birmingham matter, were being sent under separate cover.

The following is an extract from a circular dated September 6, 1913:

"If you are interested in the market and consider a close-down advisable, we will be glad to act as a clearing house for your views, and will advise just what reports are received from the mills generally. See your neighbors and talk the matter over. It looks as if this was the only solution, otherwise it is hard to say just where the market will go, probably to the place where you will close down, anyhow. It is just a question of whether it is better to close now and avoid lower prices or to wait until the lower prices force you to close. There is little question as to which is the sensible thing to do. Drop us a line with your view. That is to be done must be done quickly."

Writing to F. C. Wilcox, of the Wilcox Shingle Co., and who was also president of the Red Cedar Shingle Manufacturers' Association, under date of September 10, 1913, Mr. Traill said:

"Blair is out with a circular which you will undoubtedly get in this mail, trying to get the mills to close down. I am following it up with a circular of our own, and it would be just as well if the movement is really handled by some one outside, as it will not be so likely to incriminate the association in case of an investigation. Unless some step is taken to take a firm grip of the market there is no telling where it will stop."

A circular dated September 16, 1913, expresses some feeling of discouragement at the result of his efforts, and in this circular Mr. Traill stated that he was sorry that the effort to close the mills had not met with success. He stated that about 150 had signified their willingness to close, "but the Everett mills would close only if Clough-Hartley would close. Clough-Hartley would close only if other combination mills, particularly Seattle Cedar and Whatcom Falls, closed. Ballard would close only if Everett closed, and as it is apparently impossible to bring this about, the whole movement falls through."

Three days later Mr. Traill seemed to be more encouraged, and in a circular stated that half the mills in the State were closed, and 50 per cent of the balance, he understood, would be closed indefinitely before another week. This agitation for the closing of the mills was kept up through October and into November. In the meantime, the circular of November 19 had gone out. It was an appeal to arouse some interest among the shingle manufacturers on the tariff question. How it was received has already been shown. All these efforts, with the added weight of possible relief through Mr. HUMPHREY'S readiness to urge these bad conditions as a reason for some modification of the tariff, brought about a closing down of only about 55 per cent of the productive capacity of the mills. On December 2 Mr. Traill sent out the following circular:

"Inclosed you will find a list of the manufacturers of shingles we have a record of as being closed. If you are closed and your name is not on this list, will you please advise us?

"The list shows about 200 mills idle, with about 150 either running or not heard from. Undoubtedly a number of those not heard from are idle, and the probabilities are that only about 100 mills are operating. The bulk of these are on tidewater.

"Figuring one 10-block as 5 uprights, and 1 double-block as 3, and single-block as 2, the 200 mills closed represent the equivalent of about 700 upright machines.

"The mills running or not heard from represent about 600 machines. Of these 600 machines about 370 are tidewater mills, which are running (300 machines in straight shingle mills, 70 in combination mills). Only 58 machines in straight shingle mills and 58 in combination mills on tidewater are closed. Out of about 300 machines, or their equivalent in combination mills, 200 are closed, 100 running or not heard from. About half the capacity of the straight shingle mills are running. About one-third of the capacity of the combination mills are running. Over 75 per cent of the tidewater capacity is operating. Only about 30 per cent of the interior mills are running. A large percentage of the interior mills running will soon be down for several months on account of weather conditions."

A very significant fact brought out in the above circular is that only 116 machines in the tidewater mills were closed. The facts indicate that the mills in the interior that are usually compelled to close about this season of the year were down, whereas the mills at tidewater, which can run all the year, did not find conditions so desperate as to warrant them in closing their mills. Or, to put it another way, the mills that had to close, no matter how the market might be, were closed; and most of those that were situated so that they could secure supplies and run, were running. That this was not an unusual condition, and that the proportion of mills closed was not unusually large, will be shown hereafter.

As already stated, the reason urged for closing the mills was to insure better prices. It is interesting in this connection to note the reasons given for the bad price condition in the circulars sent out by the manager of the shingle association. As early as June, 1913, a circular was sent to the shingle manufacturers, in which was contained the following:

"The roofing people are making another drive at shingles in Birmingham, Ala. About a year ago, after a severe fight in which the cypress people spent over $1,000, an ordinance which would have prohibited the use of shingles anywhere in the city was defeated. The red-cedar industry at that time did not help in the campaign at all.

"A similar ordinance has been introduced again and has the support of the insurance people, the fire marshal, and a portion of the council, and if strong steps are not taken it may be put through. Mr. Rhodes, of the National Association, is on the ground helping in the fight against the ordinance. The cypress people did their part last time. It is up to the cedar manufacturers to help this time. If this ordinance goes through, it will only be the beginning of many others in other towns. If we win out in Birmingham, the moral effect will be tremendous. An extensive newspaper campaign is being organized in order to bring local support to help defeat the ordinance. This all costs money."

The above circular points to a condition that has greatly concerned shingle manufacturers for a number of years. The increasing use of roofing material other than shingles has been considered, and is to-day considered one of the most serious aspects of the shingle industry. The manufacturers have been urged to contribute to advertising funds, and their attention has been constantly directed to the inroads that other roofing materials are making in the business of the shingle producers. Under date of October 9, 1913, Mr. Traill sent to the shingle manufacturers of Washington a circular of considerable length, in which is given a general view of the substitute roofing problem. In that circular he quotes extracts from letters received from salesmen. The circular follows:

"If you have read carefully 'Facts about shingle roofs,' you will realize a little of what we are having to face as an industry. Milwaukee has joined the ranks of the cities prohibiting the use of shingles in the city limits; Grand Rapids has an ordinance of the same nature introduced; a number of cities in the South and in Texas have passed such ordinances; and the competitive roofing people, assisted by the fire underwriters and fire marshals, are pushing the matter. We should have expert chemists working on the proposition of fireproofing shingles. The State university is willing to undertake the investigation, and advise they are sure they can easily find some satisfactory method of making shingles practically fireproof, but it takes money. We want not less than one-half cent per thousand from every manufacturer of shingles to push the advertising campaign. Why should you wait to be individually asked for this? Why not realize not only the necessity for your doing so, but the tremendous advantage you will gain by it? It is not a philanthropic movement; it is a purely selfish one, as, if something is not done, and done quickly, we may as well figure on the shingle market gradually dropping out of sight.

"One of our salesmen writes: 'Things are working against shingle roofs in this territory. Some of the largest cities have passed ordinances not permitting shingle roofs within the city limits. This is the rule in Milwaukee and other cities. The roofing men have worked harder to put their stuff on the market than any shingle companies ever did, and they have a big portion of the business away from the shingle manufacturers.' There is no question in my mind but what the capacity for making red cedar shingles is altogether too great under present conditions, and we believe it means disaster to the manufacturers of red cedar shingles if they continue to manufacture as much in the future as they have in the past, because, on account of the large amount of prepared roofings and metal roofings of the different kinds, and also due to the fact that parties interested in these other kinds of roofing have convinced the public to a certain extent that a shingle roof is not safe, you will find a big falling off in your demand for shingles. They are making in this locality cement shingles. They are also making shingles out of felt saturated with asphalt, and making them different colors, so they appeal to the man who is building a cottage or a house. They have all kinds of schemes to appeal to the buyer of shingles. Then, there is a lot of metal roofing used, more now than there has been; so there is no doubt but what you will find the demand for wooden shingles less. Now, you have requested me to give you what information I could in regard to this, and I would not make the above statement had I not given the matter a great deal of thought. We used to sell 75,000,000 white cedar shingles a year in addition to the large amount of red cedar shingles we handled. Now we could not possibly dispose of this amount; but if it were not for the prepared roofings used in the retail yards in Wisconsin we could have increased our trade on shingles.

"Another salesman writes as follows: 'The low prices do not come entirely from the fact that no stock is being used, but partly from the fact that there is being so much other stock besides wooden shingles sold for roofing. I know some dealers who, nearly half of what business they have done this year in shingles, have handled other stock than wooden shingles.'

"These extracts are typical of others and give good reasons why our market is in the shape it is."

Again, under date of October 23, Mr. Traill issued a circular in which he called attention to the startling reduction in the production of shingles between 1909 and 1911. He pointed out that, in spite of the growth in population and increase in building, the production of shingles had been reduced 18½ per cent. He stated that it could only be attributed to the tremendous advertising campaign of the substitute-roofing people and to the fact that the shingle manufacturers had done nothing to counteract it. Under date of November 15, 1913, he said:

"Evidence accumulates daily as to the tremendous inroads made by substitute roofings in our product. One of our best salesmen writes us as follows: 'There is one thing that is likely to seriously affect demand; there is an increasing tendency to use substitutes for wooden shingles—asbestos, asphalt, and numerous other kinds of shingles. Some of our customers, formerly large buyers, have entirely cut out wooden shingles.'"

It will be noted that up to this time the troubles of the shingle man were attributed largely to competition from other roofing materials, and that the tariff was not mentioned as being a factor. Under date of October 11, 1913, in a letter addressed to F. C. Wilcox, of Aberdeen, Wash., Mr. Traill said:

"The British Columbia mills are not going to create very much disturbance in our market right away. They had a meeting a few days ago, and Hastings reported that he was getting business from the States on the basis of $2.25, Joseph Chew on the basis of $2.20, and Albert Cotton on the basis of $2.15. Parties who have been up in B. C. investigating the situation advise that it seems as though it was going to be impossible to buy any B. C. shares at less than $2 mill basis. They are expecting to get more for their stock than for our ordinary Washington grades, and Davidson, Chew, and those who are better known will undoubtedly get it. Just whether they will be able to get a great deal of business at better than 25 cents over our market is a question, and we do not believe that they will sell a great deal of stock at $2.20 or $2.25, with quotations out on Washington shingles at $1.85 and less. There is no question, however, but that when our market strengthens to the point that British Columbia shingles can be had at about 10 cents over our Washington stock that we will begin to feel the competition very keenly, and it will probably result in holding our market down unless there is a strong demand to a basis of about $1.90 or possibly $2. If there should come up a reasonably good demand, it might be possible to do better than this, but without a strong demand it does not look possible that we will be able to do better than above indications."

While the tariff is not mentioned in the above letter, it may be that Mr. Traill had it in mind when he said, "When our market strengthens to the point that B. C. shingles can be had at about 10 cents over our Washington stock, that we will begin to feel the competition very keenly." The above letter is a practical admission that the British Columbia manufacturer is able to get a better price than the Washington manufacturer, and that if the British Columbia price is maintained at about a difference of 25 cents per thousand over American shingles, the Washington manufacturers would not have much to fear. After the distribution of the Humphrey circular and the furnishing of the list of mills to Mr. HUMPHREY, the manager of the association continued to impress upon the minds of shingle manufacturers the importance of restricting the output. Under date of December 16 he called attention to the fact that the closing of so many mills had materially stiffened the market, and stated that, with further curtailment due for the holidays, he looked for some advance, and that if the curtailment should continue for at least 30 days they might expect better things for a while. Under the same date he said:

"The opening of the canal may bring us a decided improvement. It will open the way for a large percentage of our tidewater output to be shipped green or partially air dried by the canal. The greatest general objection to our shingles in the East is on account of excessive drying, and if this will be the means of overcoming this it will be a good thing and may bring about the shipment of green or partially dried stock by rail. This matter is being discussed with the railroads and a special green-shingle rate may be evolved. There are many difficulties in the way, but they can probably be overcome. This would avoid the many complaints that arise from washboard and split shingles as well as the song, 'The life is dried out.'"

It is important to note that Mr. Traill above suggests that the greatest objection to American shingles is their excessive dryness, and that he hopes when the canal is opened the shingles can be shipped green, and thereby remove this objection. It is a notorious fact that many of the complaints against American shingles are because, as Mr. Traill says, "the life is dried out." Further along in the circular he urges the mills to close as soon as possible for the holidays, and to stay down as long as possible. He also says that there is practically nothing running but the tidewater mills. It should not be forgotten in this connection, however, that the tidewater mills embrace a very large proportion of the producing capacity of the State. Again, on December 30, Mr. Traill makes an appeal to the shingle manufacturers to contribute to an advertising fund to meet the competition of substitute roofing. He calls attention to the fact that the General Roofing Co., which he calls "one of our principal competitors," spends about 5 per cent for advertising, and that the customary appropriation of business concerns for advertising purposes ranges from 2 to 5 per cent. He calls attention to the successful advertising campaign of the cypress manufacturers, and also to the fact that there are probably 20 roofing concerns, each of which is spending more than all the shingle industry of Washington combined, and that a number of these competitive roofing concerns are spending over $100,000 per year. Under date of January 14, 1914, a circular sent out by Mr. Traill contained the following:

"There never has been a time in the history of the shingle industry when there was as great a necessity for the manufacturers to get together to discuss their needs as now. The inroads made upon our market by the substitute roofings, together with the removal of the duty on shingles, permitting British Columbia shingles to come in free, have raised problems we all will have to face and which should be discussed fully and frankly."

It will be noted that in the above communication Mr. Traill refers to the removal of the duty on shingles and alludes to it as one of the problems that the American shingle manufacturer will have to face. This is the first and only direct reference made to the tariff in any of Mr. Traill's circulars, except the one that was sent out at the instance of Mr. HUMPHREY. It is clear from the foregoing that the shingle manufacturers themselves regarded the competition of substitute roofings as the principal cause for the depressed condition in their industry, and that they did not regard the tariff as being "largely responsible" for the falling off of the demand for shingles and consequent depression in the price.

CONDITIONS IN 1912.

While Mr. HUMPHREY, in his letter addressed to the Secretary under date of December 15, 1913, did not refer to conditions in the shingle industry in 1912, yet in his speech delivered in the House of Representatives on December 16 he said:

"A little more than a year ago, when I was making my campaign for reelection, I found that the lumber and shingle industry of my State was in the most prosperous condition it had ever been. There were more men employed in those mills than ever before. They were receiving higher wages than ever before. There was a greater demand for labor than ever before. There was more capital invested in that industry than ever before. The output was greater than ever before. I told the men who were working in those mills, night after night, that if the Democratic Party went into power and carried out the promises of its platform they would be thrown out of employment or have their wages reduced." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Dec. 16, 1913, pp. 989, 990.)

This allusion to conditions in 1912 makes it necessary to submit some facts pertinent to the situation at that time. It will be shown that there were not "more men employed in those mills than ever before," and that the output was not "greater than ever before." In fact, it will be shown that practically every statement made in the above quotation is incorrect.

During the latter half of 1911 the shingle market was in a very depressed condition. The year 1912 opened with extra stars selling at about $1.35 a thousand and extra clears at $1.70 at the mill. By the end of March the market was showing great firmness, and before the end of May stars were selling at about $1.55 and extra clears at $1.87. There was a continuous and rather rapid advance, and by September stars sold as high as $2.15 a thousand and clears as high as $2.50. Before the end of October there was a heavy decline, and stars sold as low as $1.75 and clears as low as $2, and by November 15 prices were as low as $1.50 for stars and $1.90 for clears. This rapid decline in the price excited the interest of the manager and trustees of the Red Cedar Shingle Manufacturers' Association, and there was begun a campaign to induce the mills to close. Under date of September 24, 1912, the manager addressed a circular "To the shingle manufacturers," and inclosed a postal card, upon which he requested that the mills would express their willingness to close for two weeks beginning on Monday, September 30. He urged that since prices had been good the mills could better afford to close than they could in previous years. Under date of September 27 the manager of the association reported an excellent response to the request to close down the mills, and stated that 90 per cent of the reports received to that time had been favorable. He enumerates a number of instances in which the mills were closed and other instances where promises of closing had been made. Under date of September 30 he reported that "we have nearly, if not quite, 75 per cent of the mills of the State from the standpoint of numbers, and more than that in output, as practically all of the large mills of the State are down." He stated that he was glad to advise that the close-down was progressing better than had been expected. On October 3 he reported that additional mills were closing every day. Reports of the above character continued to be made until October 25. The manager advised the mills that owing to the lack of sufficient support from the combination mills (a combination mill is one that produces both lumber and shingles) a number of the straight shingle mills (that is, mills making shingles only) had already resumed, and others would resume on Monday, the 28th. Under the same date, however, the manager urged the members of the association to remain closed if they could. On November 14 the manufacturers were advised that the shingle situation looked decidedly better, and that they were beginning to feel the effects of the curtailment. Regret was expressed that the close-down did not last until after election. It was also urged at this time that the manufacturers indicate on a postal card whether they were running or not and, if running, what curtailment they expected to make during the winter.

The above information was corroborated by individual statements made by a great many shingle manufacturers. The large mills at Ballard, Everett, Bellingham, and other points, and small mills in every section of the State were closed during a large part of the month of October, 1912. Mr. HUMPHREY'S statement to the effect that more men were employed and that the output was greater at the time he was making his campaign than ever before was absolutely incorrect. It is true that at the very time Mr. HUMPHREY was making his campaign many of the mills were closed, and that the mills in the very towns where he made some of his speeches were closed at the time the speeches were made. A prominent citizen of Washington, and one interested in the manufacture of shingles, stated that Mr. HUMPHREY made what might be considered his great tariff speech at Lynden, and that it was received with such coolness, if not distavor, that from that time forward he was forced to abandon a discussion of the tariff and devote his time to generalities.

The statement that more shingles were being produced in 1912 than at any other time is not borne out by the facts. As a matter of fact, the production of shingles in the United States has declined slowly since 1909, and there was a smaller production in 1912 than there was in 1908. The production of cedar shingles, which is practically confined to the State of Washington, was about 600,000,000 less in 1912 than in 1910, and more than 130,000,000 less than in 1911.

It is not true that in October, 1912, the time when Mr. HUMPHREY was active in his campaign, more men were employed in the lumber and shingle industry than ever before. A large proportion of the shingle mills were closed at that time, and necessarily many men must have been idle. Neither is it true that the men were receiving higher wages than ever before. The rates of wages in the shingle industry have remained practically unchanged since 1908. The employees of shingle mills have a strong organization, and most of the mills employ union labor. Those that do not employ union labor, with the exception of one group of mills, pay not less than the minimum union scale. The wages paid in the shingle mills in 1912 were no higher than the wages that have been paid since. Nearly all the mills were paying the union scale at that time, and they are doing it to-day. There has been no cut in the pay of men employed in this industry, and employers assert positively that there will not be. In fact, they say on account of the strength of the union there can not be.

CLOSING OF THE SHINGLE MILLS IN 1911 AND PREVIOUS YEARS.

It has already been stated that the closing down of the shingle mills in 1913 was not an unusual condition. It has been shown that in 1912, during a portion of which year the prices of shingles were abnormally high, the mills also closed. As a matter of fact, closing down of shingle mills in the State of Washington at some time in each year is a normal condition. During the winter season a large proportion of shingle mills, particularly those in the interior, are forced to close because of weather conditions. Everyone familiar with the shingle industry knows these facts, and no doubt they were known to Mr. HUMPHREY. Various shingle manufacturers stated to representatives of the Bureau of Corporations that most of the mills under normal conditions would not run more than 10 months during any year. Mr. Charles E. Patton, president of the Atlas Lumber & Shingle Co., at Seattle, Wash., stated under oath before the Interstate Commerce Commission in February 1913, that—

"There has never been a year in 15 years when the shingle mills in this State have run steadily. We can produce in this State, or could 6 or 8 years ago * * * in 6 months all the shingles that are consumed in the United States—cedar shingles—in a year."

Later on in his testimony Mr. Patton, in answer to a question propounded by his attorney, reiterated the above fact in the following language:

"There has never been a year in 12 or 15 years that we have not had mills close down among the shingle manufacturers on account of sudden decline—close the mills until the price had gotten to within the cost of manufacture."

In answer to the following question by his counsel, "So there is no such thing as 12 months' operation, is there, or steady operation of shingle mills," he replied: "There has never been of the straight shingle mills; never can be." As to the small mills, Mr. Patton said:

"Smaller mills, never has been, never can be. There are lone mills which are running the entire year, because they will sell regardless of price and keep going, but the majority in it—the large majority of the mills—are forced to close some time of the year on account of low prices."

Henry S. Stine, of Seattle, wholesale lumber and shingle dealer, and who is also interested in the production of lumber and shingles, in his testimony given before the Interstate Commerce Commission in March, 1913, corroborated the testimony of Mr. Patton. When asked by his attorney whether or not the closing down of shingle mills was a regular feature of the industry, Mr. Stine said:

"With some mills it is, but we don't have spasmodic close-downs. The mills, as a rule, close down for a week or two by the 4th of July and the holidays."

When asked as to conditions in the winter he said, "They close down by the 1st of December until, possibly, February." Being questioned further as to whether or not there are regular close-downs every year, he said, "Yes; in which possibly 50 or 60 per cent participate. The tidewater mills, as a rule, run the year round."

The above testimony by these two representative shingle men can be corroborated by the statements of every shingle producer in the State of Washington. Perhaps 50 manufacturers were questioned along this line, and there was no variation in their statements to the effect that not only do a large proportion of the mills close every year, but that it is a physical impossibility for many of them to operate continuously for 12 months.

The above testimony, to the effect that annual closing down is the rule, and that in the very nature of the case it must be so, is borne out by the history of the shingle industry as given in the records of the various shingle manufacturers' associations and in the lumber trade journals. In 1899 from 75 to 85 per cent of the mills were closed during the first 10 days of July; beginning November 11 there was a close-down involving 95 per cent of the mills and lasting about three months. During the first half of April, 1900, about 200 mills, representing approximately 75 per cent of the total number in the State, were closed; beginning May 16, over 90 per cent were reported closed for a period of 20 days; and in November a close-down began, involving 132 mills, which were closed about two months. A close-down in August, 1901, involved more than 175 mills; in the latter part of November the mills again began to close; during the first half of December 50 per cent were reported closed. Early in January, 1902, 80 per cent were reported down, and by February 1, 95 per cent were closed; there was a two weeks' close-down beginning May 17, involving 171 mills; at the Fourth of July period 100 mills were reported closed for 10 days; on December 24 more than 60 per cent of the mills closed down for 10 days.

The year 1902 was an unusually prosperous one both in the lumber and shingle business. Dullness in the shingle market led to a close-down beginning July 3, 1903, which involved about 75 per cent of the mills and lasted from 10 to 30 days; again, the 1st of November, the mills began to close and remained closed until the middle of January, 1904; during November, from 20 to 25 per cent were down, and after the 1st of December from 50 to 65 per cent were idle. Beginning March 12, 1904, more than 260 mills were closed for about 20 days; there is in the possession of the Bureau of Corporations a list of 259 mills that were closed at this time; this list, however, does not contain the names of all the mills closed at that time. On April 23 another close-down began which lasted two weeks and involved about 20 per cent of the mills; there was curtailment of production during the month of July. An extensive close-down began the 1st of December, 1905, and continued for 60 days; on December 28, 259 were closed. It is interesting to note that at this time each signer of the close-down agreement deposited with the president of the Shingle Mills Bureau a certified check of $50 for each upright machine, which check was to be forfeited in case the agreement was broken. The Shingle Mills Bureau reported that 92 per cent of the producing capacity of the State was closed. May 16, 1906, a close-down began which lasted 15 days, during which 365 mills were reported closed; it is interesting to note in this connection that the Shingle Mills Bureau, in June, 1906, adopted an annual close-down agreement, effective for two years, whereby the mills were to be closed from December 16 to March 1. Pursuant to this curtailment program, a close-down began December 15 and lasted 60 days, during the first 30 days of which period 75 per cent of the mills were reported closed. June 1, 1907, a close-down began which lasted about six weeks, during which from 60 to 80 per cent of the mills were closed; the 1st of November, weak market conditions led to a close-down which lasted almost four months and included at different periods from 50 to 95 per cent of the mills. About June 15, 1908, approximately 85 per cent of the mills were reported closed for more than a month; and in the latter part of November another close-down began which lasted four months, and according to reports at different times from 40 to 98 per cent of the mills were closed. In July, 1909, there was a close-down which lasted about two weeks; the latter part of November a close-down began which lasted more than three months, during which from 70 to 75 per cent of the mills were reported closed. A close-down began April 21, 1910, and lasted for 30 days, during which 300 mills were shut down; at this time about 9,000 men were reported out of employment; early in September a large number of mills were closed and remained idle for about six weeks, and during the Christmas holidays 80 per cent of the mills were closed for one week. In 1911 the manufacturers entered into a signed agreement to close their mills one day per week; this curtailment extended from June 3 to September 2; in addition to this, a complete shut-down, involving 90 per cent of the mills, began August 12 and continued for two weeks; during the latter part of November the mills began to close down; this lasted about three months and involved at different times from 50 to 80 per cent of the mills.

From 1899 to 1912, inclusive, there were at least 34 occasions when a considerable number, and often a very large number, of the shingle mills in Washington were closed. The main reason assigned for most of these close-downs was unsatisfactory prices. It is a fact, however, that many of them would have been forced to close on account of weather conditions, no matter what the price situation might have been.

The attempt to leave the impression that the close-down of the mills in the latter part of 1913 was an exceptional occurrence is evidence of a purpose to mislead. It is a notorious fact that when the rate of duty on shingles was 30 cents a thousand, from 1897 down to 1909, the mills were frequently closed; that after the increase of duty from 30 cents to 50 cents per thousand conditions among the mills, so far as closing down was concerned, did not change, and that when the duty was entirely removed, in 1913, the mills closed in the fall, just as they had done in every year for the past 10 or 12 years, and just as prominent shingle men declared under oath had been the condition through the history of the industry and which would continue to be the condition.

CAUSES LEADING TO CLOSE-DOWN IN DECEMBER, 1913.

As already shown, a large proportion of the shingle mills close every year, particularly during the midwinter months. It has also been shown that the list of mills submitted by Mr. HUMPHREY in his letter to the Secretary of Commerce was not an unusually long one. In fact, that list does not represent the closing of as many mills as has been the case in a number of other years.

It was not practicable to investigate the causes for closing down all of these mills. Inquiry was made in regard to 87 of the 194 mills included in the list. This represents approximately 45 per cent of the total number. The reasons assigned for the closing of these 87 mills are as follows:

Usually close at this season of the year	29
Owned by bankrupt concerns or concerns which were in financial distress and which have been for some time past	7
Cut all their timber and had quit operations for that reason	15
Closed by high price of logs and low price of bevel siding	3

(Of these three it is believed that the real reason for two of these mills closing was on account of financial difficulties caused by poor management.)

Mills which owned their own timber, which they preferred holding for higher prices 10
Were burned 10

(Of these 10, 3 are being rebuilt, or will be in the near future.)

Were closed for repairs 8

(The majority of these are now running again, and one or two of the plants will resume operations before the 1st of March. One of these is not only undergoing repairs, but is being considerably enlarged.)

Were not closed 3
Were closed for a short time, but started again before Jan. 1 2

In regard to the 29 mills reported as being usually closed at this season of the year, it should be pointed out that mills falling in this class close for various reasons. Many of them are located in the foothills, and operations are hindered by snow. Some of these, however, will soon open again. One of these has recently entered into a contract with the Government for furnishing it more than 40,000 cords of shingle bolts.

It is particularly significant that, in order to obtain a list of 194 mills closed, it was necessary to include therein those mills that are always forced to close on account of weather conditions, those that were compelled to close because they had no timber, those that were burned, and those that were bankrupt or in financial distress. In this connection, it should be pointed out that the history of the shingle industry discloses the fact that many concerns have failed in all the past, either from bad management or from some other cause, and that, therefore, the bankruptcy of a few shingle manufacturers at this time can not be attributed to the removal of the duty. At least three mills in the list were not closed at all. It is not thought that these mills that were running were placed in the list with design. Mr. Traill, the manager of the Red Cedar Shingle Manufacturers' Association, stated that a number of mills included in the list did not report to him directly, and that they were placed in the list upon what he considers absolutely reliable information obtained from various sources.

These 87 mills are distributed in practically every shingle-producing section of the State. They include both large and small mills. It is particularly significant that not one assigned the removal of the duty as a reason for closing.

EFFECT OF THE REMOVAL OF THE DUTY ON SHINGLES.

Careful inquiry was made among shingle manufacturers as to whether the placing of shingles upon the free list was largely responsible, or in any measure responsible, for the depressed condition of the industry during the latter part of 1913 and the early part of 1914. The general consensus of opinion, as expressed by a great majority of the shingle producers seen, is to the effect that the removal of the duty has been a factor in bringing about present conditions, but that these conditions are not largely due to such removal. An important fact to take into consideration in this connection is that nearly all of the shingle manufacturers of the State of Washington are protectionists; that they have been taught, and many of them believe, that a duty on shingles is necessary to the prosperity of the industry. Their attitude of mind is entirely antagonistic to free trade, or even low tariffs. Having conducted their business in an atmosphere of this sort, it is to be expected that they would naturally have prejudices in favor of a protective duty on their product. Notwithstanding this, however, it is notable that not one among all the number interviewed was willing to say that the depressed condition of the industry is due largely to the removal of the duty, nor was one found who was willing to predict that the industry would be ruined unless the duty was restored. The proportion of the shingle manufacturers seen who expressed the opinion that the removal of the duty has had nothing to do with existing conditions in the industry was small. Of course, the only competition feared by the shingle manufacturers of the Pacific coast is that that may come from British Columbia. While many unsupported statements have been made as to the vast difference in the cost of producing shingles in the United States and in Canada, the facts seem to be that, outside of an advantage in the cost of logs, the American shingle manufacturer has little to fear from the manufacturers of British Columbia. Some facts relating to this phase of the industry are discussed elsewhere in this report. More shingles were imported into the United States during the months of November and December, 1913, than during any other two months within the past three years. The increase, however, has not been as great as some protectionists predicted, nor have the imports very greatly exceeded those of some other months in past years. For instance, only about 10,000,000 more shingles were imported in December, 1913, than in December, 1911. The total importations for the year 1913 were not as great by some 26,000,000 as the total importations for the year 1911. This latter is a significant fact when considered in connection with the further fact that during 1911 the price of shingles at the mills in the United States was unusually low.

Typical expressions of opinion as gathered from a great number of shingle producers are here given. The president of one of the largest shingle-producing concerns in the State of Washington, a man who has had a wide experience in the lumber and shingle industry, one who has been prominent in Republican politics for a number of years, and one whose judgment receives the greatest consideration of other shingle manufacturers, said in substance:

"He did not know what was the cause of the present depressed conditions in the lumber and shingle business; that he did not know why any mill was closed down; and that he does not believe that any man actually knows the causes of the present conditions. He is a protectionist and a dyed-in-the-wool Republican, and has had a large experience in politics. He does not believe that the present conditions in the shingle business are due to the removal of the tariff entirely. It may be that the tariff has had some effect. He states that he does not believe in howling calamity. The shingle business will not be ruined by the tariff; cedar shingles will be manufactured in Washington; the British Columbia manufacturer can not supply the entire market of the United States.

"While he states that he does not believe that the present depressed condition in the shingle business is entirely due to the tariff, or even in a large measure due to the tariff, he does believe that it had some effect. The principal influence, so far, has been that the retail dealers have withheld their orders, and that there has not been a normal demand. He believes that it is entirely too soon to tell exactly what the effects of the removal of the duty will be. He is sure that the shingle manufacturer will be hurt considerably unless he can get logs from the Canadian side without paying an export duty."

Another large manufacturer, who operates two mills and who is planning to build a third, expressed the opinion that, if Canada would allow the free exportation of logs to the United States, American mills located on tidewater would be able to compete with Canada. He said that, while other shingle manufacturers had talked in favor of a duty on shingles, he had taken no part, because he believes there is little difference between the cost of production in the two countries. Continuing, he said, in substance:

"He does not know to what extent the removal of the tariff has affected the shingle business. He is of the opinion that the demand is less than it would have been had there been no tariff agitation. The American retailer has not been buying shingles, waiting to see what effect, if any, the removal of the duty will have upon the price of shingles. At the present time there is some improvement in both demand and price."

Both of the manufacturers above referred to operate mills at tidewater. A large interior manufacturer, who has been very prominent as an official in the various shingle manufacturers' organizations for several years, expressed himself substantially as follows:

"The greatest bear factor in the shingle business is overproduction. The mills make too many shingles. To the extent that shingles are imported and thus affect the supply, to that extent do importations affect the market; and the removal of the duty has undoubtedly increased importations from Canada. He believes that the price of shingles in the United States will be lower than at present. The removal of the duty will be the main factor in bringing about this condition. He thinks that the effect of this removal will be more pronounced later on than at present. The Canadian mills will gradually build up a trade in the United States. While this condition is to be expected, at the same time the tendency now is for slightly higher prices. The difference between the cost of producing shingles in Canada and in the United States will widen from year to year. The Canadian timber is cheaper, better in quality, and more accessible. Labor is also cheaper. The timber in the United States is becoming scarcer, poorer in quality, and less accessible. At the present time clear shingles in Canada are worth about $1.95, while here they are worth about $1.80. The Canadian shingle is better than the American product."

A manufacturer who operates a tidewater mill in Washington and an interior mill in British Columbia expressed himself to the effect:

"That in his opinion the removal of the duty from shingles has had practically nothing to do with the decline in price. The history of the shingle business shows that declines similar to those in the fall of 1913 have occurred frequently. Prices were as low, even lower, in 1911, when the duty was 50 cents per thousand, than they have been since."

A former official of the Shingle Manufacturers' Association said:

"There is no reason to suppose that the removal of the duty from shingles in October, 1913, has had anything to do with prices that shingle manufacturers have since then received for their products. The lowest prices that the mills have received for shingles in a number of years were obtained since the going into effect of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, which provided for the highest duty on shingles ever known. In 1911, Star shingles sold as low as $1.35 at the mill. They have not been lower than that for a great many years."

One manufacturer stated that just after the passage of the tariff bill of 1909 his company went into New England, where the best shingle trade was largely in the hands of Canadian mills. The 50-cent duty imposed by that law enabled them to enter the New England market, and they practically drove the Canadians out of that business. He says that they held this trade until the duty was removed in 1913, and that now they have very little business in the East. He stated, however, that up to this time the Canadian mills have not cut prices, but if they meet the price of the American mills they will get the business. It should be stated in this connection that this mill produces very high grade shingles, and that only shingles of high grade are used in any considerable quantities in New England.

A manufacturer who is connected with a concern that sells the output of 15 or 20 mills said that he did not know just what effect the removal of the duty had upon the shingle market. He is of the opinion that it has had some effect, largely due to the fact that the retail dealers have been waiting to see what effect the removal of the duty would have on prices. Consequently there was not a normal demand during the latter part of 1913. There have been some shingles shipped in from Canada, but not in large quantities. As a matter of fact, there has been little demand for shingles at all. He does not believe that the removal of the duty will permanently injure the shingle business, certainly not to any great extent. He considers it too early to decide what the effect of the removal of the duty will be. He thinks it will probably lead to a larger use of high-grade shingles, which will, of course, limit the consumption of American shingles. He says that shingles were imported when the duty was 30 cents and were still imported when the duty was 50 cents a thousand. The American dealer readily paid a premium for Canadian shingles. At present the Canadian manufacturer can only sell his shingles to the trade which is willing to pay a premium price.

Another manufacturer, in speaking of the ability of the Canadian manufacturer to sell in the American market, said:

"Prior to 1909, when the tariff was 30 cents a thousand on shingles, they had considerable competition on premium shingles from the Hastings Shingle Manufacturing Co. (Ltd.), of Vancouver, British Columbia. This company manufactures a high-grade shingle and were able to sell their shingles in the United States after paying a 30-cent tariff and still obtain a higher price than that paid for American shingles. He considers that the tariff on shingles should never have been increased from 30 to 50 cents. Almost immediately following the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, which increased the tariff on shingles from 30 to 50 cents, there was a most lamentable falling off in price; some Canadian shingles were still imported into the United States and were sold in Illinois territory for $3.80 per 1,000 when the American premium shingle was being sold for $3.50."

An official of one of the largest shingle concerns in the State and a man who has prominently interested himself in tariff matters, and who has represented the industry before committees in Congress, said in substance:

"That he could not say that the tariff had caused the present depressed condition of the shingle industry and the lumber industry. As a matter of fact, there have always been frequent depressions in the shingle business, the primary cause of which is too many shingles.

"If the importations of shingles from Canada are increased because of the removal of the duty, naturally he would expect the industry to be adversely affected at home. Every car of shingles imported necessarily displaces a car of domestic production."

A very active and intelligent leader in organized-labor circles, who has taken a deep interest in the affairs of the operatives in the shingle mills, in speaking of the tariff, said in substance:

"That he did not believe it had any effect whatever. He said that in 1908 there was great depression in the shingle industry, as well as in business generally. The shingle manufacturers agreed that if they could secure higher rate of duty (which was then 30 cents per thousand), it would greatly help their business. They induced the union to use their influence to bring about an increase in the import duty. In 1909 the duty was raised to 50 cents per thousand. One of the arguments used to influence the union to assist in bringing about an increase in the rate of duty was that it would make it unnecessary to reduce wages. As a matter of fact, however, the passage of the Payne-Aldrich law was immediately followed by efforts on the part of the manufacturers to reduce wages. This resulted in strikes everywhere. There never has been a time when the union has had a harder struggle than it had in the latter part of 1909, after the duty had been raised from 30 cents to 50 cents. Since that time union men have not been very enthusiastic over tariff matters."

An official of the Red Cedar Shingle Manufacturers' Association, when asked the following question: "Do you think the manufacturers' ills are entirely due to the removal of the tariff?" said: "No. Supply and demand has a good deal to do with it, and the consumer has not been benefited by it."

This official stated in the presence of 25 or more shingle manufacturers, and also in the presence of representatives of the Bureau of Corporations, that immediately after the removal of the duty buying was stopped. That started a poor market. Since that time shingles have been as low as $1.65 for clears, which resulted in a closing down of about 80 per cent of the outputs of the mills. Those mills have all been down until possibly within a week or 10 days (prior to January 23). The reason for starting is not because market conditions are any better, but the mills had all shipped their product out pretty well, and this is the time when business is to be expected. He said:

"I am not prepared to say that the tariff has anything to do with it at all. Six months or eight months prior to the tariff having come off Canada had a panic and their buying had ceased almost absolutely. Prior to that the mills had marketed their product. I guess the Canadian mills were universally down for six or eight months in 1913, when we were running and enjoying a fair business. They could not get over here. Thirty days before that tariff came off the British Columbia mills started up."

At a conference with between 25 and 40 representative shingle manufacturers in Seattle on the evening of January 23, 1914, the question was presented as to whether or not the depressed conditions in the latter part of 1913 were brought about by any factor that was not present in bringing about similar conditions in 1911. As a matter of fact, the question was never frankly answered. There appeared to be a disposition on the part of the spokesmen for the shingle producers to evade the question. One said: "Can't tell until we go through with it." Another said: "No one claimed that a duty of 50 cents a thousand enabled the shingle producer to obtain 50 cents more for his shingles." Finally it was suggested to the manufacturers that the trouble is that too many people are making shingles. A prominent operator present replied, "That is true."

That the removal of the duty has had some effect in bringing Canadian shingles into American markets can not be denied. The figures for imports show this clearly. A representative of one of the most efficient shingle mills at Vancouver, British Columbia, stated to a representative of this bureau that when the duty on shingles was 30 cents per thousand they had a considerable trade in the United States; after that duty was increased to 50 cents they had only a very small business in this country; since the removal of the duty entirely they are receiving orders from this country. He stated, however, that they made as good shingles as are to be found anywhere, and that many consider their product the best that goes on the market. At the time this statement was made—January 26, 1914—the shingles from this mill were being sold at $1.90 for one grade and $2.20 for another. The higher price is for what is known as 100 per cent clear, all vertical grain. The $1.90 price for these Canadian shingles is fairly comparable with the $1.80 price for American clears. This indicates that the Canadian manufacturer, because of the excellent reputation of his product, is able to obtain a better price than the American manufacturer can obtain for substantially the same quality.

A few manufacturers expressed some fear of future competition from Canada. They expressed the belief that, on account of cheaper timber and possibly cheaper labor, American manufacturers will erect mills in Canada; that this will increase the Canadian production, and with these mills in the hands of Americans who are familiar with American markets there will be a character of competition that has never yet been felt. The Canadian manufacturer is not considered so aggressive as the American. Of course this is pure conjecture. As will be shown later, two or three Americans who operate mills in both countries say that it costs as much to produce shingles in British Columbia as it does in the State of Washington. Another manufacturer who went to British Columbia with the view of locating a mill there came back determined not to do so, because he felt he would not have any advantage. He is now constructing a new mill in the State of Washington.

It is a significant fact that, notwithstanding the removal of the duty, and notwithstanding the alleged dread of Canadian competition, a number of shingle mills in the State of Washington are enlarging or preparing to enlarge their capacity, and some new mills are projected. In fact, one of the projected new mills will have the largest capacity of any shingle mill in the world.

In connection with this discussion of the effect of a tariff on the shingle industry, it is interesting to note some of the arguments used in favor of an increase in the duty as presented to Congress in 1909. Perhaps the chief spokesman for the shingle men at this time was J. H. Bloedel, then, as now, a large shingle manufacturer in Bellingham, Wash. In a brief submitted by Mr. Bloedel in 1909 he called attention to the marked decrease in the production of shingles from 1905 to 1908. He pointed out that the production in the State of Washington in 1905 was 52,550 cars, and for 1908 (estimated) 36,000 cars. Claim was then made that Canadian competition was strangling the industry. He pointed to the increased importations of Canadian shingles from year to year, and called attention to the fact that these importations had increased from 5 cars in 1900 to 1,315 cars in 1908. These facts were offered in support of the contention that the duty should be increased from 30 to 50 cents per thousand. The increase was made. It is a fact that this increase in duty did not result in a decrease in the importation of shingles. While the importations for the year 1908 amounted to a little more than 263,000,000, by 1911 these importations had increased to nearly 588,000,000. There was a slight falling off in 1912, the importations for that year being 539,400,000 shingles. The year 1911 was one of marked depression in the shingle industry. Prices were generally lower than they had been for some years, and were lower upon the whole than they have been at any time since. These low prices and large importations did not result in a demand for increase of duty. The production was less in 1911 than in 1908, and prices were considerably lower. In 1912, when prices were high and importations were still larger than in 1908, there was no suggestion that Canada was strangling the American shingle industry.

These vicissitudes in the shingle industry, the wide fluctuations in prices, the decline in American production, and the increase in importations all suggest the improbability of any material, definite effect resulting from tariff legislation. At the same time, as already noted, the removal of the duty in 1913 has been followed by a considerable increase of importations, and it is not unlikely that price has been affected in some measure and that this effect will be permanent. However, it is not of such a serious nature as to threaten the industry. It will probably result in the American producer making a better shingle and in giving the consumer better value for his money. The American consumer has been buying a very cheap and inferior shingle because of its low price.

EFFECT OF TIMBER AND LOGGING CONDITIONS ON THE SHINGLE INDUSTRY.

Most of the shingle mills are peculiarly situated in respect to their supply of raw material. Many of the larger mills own little or no timber. A great many of the small mills in the interior have as a source of raw material only the cedar logs and stumps that have been left on the ground in the logging operations of lumbermen. The great bulk of the timber in the State of Washington is owned by a comparatively few concerns. Some of these larger timber owners conduct logging operations and sell the logs in the open market. In other cases logging concerns purchase stumpage from the timber owners, cut the timber, and likewise enter the open market to dispose of their product.

The supply of cedar logs available to shingle manufacturers is regulated by three factors, namely, the demand for fir logs, the proportion of cedar timber growing in a given forest, and the proportion of cedar logs that can be converted into lumber.

The cedar timber grows promiscuously among other timber and can only be cut and taken out of the forest as the other timber (usually fir) is logged. If the demand for fir logs is light, the quantity of cedar logs available for the shingle mills is proportionately light. Furthermore, if the proportion of cedar is small in a given forest there is a consequent smaller supply for the shingle men. Again, if a large proportion of the cedar logs are of such quality as to make it more profitable to convert them into lumber, the available supply of shingle timber is correspondingly small.

As already stated, a number of the larger mills, and particularly those situated at tidewater, depend entirely upon the log market for their supply of raw material. They claim that any advantage from an advance in the price of shingles goes largely, if not entirely, either to the timber owner or to the logger. The small mills in the interior, the number of which is rapidly diminishing, buy the timber as it lies on the ground or buy the stumps that have been left by the lumbermen. They sometimes secure this sort of timber at a nominal lump price for all that can be found in a given area, and sometimes they pay a comparatively small price per 1,000 feet. While the cost of timber on the ground to the small mills is thus frequently very low, by the time it has been prepared for the saw their timber cost is sometimes extremely high. The labor cost incident to preparing old logs and stumps for the saw, including sometimes considerable hauls by teams, is high.

That the above conditions place the American shingle producer at some disadvantage in comparison with the British Columbia producer is contended, and no doubt with some reason by many manufacturers. In respect to this matter one manufacturer made the following statement:

"The Canadian manufacturer does have an advantage over the American manufacturer in the cost of timber. Logs and shingle bolts in Canada can be bought for considerably less than in the United States. The price for cedar logs in Bellingham will average $2 per thousand more than the price paid by the Canadian manufacturer. The quality of the Canadian log is also superior to the American cedar log. This is largely due to the fact that the best cedar logs on the American side are manufactured into cedar siding, while the Canadian manufacturer uses practically all of the logs in the production of shingles.

"The tidewater mills are largely at the mercy of the loggers. Whenever the price of shingles increases for any length of time, the price of cedar logs is increased. Logging operations are in the hands of comparatively strong capital, and when there is a depression in the shingle market, the loggers are usually able to maintain their old prices, or at most only lower their prices a small amount, so that the shingle manufacturer very frequently operates without making any profit."

That the timber owner or logger reaps most of the advantage from any advance in the price of lumber or shingles, and that the small operator must soon disappear from the industry, is indicated by the following statement made by a prominent Puget Sound shingle producer:

"The big profits made in both the lumber and shingle business have been made, and always will be made, by the stumpage owner. The Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. bought a tremendous acreage of the best timberland of the State from the Northern Pacific Railway. At the present time the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., Puget Mill Co., and to a lesser degree the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Co. (which, by the way, is owned and operated by mighty fine people), have a monopoly of the standing timber of Washington.

"Whenever the price of lumber or shingles advances the price of the raw material increases. When there is a slump in the lumber or shingle market the price of the raw material either remains stationary or declines only slightly in price. The day of the small operator, both in lumber and shingles, will soon be past, and the business will be in the hands of a few strong concerns."

One of the best informed men in the shingle industry stated that the high cost of producing shingles in the United States is largely due to the fact that timber is charged to the mills at a price that includes enormous profits. He said that when he went to the State of Washington 10 or 12 years ago he could buy good timber at as low as 25 cents per thousand feet. Those now engaged in the production of shingles who were fortunate enough to secure timber in those days are making money—not from the manufacture of shingles, but from the sale of timber that cost them little or nothing. Speaking further, he said:

"In those days nothing was counted below 12 inches, and much of the cedar (which is the only wood used in making shingles) was not considered at all. The shingle manufacturer who bought his timber then and is cutting his own timber is making money, because he is getting a good profit on his timber investment. A very large percentage of the shingle manufacturers in Washington, however, do not own their timber, and their costs for timber are $1 to $2 more than the British Columbia shingle manufacturer pays for his timber."

Another large shingle manufacturer who owns timber and who also conducts a logging business in Canada stated that his cedar timber sold during the year 1913 brought him an average price of $8.25 per thousand feet. The same quality of timber in the United States, he declared, was worth about $12.50 per thousand. He stated that the logs sold in the American markets to the shingle mills are strictly shingle logs; that is, logs that are not suitable for the production of lumber; whereas the logs sold to the British Columbia mills are what are known as "camp run." Practically all the cedar timber in British Columbia is converted into shingles, very little of it being manufactured into lumber. This manufacturer stated that the logs actually used in the American shingle mills during 1913 were worth about $11.50 per thousand. He considers that this difference in the cost of timber to the shingle manufacturers in the two countries is the chief difference in the whole situation.

From the above, and from similar information from other sources, there seems to be little doubt that the Canadian manufacturer has some advantage in the cost of this raw material. Whether this advantage will continue for any great length of time is a question. The British Columbia Government is now considering the advisability of increasing the charge it makes for stumpage. If this increase should be made, it will tend to remove the advantage now enjoyed by British Columbia manufacturers.

It is particularly significant that the lumbermen and shingle men of the State of Washington regard the timber situation as probably the most serious factor in connection with their industry. As is noted elsewhere in this report, there is a very general feeling that the Canadian manufacturer has a considerable advantage over the American manufacturer, due to the conditions under which he can secure his timber. These expressions come not only from those manufacturers who own little or no timber, but similar views are expressed even by those who own considerable tracts of timber. From statements made to representatives of the Bureau of Corporations, I think it would be difficult to find a lumberman or a shingleman in the State of Washington who does not believe that the policy adopted by this Government in the alienating of its vast forests was a tremendous mistake. They point to the fact that a very large proportion of the timber in Washington is now in comparatively few hands. While some of the lumbermen own timber that they secured years ago at a very low price, and, therefore, have a handsome profit in the timber itself, they clearly see the day when the carrying charges on their timber holdings will make the cost so great that their profits from this source will practically disappear. They point to the fact that the lumberman in British Columbia is not burdened with any carrying charge except an annual payment of about $150 per section of 640 acres, whereas the taxes on the same quantity of timber in the State of Washington are several hundred dollars, and instances were cited in which the annual taxes are more than $1,500. In general, it may be said that the tax rate on timber in Washington is about 2 per cent of its present estimated value.

This does not mean that many of the present large timber holders will not make immense profits from their timber, but it does mean that the manufacturer who is dependent for a future supply of logs upon these large owners of timber will be forced to pay constantly higher and higher prices, until an almost prohibitive maximum is reached. Of course, it is now too late to remedy the mischief that has been done by the Federal Government in the disposition of its timberlands, but it is important to note that the most serious problem confronting the lumber and shingle manufacturer, particularly the smaller one, is one that is not due to the removal of a duty from timber products, and one that could not be corrected by the imposition of a duty. In other words, if a high duty were imposed on shingles, the advantages coming from it would practically all go to a comparatively few large timber owners.

COST OF SHINGLE PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES AND IN CANADA.

The precise difference in the cost of producing shingles in the United States and British Columbia can not be stated. Assertions of higher cost in the United States are common, but few persons seem to have actual knowledge of the facts. Those who speak from experience—that is, those who have produced shingles in both countries—claim that there is practically no difference in the cost. It is a fact that the rates of pay in some instances are lower in British Columbia than in this country. It is a well-known fact, however, that low rates of wages do not always mean low cost of production. Real wages from the producer's standpoint are not measured by the rate, but by the product obtained from the expenditure of a dollar in wages.

An important item in the cost of producing shingles is the amount paid for timber. It is a fact that the prices of logs are lower in British Columbia than in the United States. It is also true, however, that the British Columbia manufacturer, as a rule, does not obtain as many shingles from a given measurement of logs as are obtained by the American manufacturer. This is due to the small proportion of low-grade shingles made in the British Columbia mills. This tends to increase the timber cost per thousand shingles, but is partially, if not entirely, compensated for in a product that sells for a higher price.

Some general statements as to the relative cost of the product in the two countries were secured from men who speak from experience and from others who had made some investigation in the matter. These statements are of interest in this connection.

An official of one of the largest shingle manufacturing concerns in the State of Washington said:

"The cost of production of shingles is composed of three factors—(1) most important, the cost of timber; (2) cost of labor; (3) overhead charges. The Canadian manufacturer has an advantage over the American in the cost of timber."

Another large and progressive shingle producer made the following statement:

"During the past year he has visited British Columbia four or five different times, with a view of building a shingle mill at Vancouver. When the agitation first began for the removal of the duty on shingles, he went to Vancouver and began to make inquiries regarding cost of manufacture and cost of erection of a plant in British Columbia. After he had made careful inquiry into the cost of manufacture he became convinced that the American manufacturer can manufacture shingles as cheaply as the Canadian. This is due to the fact that the Canadian manufacturer does not obtain as large a daily output per machine as does the American. While the rates of wages paid to the shingle weavers in British Columbia are less than paid for similar work in the United States, the higher fixed charges equalize the saving in labor cost. However, the British Columbia manufacturer does have an advantage over the American. This is due to his cost of raw material. This difference in cost of raw material is partly offset by the fact that the Canadian manufacturer does not get as large a cut from a thousand shingles as does the American manufacturer. This is due to the fact that the Canadian shingle is cut vertical grain, while the American sawyer tries to get as many shingles as possible from his block."

In connection with the above statement, it is interesting to note that this manufacturer who had contemplated the erection of a shingle mill in British Columbia, after investigating conditions there abandoned the idea and is now building another large mill in Washington.

The following from another manufacturer is of particular interest:

"He believes the cost of production in the United States and Canada is about the same. The Canadians employ Chinese and other oriental labor, and while they get these laborers at a lower price, except for packing shingles, they are not as efficient as the white workmen. Five or six years ago the mills in Bellingham employed some oriental labor. During this time they found that, while they could hire a Chinaman, Jap, or Hindu at a lower wage than a white man, he was not as efficient, and that the actual cost per unit was just as great as with the white labor."

A large manufacturer who has always been insistent for a duty on shingles, and who was on at least one occasion the spokesman for the shingle manufacturers in advocacy of a higher duty, does not consider that the difference in cost of production in the two countries is more than 15 or 20 cents per thousand. The substance of his views on this subject are as follows:

"He thinks that the total difference in the cost of labor in the two countries is in favor of Canada, but he does not know how much. At the time of the passage of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill wages in Canada were considerably lower than they are now. It was then established to the satisfaction of the authors of that bill that this difference was equivalent to 35 cents to 50 cents per thousand shingles, and they fixed the duty at 50 cents per thousand. In his opinion, the difference now is not more than 15 or 20 cents per thousand."

Another manufacturer states that British Columbia does not have much advantage over American mills in labor. He says that a given equipment in the United States will produce more shingles than the same equipment in a British Columbia mill.

A very successful manufacturer, who operates a mill in Washington and one of the same capacity in British Columbia, submitted the following facts:

"He is paying his sawyers (white) 17 cents per thousand in British Columbia and 16 cents per thousand in Washington. The cost of packing, nailing, tallying, and loading on trucks for the kiln in British Columbia, for 260,000 shingles (which is an average day's cut) is $23.40. The cost for the same labor in Washington is $25.30, a difference in favor of British Columbia of $1.90 for 260,000 shingles. This difference, however, is more than counterbalanced by the excess of wages paid for day labor in British Columbia. For instance, he pays Japanese and Chinese day labor $2.25 and white labor $2.75 in British Columbia, whereas the same white labor is obtained in Washington for $2.50. The drag sawyer in the British Columbia mill costs 50 cents per day more than the drag sawyer in Washington. The filer in British Columbia receives $7 per day, while the filer in Washington receives $6.50 per day. Taking labor as a whole, it costs about 5 cents per thousand less to produce shingles in British Columbia than in Washington. Fixed charges and overhead expenses, however, are enough higher in British Columbia to more than offset the 5 cents advantage in labor.

"The above figures for this British Columbia mill are somewhat higher than similar service can be had for in Vancouver. Labor is usually cheaper in large centers of population. This is particularly true in the winter season, when the unemployed drift to the cities. In summer there is not so great a difference in the wages paid in Vancouver and in the interior mill.

"Converting details into totals shows that it costs $1.75 per thousand in British Columbia to produce the shingles and put them on the cars, which is about 2 cents per thousand more than it costs at the Washington mill. The shingles produced at the British Columbia mill will now sell for $1.95, while those produced at the Washington mill are selling for $1.80."

The gentleman expressing the above views, in speaking of the difference in the cost of mill construction in the United States and Canada, stated that it cost him about 50 per cent more to construct his Canadian mill than it would to have constructed the same mill in the United States. Practically all of his machinery had to be purchased in this country and pay a duty before being entered into Canada. All saws, except shingle saws, are the same price in both countries.

Another manufacturer who operates a mill at New Westminster, British Columbia, and one at Ballard, Wash., made some comparisons in rates of wages paid in the two mills. These comparisons are as follows:

"All day labor is higher in New Westminster than it is in Ballard. He stated that they pay their boom man in Ballard $3 a day, and in New Westminster $4.50 a day. They employ white sawyers in their British Columbia mill and pay them 16 cents per thousand; in the Ballard mill they pay 15½ cents per thousand. They sometimes employ Chinese sawyers in the New Westminster mill. Chinamen will do better work than white men, but they waste more timber. Some Chinese are as good sawyers as white men in every respect, but this is not the rule. Another case of the difference in wages paid in British Columbia and here is in engineers. In British Columbia the engineer is paid $125 per month and is furnished a fireman. The engineer in Ballard is paid $112.50 a month and he does his own firing. The drag sawyer in the British Columbia mill is paid $3.50 a day and in the Ballard mill $3."

The chief officer of one of the most efficient shingle mills in the State of Washington and a man who is considered as a leader in the industry stated in substance as follows:

"So far as the Canadian manufacturer is concerned, he does not believe the American shingle producer need have any fear. The hustling, energetic American will beat the Canadian, but he does fear, however, that some of these hustling Americans will go into British Columbia, produce shingles, and dump them into this country at a price the domestic manufacturer can not meet."

A visit was made to a number of shingle mills at Vancouver, British Columbia, and some of the most important manufacturers there were seen. One of the best informed of these men, and a man who stands very high in the industry, stated that British Columbia mills have much less advantage over American mills in respect to labor than the rates of wages paid indicate. He is satisfied that white labor is 15 to 20 per cent more efficient than Chinese labor. This statement was corroborated by other shingle manufacturers. As an illustration of the difference in efficiency, it was stated that Chinese labor was being paid $1.80 per day for loading cars. It required three Chinamen a day to load one car. This is equivalent to a cost of $5.40 per car. An American manufacturer was present when this statement was made, and he stated that two men receiving $7.50 per day would load three cars at his mills. In other words, it cost him $2.50 per car for loading as against $5.40 at the Canadian mill. The rate of $1.80 now being paid in the Canadian mill is lower than usual. The usual rate of pay for this kind of labor is $2. Wages are somewhat lower in British Columbia during the present winter than they were last summer.

It was stated by British Columbia manufacturers that the supply of white labor in that country has not been sufficient to meet the demands of the mills in good times. One prominent manufacturer asserted that if he could secure reliable white labor, even at higher rates of pay, he would prefer it to Chinese labor. He stated that Chinamen are very wasteful in cutting timber. He stated, however, that the Chinese packers are superior to white packers. This superiority, however, does not consist in the quantity of the work done but in the quality.

While Canadian manufacturers did not submit figures in detail to show their cost of production, there was practically unanimity in the statement to the effect that the cost per thousand shingles in the Vancouver mills is about $1.75. This figure agrees very closely with statements made by Americans who operate mills in British Columbia.

A few American manufacturers produced figures purporting to show the cost of production in their mills. These figures varied from about $1.55 to as high as $1.85 per thousand. As is the case in every industry, there is a wide variation in the cost of production in different mills. From the actual facts submitted, it can not be contended that there is any very material difference between the cost of production for shingles in the two countries. In considering cost figures for shingles it is necessary to take into account the fact that shingles are billed out on weights considerably above the actual weights upon which freight is paid. This is a profit on underweights and goes to the manufacturer and varies from 8 cents to as high as 20 cents per thousand; probably 10 to 15 cents would be a fair average, which amount, of course, should be deducted from the figures for the cost when making any comparison. The Canadian shippers do not dry their shingles to such an inordinate extent, and therefore their profits from underweights are less, even if there is any profit from this source at all.

From all the facts obtainable, it would appear that the Canadian mills may have a slight advantage in production cost. While the cost of labor is probably no less, the cost of logs is less. The waste in the Canadian mill is greater, thus making the cost per thousand about equal in the two countries. The advantage, however, in favor of Canada, if there is an advantage, is due to the fact that the Canadian shingle is more valuable. In other words, the return to the manufacturer for the expenditure of a given amount of money in shingle production may be somewhat greater to the Canadian than it is to the American.

It is quite clear that if there is any difference in the cost of producing shingles in the United States and British Columbia in favor of the latter country that difference can not be very great. The best evidence of this fact is not found in the mere assertion of American manufacturers who do not speak from actual knowledge, but it is found rather in the expressions of men who have had experience in both countries and from the actions of shingle producers who have investigated conditions in British Columbia with the view to establishing mills there. As already pointed out, a large manufacturer made a careful investigation of conditions in British Columbia with a view to establishing a mill in that country. His investigation did not justify the building of a mill in British Columbia; but, on the other hand, he has since begun the construction of a very large mill in the State of Washington. This mill will have a daily output of between 600,000 and 700,000 shingles. It will be one of the best-equipped mills in the United States and among the largest. This mill is being constructed in the city of Everett. A few days after work was commenced on this large mill a large new shingle company was organized. The capacity of this mill is to be 350,000 shingles per day. It is important to call attention to the fact that the president of this new company has manufactured shingles in the State of Washington for years, and that two years ago he sold a shingle mill. A prominent banker, who is interested in a chain of financial institutions in eastern Washington, is vice president of the company, and an official of one of the largest and most successful shingle concerns now in operation is to be the secretary, treasurer, and general manager of the new company.

If competition from Canadian shingles seriously threatened the industry in the State of Washington, it is not probable these experienced shingle manufacturers would invest their money in large new mills, nor is it likely that a careful financier would invest his money in a business that was threatened with destruction.

THE UNEMPLOYED IN DECEMBER, 1913.

Reference was made in Mr. HUMPHREY'S letter and also in his speech delivered December 16, 1913, to the reduction of wages and to the number of unemployed men in the State of Washington. The matter of the reduction of wages is discussed elsewhere.

Whenever the shingle mills and lumber mills close, as a matter of course those who had been employed in those mills become idle. To the extent to which the mills were closed in the State in December, 1913, to that extent was the number of unemployed increased. As has already been pointed out, some of the mills have closed every year, and in a number of years a great many more have been closed than in 1913. It is consequently true that in October, 1912, there was a large number of men thrown out of employment because of the closing down of the mills, and the same thing has been true in other years.

In December, 1913, and at the present time there are probably more unemployed persons in the State of Washington than have been found there in any past year. This large number, however, is not entirely due to the closing of the mills in that State. Industrial conditions in British Columbia have been depressed for more than a year. In January, 1914, it was declared by men familiar with the facts that about 50 per cent of the shingle mills in that country were then closed. It is a fact that these mills had been closed for months. When the lumber and shingle mills closed in British Columbia and the employees were unable to find work in that Province they began to come into the United States. It can be stated on no less authority than the commissioner of immigration for the district embracing the city of Seattle that hundreds, if not thousands, of the unemployed in the cities of the State of Washington are those who have come from British Columbia. A prominent official of a labor organization stated that the number of men unemployed in the State because of the closing down of the lumber and shingle mills was no larger in December, 1913, than it had been at other times. He also stated that the presence of such an unusual number of unemployed men in the cities along Puget Sound, particularly in Seattle, was due to the migration of the unemployed from Canada.

The problem of the unemployed at this time is aggravated by the fact that the immigration officials of the Canadian Government will not permit those who have left the Province of British Columbia to return. While there are unquestionably a great number of unemployed men in the State of Washington, this number has been greatly enhanced by those coming from British Columbia. The impression attempted to be made to the effect that a vast army of unemployed men has resulted from the removal of the duty on lumber and shingles is entirely erroneous.

FLUCTUATIONS IN THE PRICE OF RED CEDAR SHINGLES.

There has been compiled in the Bureau of Corporations prices for red cedar shingles from January, 1895, to January, 1914, inclusive. These prices represent what was paid for shingles at the mills. The bulk of the shingles produced in the State of Washington are represented by two brands or grades, namely, "clears" and "star A stars." In the early part of the period covered prices were very low. It was not until the latter part of 1899 that star A stars sold at above $1.30, except for a few months, and clears up to that time generally sold for less than $1.50. In 1901 there was a general advance in prices that was fairly well maintained until the latter part of 1903, at which time the price of star A stars had declined to $1.35 and clears to $1.65. There were then no significant changes in prices until the year 1906. Before the end of that year star A stars had sold as high as $1.90 and clears at $2.30. There was a very considerable advance in 1907. At one time star A stars sold as high as $2.85 and clears as high as $3.20. This was followed by a decline, reaching a comparatively low point about the middle of 1908, after which there was another advance. During 1909 and 1910 star A stars ranged from $1.65 to $1.85 and clears from $2 to $2.35. In 1911 prices ruled very low. From about the middle of September down through January, 1912, star A stars sold at about $1.35 and clears sold around $1.70 and $1.75. Beginning about the 1st of March, 1912, prices began to advance, and by September they had reached the highest figure for a number of years. At that time star A stars sold as high as $2.15 and clears as high as $2.50. In fact, some sales were made above these figures. In the latter part of September there was an abrupt decline, and by December star A stars were selling at $1.60 and clears at $2. Prices had been somewhat lower than this during a part of November. In January, 1913, prices began to improve, and before the end of February star A stars were selling at $1.70 and clears at $2.20. There was an abrupt decline of about 20 cents a thousand in the latter part of March, with a recovery of about 10 cents a thousand in April. Prices remained fairly steady until there was a break in the latter part of June, then a recovery in the latter part of July, followed by a considerable decline during the months of August and September. By December, 1913, star A stars sold around $1.40, and in some instances as low as $1.35, and clears sold at about $1.70. About the middle of January, 1914, prices began to improve, and by the 1st of February star A stars were selling at $1.55 and clears at $1.80. The prospect at this time is for still better prices. A diagram showing the movement of prices from July, 1911, to the end of January, 1914, is presented. [Diagram not published in RECORD.]

A careful examination and analysis of the prices of red-cedar shingles shows that during practically the entire history of the shingle industry there has been considerable fluctuation in prices. When the duty was 30 cents, and again after it was raised to 50 cents, these fluctuations appear. It is a rather remarkable fact that at no time since 1905 have prices generally been as low as they were during 1911. At no time in 1913 were prices lower, nor were they generally as low, as during the year 1911, when the duty was 50 cents per thousand.

It is evident from the course of shingle prices that causes other than the removal of the duty contributed most largely to the low prices of recent months.

The high prices secured during a portion of 1912 do not mean that the manufacturers were all making very large profits. The price of logs was very high, and those mills that were dependent upon the open market for logs were returning a large part of the high price of shingles to the loggers. Good logs sold as high as $15 per thousand feet at that time. At the present time the prevailing price of logs is $11. This difference in the price of logs is equivalent to about 40 cents per thousand shingles.

CONDITIONS IN THE LUMBER INDUSTRY.

The effect of the removal of the duty on lumber is almost universally conceded to be negligible. At least it is so considered among lumbermen on the Pacific coast. Representatives of the Bureau of Corporations saw a considerable number of lumber manufacturers and attended a meeting of the West Coast Lumber Manufacturers' Association, and in not a single instance was there heard any serious complaint on account of the removal of the duty on lumber; in fact, there was scarcely any complaint on this account at all. Nearly all of the manufacturers seen stated with positiveness that they did not think the lumbermen had anything to fear from the admission of free lumber into this country. For years the lumber manufacturers of the Pacific coast have successfully competed with British Columbia in foreign markets. They have gone into the markets of China, Australia, and the west coast of South America, where they have secured and held a fair share of the trade. In fact, some large export shipments are being made at this time.

It is important to point out in this connection that Pacific coast lumbermen have shipped considerable lumber into Canada. Rough lumber and lumber dressed on only one side is admitted into Canada free of duty, whereas dressed lumber pays a rate of 25 per cent. A prominent lumberman of Aberdeen, Wash., stated that during 1912 and the early part of 1913 considerable lumber was shipped from the United States into Alberta and Saskatchewan, and that the American manufacturer undersold the Canadian in his own market. The Canadian manufacturers felt so keenly the competition of American lumber that at one time they considered establishing retail yards in order to counteract that competition. In fact, some retail yards were thus established. It is but fair to state in this connection, however, that some American lumbermen do not concede that their trade in Canada is strictly competitive. They claim that they produce a better grade of lumber in the United States, and that the Canadian mills do not generally make lumber of such a quality as to compete with the higher grades manufactured in this country. As a matter of fact, however, a considerable proportion of the exports of lumber from this country into Canada has not been of the higher grades.

The prices of lumber have been generally unsatisfactory during the past three or four years. In 1911 they were low. Before the end of 1912 there was considerable improvement, which was maintained up to the latter part of 1913. At present, and for a few months past, prices have ranged at a low level. Many lumbermen, and in fact most of them, attribute the present and recent low prices to the fact that the railroads for the past year or more have bought lumber very sparingly. The railroads are the best single customers of the Pacific coast mills. There are two reasons alleged for the falling off in railroad buying. First, the roads have been confronted with serious financial problems. They have claimed that an increasing cost of operation, without any increase in freight charges, has narrowed their net earnings to the point where they have but little to expend for improvements. Another cause of the falling off in the purchases by railroads is the fact that wood is being used less and less in the construction of railroad cars. A freight car is now rarely ever constructed entirely of lumber. In many cases they are all steel, and in other cases large portions of the car are steel, only the sides and in some cases the roofs being constructed of wood.

The outlook for the lumber industry is encouraging. The demand is increasing, and this is naturally expected to bring about some advance in prices. At the meeting of the West Coast Lumber Manufacturers' Association, held in the city of Tacoma on January 30, 1914, the president, in his annual address, spoke in a most optimistic vein. Among other things, he said:

"Brighter and better things are in store for the business of the country. Even now the pessimist is a very rare being. Wherever you go you will find thinking men advocating legislation which will give business a fair chance to recover."

He then referred to the expressions of President Wilson in his message to Congress dealing with the trust problem. He also alluded to the fact that business men had the assurance of many men in Congress that they would always be ready to help legitimate business. Referring to the currency bill, he said:

"It is regarded by a great majority of the people of this country as being the greatest piece of constructive legislation that has been passed in many years."

Further along he said:

"Other important and helpful measures are pending, with the brightest prospects of their becoming the law before a great while."

In speaking of the lumber situation further, he said:

"The country at large should know and be familiar with some of our problems. They should understand that we have a great surplus sawmill capacity, which can at any time spoil good market conditions by overproduction. This fact given publicity should at least deter others from coming in and investing in an industry already overdone. * * * We should lay our cards face up on the table and invite investigation of conditions as they really are."

He expressed the belief that the opening of the Panama Canal would extend markets for Pacific coast lumber. In closing, he said:

"I ask your indulgence if I have not confined myself to a review of the year's work or any definite suggestions for the future, but I believe that our greatest benefits will be derived from the return of confidence. This alone should make good business, and we should bend every energy to help in the reconstruction."

A careful inquiry among lumber manufacturers developed the fact that, while there were a few mills closed down during December and January, some of these have resumed operations and others are preparing to do so. The statement of Mr. HUMPHREY in his speech in the House of Representatives on December 16, which is calculated to leave the impression that the lumber and shingle mills are generally cutting wages, could not be substantiated. As already stated, wages have not been cut at all in the shingle mills. A few lumber mills, and only a few, have cut wages. In fact, no one was seen that was able to name more than two or three. There has been no general reduction, and there is not likely to be.

There is great difference of opinion among lumber manufacturers as to the advantages that will come to Pacific coast lumbermen from the opening of the Panama Canal. While the opening of the canal will give them a shorter and cheaper haul to the Atlantic seaboard markets, many of them feel that British Columbia manufacturers will have such an advantage over them in shipping that they will be able to do a great deal of business in those markets. They argue that they will have to meet competition from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and also some from the yellow pine and North Carolina pine regions. The fact that Pacific coast lumber destined to a domestic port can only be shipped in American bottoms, while the lumber from British Columbia can be loaded into any ship that offers, places them at a decided disadvantage.

Whatever may be the results of opening the Panama Canal, it is not claimed that the removal of the duty on lumber will injuriously affect Pacific coast lumbermen. They will still be able to hold the share of the foreign trade they already have, and it is probable that through the Panama Canal they will be able to establish some new business in western Europe.

On account of the lack of any complaint among lumbermen as to the removal of the duty on lumber, it is not deemed necessary to enter into any extended details relative to that industry. Mr. Humphrey was able to secure a list of only a few mills that were closed in December, and that list is now considerably reduced. In this connection, it is again significant to advert to the fact that most of the lumber manufacturers are protectionists and would naturally be expected to sympathize with any criticism of the present tariff law. As a matter of fact, such criticism has been very rarely heard. There was a spirit of optimistic hopefulness among the lumber manufacturers that indicates on their part a belief that an import duty is not necessary to the prosperity of their industry. Of course, there was found an occasional man who, upon general principles, and from the force of habit, insisted that the duty should not have been removed.

Mr. MANN. That matter being settled, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum of the committee present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have a quorum here, and I suggest we finish the next three or four lines.

Mr. MANN. I have just counted, and, unless the Chair counts the employees, there is no quorum here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-five Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13612, the urgent deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement made by the Hon. Joseph H. Choate concerning Panama Canal tolls.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to print a statement concerning the Panama Canal tolls by the Hon. Joseph Choate. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The remarks made by the Hon. Joseph Choate on the subject of the Panama Canal tolls.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Choate was the American ambassador at the time the treaty was signed.

Mr. FINLEY. I think we can get along without that, and I object.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 656. An act granting to the trustees of the Diocese of Montana of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for the benefit of Christ Church on the Hill, at Poplar, Mont., lots 5, 6, and 7, in block 30, town site of Poplar, State of Montana; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10258. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Lawton, Okla., a tract of land to be used for watershed and water-supply purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 23, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $9,000 required by the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the Marion Branch, at Marion, Ind., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 763) was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. TEN EYCK, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9671) appropriating $25,000 to erect a suitable monument on the battle grounds at the Horse Shoe, on the Tallapoosa River, in the State of Alabama, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 296), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4318) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause patent to issue to Erik J. Aanrud upon his homestead entry for the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 15, township 159 north, range 73 west, in the Devils Lake land district, N. Dak., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 297), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12074) granting an increase of pension to Maria Antonia Martinez de Mink, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 13716) for the construction of new lookouts in the post office at Red Wing, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 13717) to provide for leave of absence for homestead entrymen in one or two periods; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 13718) providing for the refund of certain duties incorrectly collected on cutch; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 13719) for the construction of a public building at St. Johns, Mich.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WATKINS: A bill (H. R. 13720) to appropriate $250,000 for the improvement of navigation on Red River in Louisiana and Arkansas; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13721) to appropriate $30,000 to remove logs from Sabine River and condemn and expropriate them; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 13722) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 13723) to levy a tax upon the issuance of coupons, prize tickets, and other devices, and on the redemption, payment, purchase, or exchange of coupons, prize tickets, tags, bands, or other articles, things, or parts of articles or things that shall have been attached to, or packed in or with, or formed a part of, or encircling, or given with any manufactured tobacco, cigar or cigars, cigarette or cigarettes, or snuff, or any stamped package or receptacle thereof, and to forbid the packing of other things into packages of tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, or snuff; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. AIKEN: A bill (H. R. 13724) to amend section 9 of the act entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers"; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ALLEN: Resolution (H. Res. 426) approving course of newspapers in offering reward and conducting search for the lost child, Catherine Winters, of Newcastle, Ind., and urging the country to lend its aid and support in said search; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. THACHER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, approving the plan and commending the efforts to procure a regional reserve bank in the city of Boston; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GILMORE: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts approving the plan and commending the efforts to establish a regional reserve bank in the city of Boston; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 13725) granting a pension to John Crump; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13726) granting a pension to Elijah S. Webster; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 13727) authorizing the Secretary of War to confer upon Frank C. King the congressional medal of honor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BARCHFELD: A bill (H. R. 13728) for the relief of Richard Riggles; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 13729) for the relief of Yandell Wood and the estate of J. L. Wood; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13730) for the relief of the estate of T. B. Eatherly; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13731) for the relief of the estate of A. J. Tynes, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13732) for the relief of the estate of Ellen Young; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13733) for the relief of the estate of M. R. Buchanan; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13734) for the relief of the estate of Joseph G. Murphy; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13735) for the relief of the estate of Isaac B. Mills; to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 23, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we rejoice before Thee to-day in the constitutional liberty that we have enjoyed as the priceless inheritance of the toils and sufferings, the heroism and patriotism of our fathers. We bless Thee that the patriots of other days, who pledged their lives and their fortunes and their sacred honor, were inspired by so great a sense of divine obligation at the time of the birth of our Nation. We remember before Thee upon this day, a day which we always commemorate as holy in the calendar of our national history, the influence and power of one man who feared only God and who devoted his life to the interests of unborn generations. Dauntless upon the battle field, modest in the hour of victory, wise in the council of state, glorious in the retirement of private life, he lived justly, he loved mercy, and walked humbly with his God.

We thank Thee for the men surrounding him, men of high ideals, men of prayer, men of God, and for all who have followed him in places of authority and of power among us. Thou hast laid Thy hand upon mighty men to establish and perpetuate institutions founded upon the eternal principles of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

We thank Thee to-day for the larger liberty of our times. We pray that Thou wilt send upon us the influence of Thy grace that we may maintain our national life in its purity, in its message of peace, and in its ministry of good will among all the nations of the earth.

We thank Thee for a hundred years of unbroken peace with the mother country and for Thy blessing upon them and us, who have together held such a large measure of responsibility for Christian civilization.

And now we pray for men like those of the past, who founded the Nation with faith and holy living upon the principles of eternal truth. Defend us from every force within that would disrupt and disintegrate the national spirit.

We pray Thee to guide us in the days that are to come. Help us to hold in sacred memory and honor the names that have made our history great, and grant us Thy grace to lead us still further in the conquests of peace in our day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business. He has a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. HOUSTON, Mr. DAVENPORT, and Mr. GUERNSEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, and Mr. HAUGEN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Lawton, Okla., a tract of land to be used for watershed and water-supply purposes.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, there are some of us who believe that the men who made and founded the American Republic were guided by a hand that was not human. Some of those who helped to found the Republic though dead yet speak to their children. Among all the illustrious dead whose shades loom large in the Valhalla of the American Republic there is none of such stupendous proportions as the shade of George Washington.

In accordance with the order of the Senate, the Senator from Virginia, Mr. SWANSON, will now read the Farewell Address of the first President of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON read the address, as follows:

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself, and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me, still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which, and unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively, though often covertly and insidiously, directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint councils and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government, which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—Northern and Southern, Atlantic and Western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the Nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common counsels and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as of other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests, in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable.

Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding of them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind—which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight—the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the Government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This, within certain limits, is probably true; and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose; and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation, for, though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness—these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives; but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object, which is always a choice of difficulties, ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded; and that in the place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils. Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence—I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens—the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorite are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interests, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world—so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it—for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony and a liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and the other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice and by that of your representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take, a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined as far as should depend upon me to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after 45 years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, 17th September, 1796.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of George Washington, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at 1 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 24, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 23, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Behold, O God our Father, Thy children, seekers after truth, the lawmakers of a great Nation, who wait upon Thee with open minds and hearts for light to guide, strength to sustain, courage to move forward where Thou dost lead, that they may honor Thee, themselves, and the people whom they represent. We praise and magnify Thy holy name, that Thou didst fire the hearts of our sires to freedom's holy cause, which gave to us a government than which no greater exists, a precious heritage to be kept sacred by a grateful people. We thank Thee that the "Father of His Country" is revered and held as an example to each succeeding generation; for while his deeds are sung and his example held sacred, popular government will live under the flag he designed and carried to victory. Grant, O most merciful Father, that it may continue to float on for the good of mankind. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 21, 1914, was read and approved.

DISCRIMINATION IN PRICES.

Mr. STEVENS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 13305, to prevent discrimination in prices and to provide for publicity of prices to dealers and to the public be corrected by inserting, on page 3, in section C, line 10, after the word "thereof," the words "to dealers." Those words were left out by mistake in the print of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to have a bill corrected by inserting two words as he states. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he reintroduce the bill, because to correct it in this way will make many complications. For the House by unanimous consent to amend a bill which is pending before a committee is a very unusual proceeding. I think it better to reintroduce the bill.

Mr. STEVENS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in asking for this unanimous-consent order was to affect the future reprints of the bill. There have been a great many demands for the bill.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman introduces a new bill with the correction made, of course the printing goes with that.

Mr. STEVENS of New Hampshire. Very well, Mr. Speaker. If that be the better way, I withdraw my request.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 13765) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 298), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California reserves all points of order.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky if he expects to occupy much time on District business?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I will say that it is my purpose to call up only one bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District business, with Mr. ADAMSON in the chair.

IMPROVEMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND REPAIR OF SIDEWALKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman. I call up the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for the improvement, construction, and repair of sidewalks in the District, and for the assessment and payment of the cost thereof, and I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up the bill H. R. 10308, and asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, this bill reported by the committee undertakes to change the system under which sidewalks of the city are now paid for. The present law is found in the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia approved on August 7, 1894. Under the provisions of that bill the District Commissioners have the power to order construction and repair of sidewalks, the expense to be borne one-half by the abutting property owner and the other one-half to be paid out of the funds in the Treasury. This, in effect, means that one-fourth of the expense of construction of sidewalks is paid for out of the taxes of the people of the District of Columbia and one-fourth out of the funds of the people of the United States. In reporting this bill the committee suggested certain amendments, so as to make provision for voluntary permit work. Under the present law a property owner desiring to have certain work done may, by depositing one-half of the estimated cost with the commissioners, obtain permission from the commissioners to have the work done. Complaint was made that even under those circumstances the work was done under the direction of the commissioners and by contractors who were not selected by the property owners, and in order to meet that objection the committee has reported an amendment by which the application and permit may be issued to the property owner and the property owner may proceed to have the work done. The bill also provides the same method for the assessment and a notice that is provided in the present law, and in effect the only changes made by this bill are: First, the placing upon the property owner of the entire cost and construction and repair of the sidewalks; and, second, the granting to the property owner of the privilege of applying for a permit and receiving that permit from the District Commissioners and having the work done on his own account by contractors of his own selection, in accordance with the terms and conditions of the permit.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IGOE. I do.

Mr. MANN. Under the terms of this bill, will it apply to all repair work upon sidewalks?

Mr. IGOE. Well, there was some question in the minds of the committee as to whether it would be well to separate certain repair work to distinguish what might be very expensive and what might be inexpensive, and it was deemed proper to put in the word "repair," and, I take it, it applies to all repair work.

Mr. MANN. If a sidewalk gets out of repair in some place, will it be possible under this bill to fix it without a long delay?

Mr. IGOE. I do not think there is any objection to having it repaired. I do not think the commissioners will be compelled to resort to this act. They are authorized and empowered to do certain work, and I think that, if minor repairs are to be made, there is nothing to prevent, as far as this bill is concerned, the commissioners from doing that work.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason I asked—to get the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. IGOE. It is my opinion about it; and, furthermore——

Mr. MANN. This bill is not obligatory either as to repairs or original construction?

Mr. IGOE. No; I do not think there is anything in the bill compelling the commissioners to resort to this method. On repair work, I take it, the bill will facilitate repairs in many cases. Where the property owner wishes to have this repair work done under section 5 of the bill, the permits may be issued at any time and that repair work done by the property owners within the time specified in the permit. Section 5 is an entirely new proposition in the law.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman also about Government sidewalks in front of Government property?

Mr. IGOE. The provision is exactly in this bill as it is in the present law, and I recall the objection made by the gentleman when the Borland amendment was up in the House. Written into this bill are exactly the same provisions in regard to assessment and notice that are in the present law, and it applies, I take it, to Government property as to other property, but I doubt that such a case will ever arise where the Government will refuse to pay; I would rather assume it would not arise.

Mr. MANN. Is there any authority to assess on Government property now?

Mr. IGOE. There is no provision made in this bill to distinguish Government property from any other kind of property, and I do not know of anything in any other law which provides for it, but it relates to the payment by abutting property owners. There is no line drawn in this bill between the Government and the private owner. This is exactly the same as the present law, which has been in effect since 1894, as I said.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IGOE. I will.

Mr. OGLESBY. I understand this bill changes the present law so as to put all the costs of building the sidewalks and repairs to the same on the property owner.

Mr. IGOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman think that is a fair provision in view of the fact the property owner has been paying his share of the taxes for 20 or 30 years for the building of sidewalks in other parts of the city to now have to pay the total cost of having to build the sidewalks in front of his property?

Mr. IGOE. I do. I say that if they have made a mistake in the past that is no reason why we should continue to follow an erroneous system. Now, just the other day there was a petition presented, I notice, for resurfacing Seventh Street. That is a street made long ago. Now they want to make it over again, and you are going back again to those people. I say if the system is wrong, then we should correct it.

Mr. OGLESBY. It is wrong because a man on one street is compelled to pay part of the costs of the improvement of sidewalks in front of property of a man on another street. Is that the idea?

Mr. IGOE. Well, I say every property owner, as far as sidewalks are concerned, ought to pay the cost of making sidewalks in front of his property. That is the only thing we have to deal with now.

Mr. OGLESBY. How is the property owner to be reimbursed for the money he has been paying for sidewalks in front of another man's property, unless that other man now contributes to the cost of building the sidewalk in front of his property?

Mr. IGOE. There are new improvements being made all the time, and I do not think that because the system was wrong before we ought to continue it. If somebody suffers by reason of it, why, that can not be helped.

Mr. OGLESBY. It can be helped, if the system is continued as it is now.

Mr. IGOE. At one time, perhaps, the Government paid all of it. Now they pay half of it, we will say. Was it wrong to change it from paying all of it to paying half of it? According to the gentleman's theory it would be.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am not talking about the question as to the part which the Government pays. I say that a man who has been paying for 20 or 30 years a share of the cost of building sidewalks in front of other property that is being improved, and the time has now come when his property is to be improved by the construction of a sidewalk, he gets nothing in the way of contribution from other property owners to aid him to build a sidewalk in front of his property, when he has been contributing all these years to the cost of building sidewalks in front of other property.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IGOE. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Our attention has been called recently to the neglect of property owners of the District to remove the snow that fell here a week ago, and not only the neglect of property owners, but the neglect of the Government in removing the snow from the sidewalks in front of Government property. Some years ago the commissioners passed an ordinance or regulation requiring the property owners to remove the snow. That was declared ultra vires and unconstitutional. For years we have been waiting for the District Committee to report some law that would compel the property owners to make these sidewalks passable within a reasonable time after a fall of snow. The only question in the bill before us is as to whether the property owner should bear the entire expense or whether the Government should bear a portion of that expense. Can the gentleman, who is an authority on sidewalk and street affairs in the District, inform the committee whether this very industrious committee is considering the passage of a law that will compel, as in other cities, the removal of snow from sidewalks in front of premises.

Mr. IGOE. I will say to the gentleman that I do not claim to be an authority.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whether the gentleman claims to be or not, he is.

Mr. IGOE. And in the second place, in direct answer to his question, I do not believe there is such a bill pending before the committee. If there is, I know nothing about it, and I have heard no discussion of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman recognize the need of it?

Mr. IGOE. There ought to be such a regulation, undoubtedly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there not much more urgent need to have a law passed at this time to meet an urgent case than to pass a law relating merely to the question of assessments for improvements and repairs?

Mr. IGOE. I do not know how often they have snow here, but, of course, while the snow is here it is necessary to have that law. But these sidewalks are being constructed all the year around.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say to the gentleman that recent visitors to the city have criticized the neglect of the property owners to remove the snow. It is a disgrace to have snow accumulate on the sidewalks and not compel the property owners to remove it as in other cities.

Mr. IGOE. I think the property owners ought to remove it, and ought to be compelled to do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I rise to call the attention of the commissioners to their default, in a way, in not calling to the attention of the committee and submitting for their attention a bill that would give them authority that would compel the District property owners to remove within a reasonable time the snow from their sidewalks.

Mr. IGOE. Let me ask the gentleman if he does not think in this city, where we hear so much about the "city beautiful," the property owners ought to have enough patriotic spirit to go and do this themselves?

Mr. STAFFORD. A great number of them do. Those who have patriotic and civic spirit do, but there are cases where there are vacant premises, and where they lack that general civic spirit which requires a law that should get back of them and force them, and make them liable to damages in case they do not perform their duty in that direction.

Mr. IGOE. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman, who is alert in these matters, will call the attention of the commissioners, who are removing the snow from the streets now after it has become frozen, to the necessity of having a law that will compel property owners to remove snow from the sidewalks.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield to a question? Referring to the matter concerning which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was interrogating you, as to repairs in small matters, the statement was made that the matter would be so inconsequential that it would not be worth while; that to try to tax up a part of the cost would not come under the terms of this act.

Mr. IGOE. I do not think it would. I think the commissioners would have funds by which that would be paid without the necessity of levying on the property.

Mr. TOWNER. I notice it says:

> Notice shall be given only in those cases where assessment work is proposed under the terms of this act.

So I presume that would leave to the commissioners the determination of that matter as to whether or not it was of sufficient importance to give the notice and proceed with terms and specifications.

Mr. IGOE. I think so. As a matter of fact, this bill does not make any change in the existing law in that respect.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course two weeks' notice would occasion a delay for the temporary repairs that might be immediately necessary.

Mr. IGOE. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as the notice provided in this bill is concerned, there are several notices here, and the provisions were put in to give the property owner the full right to appear and have a hearing both as to the necessity of doing the work and as to the justice of the assessment.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the bill meets all the requirements of the existing law very well in that regard.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to detain the House more than a moment. Ever since 1894 sidewalks in the District have been constructed by assessing one-half of the cost on the abutting property owners and paying one-half out of the General Treasury, or one-fourth out of the General Treasury and one-fourth out of the sum due from the District of Columbia. I do not recall exactly—perhaps the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] can inform the House—what the method of payment for sidewalks was prior to 1894, as to whether it was all paid for out of the Treasury, or whether any portion of it was paid by the abutting property owners.

Mr. IGOE. I can not inform the gentleman as to that right now. I had intended to go into it, but I did not have time to do it.

Mr. MANN. Recently the House passed a bill to put an assessment against the property for the construction and repair of streets. Now comes the proposition to put all the cost of the construction of sidekalks against the abutting property owners.

I confess there is a good deal to be said in favor of that proposition, which is the general method of constructing sidewalks in the large cities throughout the country. I think it is not the method generally resorted to in the smaller cities and towns, where in many cases, at least, the cost is partly borne out of the municipal treasury and partly assessed against the property owners.

So far as I am concerned, I believe in keeping up Washington in more than the ordinary manner. I think it is perfectly fair for the General Government to pay a portion of the cost of street construction and sidewalk construction in the city of Washington. Of course, for many years the owners of much of the property have been paying taxes which will now be specially assessed for the entire cost of constructing sidewalks in front of their property, but possibly that is no argument against the proposition; not a very strong one, perhaps. It is a little unfair, as those things come. I can see no reason for changing the existing method of payment for sidewalks. Many people imagine that when in the city of Washington a new subdivision is laid out and sidewalks are constructed those sidewalks are paid for out of the Treasury. As a rule that is not the case. In most of those cases the people who make the subdivisions themselves construct sidewalks before the property is put upon the market.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. Is not the city of Washington in a different position from other cities in this respect, that on account of the way it is laid out there are a great many point lots, and that the assessment of the entire cost upon the front foot of the abutting property would in a great many instances be an assessment of a depth on both sides, which is very narrow, running to a point?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly there are a great many diagonal streets in Washington and a great many circles in Washington, which add to the beauty of the city.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. In response to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN], is it not true that a great many of those little points at the intersection of streets and avenues have been acquired by the Federal Government as local parks?

Mr. MANN. Well, not very many of them. There are comparatively few of them that the Federal Government owns.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not a fact that nearly all of them that can be bought by the Federal Government have been bought, and a great many of them are being bought every year?

Mr. MANN. No; it is not a fact. The gentleman and I do not agree about that. The gentleman from Missouri has lived in Washington a good many years, and he ought to know that that is not the case.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. In every District bill and in almost all of the deficiency bills you will find a great many items where they are buying these points of lots all the time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken as to what they are buying. All the gentleman has to do is to ride on the street cars. If the gentleman did not ride to the Capitol from his home in an automobile, he would know better than that. If he rode as I do—on the street car—he would know.

Mr. SISSON. I do not ride in an automobile, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I am referring to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. He can not plead not guilty. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield just a moment there, I will say the only lots that are not owned by the Government now at the corners of streets are, are they not, lots that have become so valuable that the owners do not want to part with them?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BORLAND. They are either used for business purposes, where they have a show-window value, or in some houses, like those on New Hampshire Avenue, where they have a value for light and air, and in the smaller and newer sections of the city they are being acquired by the Government.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. The Federal Government has acquired very few, and there is no intention on the part of the Federal Government to acquire them. There is hardly a case in Washington where the point is a triangle where the Government has acquired the whole piece. There are some cases like that, and in such cases there are no sidewalks at all, where there ought to be sidewalks.

Now, that is the situation. Of course, it is in the power of Congress to impose these extra burdens upon the citizens of Washington. The city of Washington, in the main, lives off the Government. The Government clerks and employees in Washington and those who depend upon them in various capacities practically support the town. We have not raised the salaries of the Government clerks, except in sporadic cases, for many years. We have made no increase in the salaries, in the classes by number, of clerks for many, many years; and yet, although the cost of living keeps going up, we proceed to add these burdens to the people who are dependent on their salaries, which we pay as a Government, without our increasing their salaries in any way. I protest that this is unjust, unfair to the people in Washington and unnecessary, and that we can afford to maintain Washington so that it will continue to be—as it is—the handsomest city in the world.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the views just expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. After all, when you analyze the population of the District of Columbia, you find that there are a few hundred well-to-do people, many of whom come here during the sessions of Congress, probably for the social enjoyment that they find here. There are comparatively few very rich people here in the District. There are a great many shopkeepers of moderate means. There are less than a dozen big department stores and establishments of that character in the District of Columbia. The great mass of the population is made up of Government clerks and clerks in the business establishments here. There are a hundred thousand colored people in the District of Columbia, and I believe that they own little of the real property here.

The city of Washington has been built up very largely as a residence community since the civil-service laws of this country have been enacted and extended. Prior to that time the Capital of the Nation was essentially a city of cheap boarding houses. Many of the clerks who came here had no definite tenure of their offices. If the Congressman or the Senator who appointed them was defeated at the next election, the employee went back into the home district. But since the civil-service laws have been in force and the employees have found that good and faithful service was to determine their official tenure, they have purchased little homes on the installment plan. All over this city you will find row upon row of pretty little houses occupied by Government clerks and clerks in the business establishments of this city. They have paid for them in installments, and the burden of the cost that this legislation and some of the other proposed legislation in regard to District affairs will fall upon this great majority of the people here, who are not wealthy, who have nothing but their little homes, and who should not be burdened with this unnecessary expense.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Can the gentleman from California cite a single other city in the United States where the benefits accruing from special assessments are not assessed upon the abutting property, other than at the street intersections?

Mr. KAHN. There is no other city in the United States that has so much Government property within its limits as this city of Washington; and the Government property is not assessed, and does not contribute a cent toward the maintenance of the District government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is only one National Capital.

Mr. KAHN. As my friend from Kansas says, there is only one National Capital. Therefore you have a different condition here from the conditions that prevail in other cities throughout the Union.

Mr. GORDON. Will my friend yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON. Why, then, ought not the General Government to construct the residences and the buildings on this private property?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman knows that no man in this House would stand for any proposition of that kind.

Mr. GORDON. No; I do not.

Mr. KAHN. And yet I will tell the gentleman that there are men who have gone so far in their socialistic ideas that they think this Government ought to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing homes for people throughout this country. Would the gentleman vote for a proposition of that kind?

Mr. GORDON. No; I would not.

Mr. MANN. Probably the gentleman will before long. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I certainly hope this legislation will not be enacted.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTON. I would like to ask if it is not true that in the capital of nearly every State in the Union there are many State buildings that do not pay taxes, and yet can the gentleman name a State capital that relieves the tax payers from their proportionate share of sidewalks and street improvements?

Mr. KAHN. In the capital of a State there is generally a capitol building——

Mr. BARTON. Oh, more than that.

Mr. KAHN. I can think of no State capital offhand that has any additional State buildings.

Mr. BARTON. You ought to come out to Nebraska. We will show you some there.

Mr. MANN. What is the capital of Nebraska?

Mr. BARTON. Do not you know?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not know.

Mr. BARTON. I would infer from the remarks the gentleman made awhile ago that he did not.

Mr. MANN. I really do not. I suppose if I should think for a moment I would know. But everybody in the world knows where the Capital of the United States is. That is different.

Mr. KAHN. And you have a different condition here from that which prevails in any State capital?

Mr. BARTON. I would like to ask one more question.

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTON. Is it not true that in cities all over the United States there are many poor men, drawing less wages than the Government employees in the city of Washington, who pay for their sidewalks and pay for their street repairs?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know of any city in the Union that has as many homes of comparatively poor people as Washington, because the Government clerk does not ordinarily get much beyond a living wage. As I said a moment ago, I know of no parallel case in the entire Union to the conditions that prevail here in the District of Columbia. I have frequently heard it asserted that there are so many millionaires here and that they ought to bear these expenses. I will warrant that if any gentleman on this floor were to make an investigation of the number of millionaires here in the District of Columbia he would find that there are less than 50. They probably come here just for the social season and as soon as Congress adjourns close up their houses and go elsewhere.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is furnishing the House with very interesting information as to the number of millionaires infesting the city of Washington. Can the gentleman furnish the House with the average property holding of these 50 millionaires?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know how much property they hold, nor do I know just how many millionaires there are in Washington. I think 50 would be a pretty good guess. But I do know this: That in the northwest, in the northeast, in the southeast, and in the southwest there are rows after rows of houses that are occupied by Government clerks and clerks in the various establishments here in the city of Washington.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know how much property they hold that is escaping taxation?

Mr. KAHN. I have not looked into that matter.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. BARNHART. I notice in the newspapers from time to time advertisements for the sale of these houses that are built by speculators to be sold to Government clerks and others, in which they say that there will be no sidewalk assessment and no street assessment, because it is in the city of Washington. Does the gentleman from California believe it is right that his constituents at home who earn the money should pay for the sidewalks of those people who buy property for speculative purposes?

Mr. KAHN. I have not looked into the question carefully, but I am informed that it is customary to lay the sidewalks even before the construction of the houses is begun. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] at my left says that that is a fact. So far as my constituents are concerned, I want to say to my friend from Indiana that some of them drift into Washington every day of the year. They are all proud of this Capital of their country. They have never yet expressed a desire to have me vote against proper appropriations for the improvement of the Nation's Capital. They say it is a beautiful Capital, and they want it beautified still more.

Mr. BARNHART. Has the gentleman ever asked any of them if they are willing that he should vote their money for the personal gain of people who are located here?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think that question enters into it. I rather think that the amount involved in the matter is comparatively small, and I think if I were to ask them whether they would pay a proportion of the cost of the sidewalks or whether they would deprive the Government clerks of an opportunity of acquiring modest, but comfortable, homes, they would say, "Vote for the sidewalks." I would ask the gentleman from Indiana whether any of his constituents ever objected to his voting money for this purpose?

Mr. BARNHART. I will say that whenever I mentioned in my campaign speeches if they were in favor of voting certain assistance to the people who live in Washington who buy property for speculative purposes my interrogatory was always greeted with a whoop of noes.

Mr. KAHN. Did the gentleman ever have an opponent who took the opposite view?

Mr. BARNHART. No.

Mr. KAHN. With whom he debated the question?

Mr. BARNHART. No; but I would be glad to have my friend from California meet me on the stump at home, and I now extend an invitation to him.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I have always enjoyed my visits to the gentleman's State, but I am afraid that circumstances would not allow me to accept. But I am satisfied that if he were to debate the matter with an opponent who took an opposite view from his, that opponent could show the people of his district that no great harm was done them and much good was being done to the Capital and the Nation.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether or not he knows of any case where the sidewalks have been built for owners who bought the property for speculative purposes? My experience is that where a piece of property is bought and it is desired to be improved by the owner, neither the District of Columbia nor the United States has improved the property, but that the sidewalks have been built in every case by the owner of the property.

Mr. BARNHART. In order to get at the matter in a definite way I will ask the gentleman from California if he has made investments in real estate in Washington?

Mr. HAYES. I have; and I will say that I have paid for the improvements myself, and so has everybody else that I know of. I will ask the gentleman if he knows of any case where it has not been done by the owner?

Mr. BARNHART. It is a common rumor, and I have seen it in the newspapers. If there is nothing in it, we are losing time in discussion.

Mr. HAYES. I think we are, and I think there is nothing in it.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand the gentleman from California, Mr. HAYES, to say that he has bought property and paid for these improvements himself.

Mr. HAYES. I have.

Mr. BORLAND. Then why does the gentleman object to this measure?

Mr. HAYES. Because I think it is unjust. Take Pennsylvania Avenue, a wide avenue. When property is first developed it is proper for the owner to pay for all improvements, but after an avenue like Pennsylvania Avenue has been accepted and used by the public for years and years it would be grossly inequitable to ask the adjoining property owner to pay for keeping the streets and sidewalks in front of the place in repair.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman thinks it would be unjust to compel the owner adjoining Pennsylvania Avenue to pay for the construction of sidewalks or keeping them in repair?

Mr. HAYES. Grossly inequitable.

Mr. BORLAND. He thinks it should be paid for by the people of the Nation?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman that the way we do it in the West is this: After the streets have once been put in proper condition by the property owners and the city has accepted them, thereafter the city pays for the repairs.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. As I understand, this bill contemplates the establishment of a system whereby street improvements shall be paid for by the abutting property owners. What provision is made in the bill whereby assessments will be made against the United States in case it owns the property?

Mr. KAHN. There is no provision in the bill; but the gentleman in charge of the bill states that he thinks the United States Government property would stand in the same position as the property of a private owner.

Mr. IGOE. There is no question about that.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman must know that in order to get a sidewalk repaired surrounding a Government building there would have to be an appropriation by Congress, and the repairs would be held up until the appropriation was made.

Mr. IGOE. I will say that every cent of money spent for maintaining sidewalks is paid out of an appropriation, and when collected it is turned back into the fund, and so you would have to have an appropriation anyway from Congress.

Mr. KAHN. The thing I have in mind is that if you begin to pick out separate parcels of land for repairs you will have to make a separate appropriation for the separate parcels, and you may have considerable difficulty in getting those appropriations.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in this bill because I think it is very much needed in the District of Columbia and puts the property owner in the District in the same attitude as the property owner in other cities of the size of the city of Washington. It would be interesting indeed to find out how many Members of Congress advocating a change of this law are owners of real estate in the District. In many cases those who rise oftenest against any change are usually men who own a piece of real estate in the District of Columbia. I do not know how many have real estate, or how many are developing real estate in the District. It would be interesting to let the RECORD show who they are.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman does not wish to imply that any of his colleagues would be influenced in their conduct on this floor simply by the fact that they had a few dollars invested in land here?

Mr. SISSON. I mean to say this, that the men who are quickest to rise and oppose anything like a fair assessment and a fair proposition for building the streets, as a rule, are men who are interested in the development of subdivisions in the District. I do not know whether that influences them or not. These men should answer.

Mr. HAYES. I want to say to the gentleman that I am interested a little in real estate in the city of Washington, and I resent the imputation that because I happen to have a few dollars in real estate here I will vote upon this floor in my own interest rather than in the interest of the public. I resent that.

Mr. SISSON. I am glad hear the gentleman make that admission.

Mr. HAYES. I made no admission.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's statement would be a very severe reflection upon those of us who have consistently opposed the gentleman's propaganda. By what right does he make such a statement as that? Take myself, for instance; by what right does he make that statement?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know——

Mr. MANN. I do not own as much property in the District of Columbia, nor anywhere else, as does the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. I do not believe the gentleman does own any property in the District—my information is that the gentleman does not. A newspaper in the city of Washington, some time ago, in an editorial, said that when Members of the House and the Senate acquired property in the District, as a rule, they would look more favorably upon the District than those men who did not. I do not know whether that editor knew what he was talking about or not, but they generally do. I do know that some fine gentleman, misguided, perhaps, like my good friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who does not own any property in the District, do take a different view of this matter from what other gentlemen do, but it is a very difficult matter for one always to determine just what it is that does influence his views on public matters.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the fact that he owns a large amount of property in Mississippi in any way affects his views upon this subject?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know whether it does or not. I do know this, that if you are taxing me in Mississippi on the land which I own there for the purpose of developing property in the District of Columbia and burdening my property with that, I resent it.

I am willing that the people of the District of Columbia should pay taxes just as they pay in my city, just as they pay in your city. I want the burdens to be the same. I am unwilling that the burdens shall be greater in the District of Columbia in proportion to population and size than they should be elsewhere, and if the fact that the National Capital is located here, if the fact that the Capital was laid out on magnificent lines, puts upon these people a burden they ought not to bear, I am willing that the Federal Treasury should respond for the difference, but I am unwilling that a man owning property in the District of Columbia shall have a special privilege over the people living in various cities of like size and character throughout the United States, and, therefore, when the District appropriation bill was up I made the statement on the floor of the House, and I am willing to stand by it, that the property of the District of Columbia should be assessed at a fair valuation, and upon that fair valuation a reasonable tax should be levied, and if that fund was insufficient to pay the expenses of the District of Columbia, as Congress wanted the District Government to be run, then that excess should be paid out of the Federal Treasury. That is right. A man in the District should pay taxes in proportion to the property he owns, just as a man does in any city in the United States. You are not placing an extra burden upon him. You are simply requiring him to bear the burdens all must bear in other cities, and in some the taxes are as high as 3 per cent and in some 4 per cent. I do not believe you will find a city in the world where the tax is as low as it is here, taking into consideration that all of the invisible personal property in the District is not taxed at all, only the visible personal property and the real estate is taxed here. It is a magnificent place for men who want to dodge taxes. Men with great fortunes may bring with them their personal property, their stocks and bonds, and live here in the District and escape all taxation on their great fortunes, and I am unwilling that the law shall remain as it is now so that this may become a haven of tax dodgers throughout the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the statement was made on the floor a moment ago that no triangular or small parks were being acquired. In the last appropriation bill in reference to these triangular parks, it was stated that all of the triangular parks in the old city that could be acquired have already been acquired. The District Commissioners are satisfied. My recollection is that there were 275 of these small areas in the old city that had already been acquired during the past number of years. Some of these little triangular pieces have been improved by valuable property, and the District can not get hold of that without paying an enormous price for it. Almost every unoccupied piece in the old city limits has already been acquired. Now, we have appropriated in the current bill $25,000 for the purpose of acquiring these small triangular pieces; they are called or designated in the hearings as small parks. We appropriated $25,000, which is now being used to acquire triangular pieces outside the old city limits. In the next year's appropriation bill, the one which is now pending in the Senate, we appropriated $15,000 for the purpose of acquiring parks in the new portion of the city. Therefore, we are gradually acquiring these triangular pieces all over the new part of the city, as we now hold practically all the property within the old area. So the gentleman from Illinois is in error when he says we are not acquiring any of these pieces of property, because here is a list of small areas, or small property here, which Col. Harding says is a tentative list, and they propose within the current fiscal year to acquire these pieces of property. I will not read them all, but I will count the numbers. There are 11 pieces that appear in the list at the intersection of streets, which they propose to acquire by purchase if they can at a reasonable price and by condemnation if they can not.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. SCOTT. Are those triangles completely surrounded by streets or——

Mr. SISSON. They are points where streets intersect at circles and where the avenues cross the streets. They do not cross at right angles, but the gentleman knows that each comes to a point——

Mr. SCOTT. But the gentleman from Illinois distinguished between triangles and points such as were under discussion a while ago.

Mr. SISSON. Those are streets continuing, and when they are cut off by a circle it would not come to a point and there is an irregular piece of land. You can not get at it; it is rather technical, and I do not know what designation could be made.

Mr. SCOTT. I understand a triangle to mean a triangular point of land entirely surrounded by streets, whereas the points which were under discussion by Mr. Mann——

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman will find a great many if the gentleman will follow the line completely; triangles would be formed, and they are cut up by circles; and there are these pointed pieces of land. They are the pieces of land where the avenues and streets intersect. They are all over the city, and the Members of the House are generally familiar with the character of pieces we are talking about. They are little parks at the intersection of streets.

Mr. SCOTT. But the gentleman still has not recognized the clear distinction between the class of property discussed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and that which is now under discussion, a triangle that stands out isolated completely and surrounded by streets, and a point of some one's property only two sides of which are exposed to the streets.

Mr. SISSON. I understand these triangular pieces of land are completely surrounded by streets.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not understand that that is the class of property to which the gentleman from Illinois referred.

Mr. SISSON. Most of these little triangular pieces have been acquired, the most important points in the city have been acquired. Next you have points of land out in the new portion of the city. I do not know how many, but there are several thousand of them. I do not recall, but the testimony shows the number of small pieces outside the city limits which are now being acquired. But coming back to this bill, in every city I know of the property owner—that is, the overwhelming majority of the cities—is required to build his own sidewalk, but here the Government builds the sidewalk and one-half of the amount that is to be paid by the property owner is paid one year one-third, the next year one-third, and the next year one-third.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. IGOE. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. And all the guttering on his sidewalk is paid for absolutely by the city or the District treasury, half of which comes out of the United States Treasury.

Now, this is manifestly unjust and unfair. The property owner here should bear the burdens like the property owner does in my State, like he does in the majority of the States, and as they do in nearly every city of the size of Washington. The property owner improves the property in front of his own property. Now, there may be a few cases where a property owner would be burdened by an extremely wide sidewalk. The peculiar formation of some of the street corners upon which property is located, if it is a triangle, we will say, will cause him to have extra burdens, perhaps, to bear, with the long sidewalk on both sides of his residence instead of just in front of it, but he has the advantage of having light in every direction, having air from every direction; and I believe that the man who buys that sort of a piece of property, having all those advantages, is certainly not done much damage, if he gets property situated that way, even if he pays for all the sidewalks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to state in conclusion that it is not my purpose to impugn to anybody any designs or dishonorable motives, but you will find that the greatest champions, as a rule, of letting these assessments remain as they are, are the newspapers, the influences in the city of Washington, Members who own property, the influences which surround Members of Congress, and by the large property owners and real estate men who are developing great subdivisions in this city.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You are not impugning the motives of any man when you state that his personal interest will influence his judgment, are you? That is an established fact of human nature.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know how far men's personal interests will influence their judgment. But I do know the men who are enjoying the protective tariff, we will say, old Schedule K, are the men who always find it to be their patriotic duty to defend a high schedule.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield a minute?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to call the gentleman's attention to Rule VIII, as follows:

> Every Member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented; and shall vote on each question put, unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman from Missouri going to vote on this proposition?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I am going to vote for it. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the rule recognizes the fact, and the old practice, if this is correct, is that when a man is interested in any particular subject, has any financial matter that might be affected in any way by the passage of a measure in the House, the gentlemn should rise in his seat and decline to vote on the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. You will find that in every State in the Union wherever a circuit judge is interested, directly or indirectly, in the trial of a case the laws of the State say that he must make known that fact, and shall not try that case unless it is by the consent of all parties. You will find in examining a juror to sit in judgment upon a case he is always asked whether or not he has any interest in it. Why? The law recognizes the fact that when men do have financial interest in such matters, although they may be as honest as the sunlight, human nature is the same the world over, and it is a difficult matter for a man to rise above his own financial interests. It is difficult for him to be conscious of the fact whether he is or is not influenced by reason of the fact that certain legislation is helping his property. I do know that the people living on the Mississippi River are the ones most interested in the levees on that great stream. I do know that people living in New York City are people most interested in developing the harbor. I do know that Members of Congress who have navy yards in their districts are the men most interested in building great ships and building battleships. It is true that many of them might want to vote against it, but they say that their constituents want it. Why do they want it? Because it is to their business interest to have them there. You find that the people of the great West are interested in irrigation, because they are interested in having that irrigated land. And it is difficult for me to understand why any man should feel that it was any sort of reflection upon him, because he happens to own real estate, for some man to say that that might have some influence upon his views of District legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. But I am rather surprised that, living in glass houses themselves, they undertake to throw stones at the people of the city of Washington, and charge that their views are wholly influenced because they own property here.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield for an apology.

Mr. SISSON. I did not say that it was wholly influenced.

Mr. MANN. I yield for an apology.

Mr. SISSON. I am not apologizing at all.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is apologizing partly, and he will apologize more pretty soon, I hope.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not apologizing. I simply want the gentleman to state what I stated.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman made his argument, and most of his talk was for the purpose of showing that the gentlemen opposed to this legislation were opposed to it because they owned property here, and that they were the first ones to rise on the floor of the House to oppose such legislation, which is not true, to begin with. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Illinois may be an exception to the rule.

Mr. MANN. But I am not an exception to the rule. That is just it. What is the use of dealing in innuendoes of that sort, which have no foundation in fact. Now, the gentleman complains that the people of Washington who oppose such legislation are interested in property in Washington, and the innuendo is that they are opposed to it because they are personally interested here.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] complains that under the existing law his people help to pay the taxes. If the gentleman from Mississippi owns property outside of Washington, does he help to pay the taxes here? Is this his position, that he helps to pay the tax in Washington on property outside of Washington? The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] takes the trouble to read a rule of the House forbidding gentlemen from voting upon a proposition in which they have a personal interest, and then says, or said before, that he is opposed to the existing law because his people, including himself, pay taxes to help support the city of Washington.

Is that a personal interest? If it is not a personal interest in his case, it is not a personal interest in the case of anyone who owns property in Washington. What is the distinction between owning property in Washington and owning property outside of Washington, so far as this question is concerned? Because on the one side they seek to put all the taxes upon the property here and on the other side seek to bring in a portion of the money from taxes outside of the city of Washington. There is no distinction, and there is no reason for dwelling upon such a reflection and innuendo, that may be hard to meet, and that has no foundation, and is unworthy of such gentlemen as the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], if his argument were pursued to its legitimate conclusion, would exclude practically the whole membership of this House from voting on many propositions that come before it. Now, so far as I am personally concerned, the fact that I happen to own a little property in the city of Washington does not affect my attitude upon this bill, because it does not affect my interest in any way, and if it did it would not affect me in the performance of my public duty. I believe I am able to rise above any little personal matter that I may have when it comes to the performance of my public duty, and I believe that every man on this floor whom I have the honor to know is large enough to rise above a few dollars which might be affected on matters that come before this body in which he must act as a public official.

Although I and the gentleman from Mississippi may pay a few dollars tax in the District of Columbia, does he suppose that the fact that I do or that he does influences us, or does he suppose that it influences me? I do the gentleman the credit of believing that although he may pay something, and perhaps more largely than others, to support the Government of the District of Columbia, that fact does not influence his conduct and his judgment in matters that come before this House for consideration.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman never would take a man on a jury who was at all interested in the case?

Mr. HAYES. It all depends on the man. I have seen men where that consideration would not affect me a particle in deciding whether they should sit on the jury.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Have you ever seen a man who was interested in a case before a jury where you would select him as a juror?

Mr. HAYES. I know of many men who, if they were interested, would do just as an ordinary honest man would do. In order to be straight, he would lean backward. If he had an interest, he would see to it that he leaned on the other side rather than on the side of his own interests. Any man would do that if he is honest.

Now, so far as my personal interest in this matter is concerned, let me say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I have a small piece of real estate in Washington. I got it when I first came here, intending to build a home for myself, but circumstances rendered it desirable that I should not build it. I had it for sale for some years, but I could not sell it as a whole. For that reason I own a little real estate in the District of Columbia. Now, whenever I have made any improvements or have desired any improvements on the property that I own, I have made them myself. I have never asked the District of Columbia or its commissioners or anybody else to spend a dollar for me in the improvement of my property, and I never expect to.

This proposition that is now before us is a very different proposition. Having been interested in that way in real estate in the District of Columbia, I understand something that perhaps other Members do not understand about the laws that apply to the District. For more than 20 years it has been unlawful for the District revenues to be applied to the improvement, in the first instance, of suburban property in the District of Columbia. Therefore I asked the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] whether that has been done. If it has been done, it is in violation of the law. The law of 1893 prevents anything of that sort. I know of no case where it has been done.

Now, in the matter of the improvement of sidewalks, when an owner of property—like myself, for example—has improved the property and laid down the sidewalk and put in the water and sewer and improved the street, and every public improvement has been made, and the property has been sold and occupied by the owner, I believe that it is grossly inequitable, when the city desires vastly to improve or to change the sidewalk in front of his property, for the city to ask him to do this for the benefit of the public, because that is what it amounts to.

In the city where I live, and in various other cities out in that country, the sidewalks and street improvements are made by the owner, and he having made those improvements, it becomes the duty of the city to see that the sidewalks and streets are kept in repair, because they have then become public property, and it is in the public interest and the public should pay for it. If there is a city where that is not the rule, then I say it is inequitable. The streets are the property of the public. The public uses them, and therefore the public should keep them in repair.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. May I ask the gentleman why it is that he paid all the costs of those special improvements on his property when the law authorized him to get rid of part of it and impose it on the people of the United States and on the people of the District?

Mr. HAYES. The law does not authorize that.

Mr. GORDON. That is the law we are repealing now in this bill.

Mr. HAYES. No; I said not. The law does not allow the commissioners to spend the funds of the people of the District for improving suburban property in the first instance. You can not spend money for improving streets and laying down sidewalks and making other improvements in the suburbs of this District. That is the law, and has been the law for 20 years. That is the law of 1893.

Mr. GORDON. What does the gentleman mean by suburbs?

Mr. HAYES. I mean the localities outside of the old-established cities of Washington and Georgetown. That is what I mean; the territory outside of that.

Mr. GORDON. This bill does not affect your property.

Mr. HAYES. I say it does not; and for that among other reasons I resent the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] that I am influenced in my opposition to this bill because it affects me. It does not affect me in any way.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman mind telling the location of his property?

Mr. HAYES. I have a piece of property in the north part of town on Nineteenth Street. All the public improvements have been made there. That is the only piece of property I own personally.

Mr. SISSON. Is that the Foxhall property?

Mr. HAYES. I have an interest in that, but I do not own it personally, and that is entirely outside of the old-established city.

Mr. SISSON. Is the property which the gentleman mentioned outside of the Foxhall property?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman own any other property besides those two pieces, Foxhall and the other?

Mr. HAYES. I do not.

Mr. SISSON. Foxhall is a development property, is it not?

Mr. HAYES. It is. It is a subdivision entirely outside of the city, and the improvements have been paid for by the owners entirely.

Mr. SISSON. The Foxhall development is located in the District of Columbia?

Mr. HAYES. In the District of Columbia; yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, I asked one of the gentlemen in charge of this bill whether this had anything to do with the change of the present half-and-half system, and I understood from him that it had not. The trouble is that gentlemen are confusing this bill with the proposition to change the half-and-half system. I do not think it is very creditable to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] or the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] or any other Member of this House to attempt to cast suspicion upon the motives of another Member of the House because of his position on any bill which may be before the House for discussion on the ground that he may own property in the District of Columbia or anywhere else. I want to say that if the gentleman had information he would not have his suspicions.

I own a house in the District of Columbia. The sidewalk in front of it is already built. I bought that house and have received the benefit of that improvement. Property owners in the District of Columbia have for a number of years been paying taxes each year, a portion of which taxes have been applied to the payment of a part of the expense of laying sidewalks in other parts of the city. The property which I own has received some of that benefit. Taxpayers in other portions of the city have paid a part of the expense of laying that sidewalk. If I supported this bill, I would be voting to relieve the property which I own of the expense of paying for the building of sidewalks in front of any other property in the District; but I do not think that is just or fair. I am perfectly satisfied to continue to pay my share of the tax of improving the sidewalks in other parts of the city when it comes other people's turn to have their improvements made.

Now, the question of changing the half-and-half system is another proposition. If the doing away with the half-and-half system will impose more taxes on the property owners of the District of Columbia than they have heretofore paid, then that will affect my interest; and on a proposition of that kind, if I took a position which would tend to relieve my property from the additional tax, I think my conduct might properly be criticized. If it is true that this bill now before the House does not attempt to make any change in the half-and-half system, the arguments which gentlemen have made do not apply at all to the question now under consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. IGOE. I should like to ask if we can agree on some time for the limitation of debate?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman can not do that now. Anybody who gets the floor has the right to an hour.

Mr. IGOE. I am informed that there are so many gentlemen who want to speak on this proposition that we had better let it go on for a little while.

Mr. SISSON rose and was recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair kindly inform me who has the floor?

Mr. SISSON. I had recognition from the Chair. I do not know whether that means that I have the floor or not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] was recognized for the purpose of preferring a request for unanimous consent to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. SISSON. Then the gentleman from Missouri stated that there seemed to be a good many gentlemen who desired to speak, and he would let debate run awhile. Then I addressed the Chair and got recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought gentlemen were trying to make an arrangement as to the time for the discussion of this bill.

Mr. SISSON. There have been two speeches made on the other side anyway, and I thought I had recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did recognize the gentleman. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas later.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not see why gentlemen should be captious about this proposition. It might be a good idea to have an experience meeting, to see how many gentlemen here do really own property in the District of Columbia. I take it that the mere fact that a man owns a home in the District of Columbia might have but little effect upon his views on public matters in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman there a list of Members who are property owners?

Mr. SISSON. I have not, but I have frequently thought it might be well for each Member of Congress to arm himself with a list of the owners of the various pieces of property in the District, owned not only by Government officials but by Members of Congress, and then analyze the positions taken by them here.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not know but that was a copy of the Bible that the gentleman had in his hand.

Mr. SISSON. This is the bible that ought to control the Members of the House. It is the book of rules of the House. I call attention to one of the rules here:

Where the private interests of a Member are concerned in a bill or question he is to withdraw. And where such an interest has appeared his voice has been disallowed even after a division. In a case so contrary, not only to the laws of decency but to the fundamental principle of the social compact, which denies to any man to be a judge in his own case, it is for the honor of the House that this rule of immemorial observance should be strictly adhered to.

That is in Jefferson's Manual——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If that rule were strictly adhered to it would prohibit any taxpayer from representing the people in any legislative body in the country, would it not?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, there is a great difference between the system of taxation in the State and the system of taxation here. In the State when a member of the legislature votes a tax rate upon the people of the State he votes the same rate upon himself. But a Member of Congress here voting on a tax matter, voting on the improvement of property, votes $1 out of the Federal Treasury and $1 to come out of the District treasury, which bears one-half of the burden of taxation. If down in my State, every time the State put up a dollar for any purpose, some gentleman was to duplicate that dollar by laying down another dollar beside it, you would find that the people of the State would be much more willing to be taxed than they are willing to be taxed now. Therefore a man buying property in the District of Columbia and living in the District of Columbia without a vote can not take part in any law affecting property here. He is without representation. But when a Member of Congress is elected to this House by a constituency at home he comes to Congress and then acquires property here for the purpose of developing it, for the purpose of engaging in the real-estate business, for the purpose of putting it on the market, not buying it for a home for the term that he represents his people in Congress—I say, at the least, it is getting very close to the breach of propriety.

As I said in my opening remarks, because men interested can not separate their votes from their interests, that it is extremely doubtful whether Members of Congress should become interested in the development of any particular locality or become interested in speculative real estate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman understand that this bill proposes to change the half-and-half system?

Mr. SISSON. It does not altogether.

Mr. OGLESBY. The gentleman's argument has been directed to the question of taxation and not to this assessment. In what way could the change made in the assessments operate to the advantage of a man whose property has already been improved?

Mr. SISSON. It is the difference in the development of the District property. This bill provides that the property owner shall pay for sidewalks, and under the present law he does not.

Mr. OGLESBY. There is a sidewalk already in front of my property. How can this bill affect me or help me?

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman does not have to repair it soon, it will not affect him at all, but if he owns it long enough it will affect him.

Mr. OGLESBY. Would it not relieve me of paying taxes toward the building of some other man's sidewalk who has been contributing in taxes upon his property to the improvement of my property?

Mr. SISSON. That does not follow.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that his opinion was that it was of doubtful propriety for anyone to have anything to do with legislation relating to taxation of Washington real estate who was an owner of property here for development.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This is being celebrated as Washington's Birthday. Does the gentleman mean to cast any reflection on the Father of His Country who owned a great deal of land here?

Mr. SISSON. I do not believe the Father of our Country——

Mr. MANN. He did the identical thing that the gentleman condemns.

Mr. SISSON. At that time he was not a Member of Congress. He was never a Member of either branch of Congress.

Mr. MANN. He was a Member of both branches of Congress, having the veto power; that is, he was President of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. I do not believe, if what they say about it is true, that it is to the credit of the Father of our Country that he was interested in developments of real estate here, and if he located the Capital with any idea of locating it anywhere near his property it is not to his credit.

Mr. MANN. I think it is very much to the credit of the Father of His Country that when the Capital of the Nation was located here he endeavored to develop it instead of opposing it, as is the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. If he developed it in any unselfish way, without any idea of himself obtaining profit by virtue of the advance in real estate here by taxing the people of other portions of the country, then it was all right. But the gentleman from Illinois must recall that the system of taxation in the District of Columbia at that time was entirely different from what it is now.

The gentleman must understand that the people of the District of Columbia had the right of suffrage and had a legislature of their own. They taxed their own property, levied their own tax rates, and as it is now it is within the power of Congress. The power is in Congress to control the development of this city. It is within the power of the majority of this House and of the Senate to control it. But when they had the legislature elected by the people——

Mr. MANN. They did not have any legislature in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This city was never the seat of the Government while George Washington was President of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Tennessee is right about it. I am sure that the Capitol or the White House was not built when Washington was President. The gentleman from Illinois will have to revise his history a little.

Mr. MANN. No; I will not. I have said nothing to the contrary.

Mr. SISSON. Now, during the time Washington was here, it has been said—I do not know how true it is—that he owned property to the east of the Capitol, but the city grew the other way. At that time, I am reminded by the gentleman from Tennessee, Washington was one of the commissioners to locate the Capital. As President he had nothing to do with legislation with reference to the District of Columbia.

Now, I believe if a man wants to be absolutely above any sort of suspicion, if he wants to guard his vote upon this floor with sacredness, in view of the fact that you vote to take out of the District of Columbia treasury only one half of what it takes to run the District, and out of the Federal Treasury the other half, his interest then in spending money in the District of Columbia and in the development of property falls upon him with half the weight that it would if it were being developed in his home State.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. If a man owns property that is fully improved here to-day, the streets paved and the sidewalks built—if this bill passes and he had voted for its passage, he would have voted to relieve himself from the burden of taxation for building sidewalks throughout the city, and he would be charged, and properly so, with voting selfishly, would he not?

Mr. SISSON. No; he would not, for this reason: The moment his sidewalk gets out of repair he will have to repair it himself. Under the present law the District of Columbia would improve the sidewalk and keep up the improvement. Under this law he would not only build his sidewalk, but he would improve his own sidewalk.

Mr. MADDEN. But with his sidewalk already built, he would be subject under the present law to taxation for other sidewalks to be built.

Mr. SISSON. That is true, but because you happen to have a bad law, it is utterly impossible to change the law without in some way affecting somebody.

Mr. MADDEN. But this man might have influence enough to change it back again before his sidewalk got bad.

Mr. SISSON. That is perfectly true, and that is why Members of Congress here interested ought not to vote on these matters.

Mr. OGLESBY. This system might have been wrong to start with, but having inaugurated it, and so many people having contributed to the construction of sidewalks in front of other property, does not the gentleman think it would be wholly unjust to change it now?

Mr. SISSON. I do not. On the contrary, if that is true, when you inaugurate a bad tariff system, according to the gentleman's argument you can not change it, and when you have a bad banking and currency law and people have obtained certain advantages or disadvantages under it you can not change that. The only question is, Is his bill a just bill?

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman think that argument analogous in any sense?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely; or I would not have made it.

Mr. MADDEN. I want the gentleman to tell me what to do. I own a house here, and the sidewalk in front of that house is constructed.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If I should vote to pass this bill, I would be voting to relieve myself from taxation. Would the gentleman feel that I had a right to vote to pass the bill?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, I am not doing the feeling. It is the gentleman from Illinois who must consult his own conscience and mind. I am going to try to do my own voting, and that is as much as I can do.

Mr. MADDEN. If I vote agaist the bill, then what?

Mr. SISSON. My friend on my right would refer the gentleman to the Bible. I am not trying to control anybody's conscience or anybody's vote, unless it can be done by reason and right. I never ask anybody to vote, directly or indirectly, otherwise than as his conscience dictates, nor is this any case where one should dictate to another. The rules of the House and of Jefferson's Manual refer to these things, and it is certainly within my right to refer to these matters, because the rules of the House permit me to do so. I am not singling out any particular man. I am talking about it as a general proposition, and I want to assert now that I do believe that it is a breach of propriety for a man to come to Congress representing his constituents at home to become interested in the development of property in various sections of this city or in the opening up of streets and the laying out of sewers, becoming a member of the board of aldermen, and endeavoring to have property developed along lines which would benefit the particular section or property that he is interested in.

It is natural for men to have their interests control them, because when the States pass laws that affect materially any one line of industry, affect materially banks or railroads, you find those men rise in protest against it. And why? Because it is to their interest to do so, and it is very difficult, indeed, for legislation of any kind to be passed that does not affect the interest of some. The ideas are conflicting here, and a man certainly ought to relieve himself of the temptation of voting to develop a certain subdivision in which he may become interested after he gets to be a Member of Congress.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman voted for the Agriculture appropriation bill, and has for years past?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Carrying an appropriation for the boll weevil and other things in reference to cotton, which the gentleman is raising?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman consider that he was doing anything improper in voting for that?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely not.

Mr. MANN. But that was for his personal interest just as much as this.

Mr. SISSON. When the bill carries money to handle the moth trouble in New England and all of the troubles throughout that part of the country and money to destroy or handle the boll weevil, when that is done it not only inures to the benefit of the people of the South and the people of the East, but to all of the people, and when the crop of that country is great, when the crop of that country is enormous and cotton is cheap, the people all over the United States get the benefit of it, and when the corn crop is plentiful the people in the gentleman's State get the benefit of it, and when the great grain crops are also plentiful and the harvest is abundant the people throughout the country get the benefit of it. The basis of all wealth, the foundation of all prosperity is to be found there. That is the source of all our wealth. It is either dug out of the ground or gotten out of the sea. The political economists lay that down as being the source of man's food and clothing.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the gentleman now in what he has just said, but under the gentleman's statement awhile ago I can not understand how he thought he was justified in voting for an appropriation which might be, and would be, very helpful in the amount of cotton that he raises on his farm.

Mr. SISSON. Now, the system of taxation is entirely different here in the District of Columbia. Where you want to develop a piece of property the entire benefit of which flows to the man who owns the property, and when you take one dollar out of the Federal Treasury to help to benefit that property, and they then pay less taxes than are paid by men in other sections of the country, then that man is getting more than he is entitled to.

Mr. MANN. But it is a question of the personal interest to which I called the gentleman's attention. I do not own property, but it is the question of personal interest to which I am referring.

Mr. SISSON. I know; if the gentleman will pardon me, I will come to that in a moment. Now, when you take out of the Treasury of the United States one-half the money and pay it on the development of property in the District of Columbia, and that amount is just the amount of difference between the burden placed upon the people of the District and the burden placed upon the people in our home cities, then I have no word to say; but my position is that the people of the District of Columbia, owning property here, are not paying their just burden of taxation. They are not carrying the burden they ought to carry with the benefits which they enjoy, and when you look at the assessment roll of this city and find that the assessment of invisible and intangible property is relieved of taxation and then find real estate and visible property is taxed, then I say before the District of Columbia ought to complain, or ought to have the right to complain, it ought to provide a reasonable assessment of all kinds of property in the District and then place a reasonable assessment on the property and tax it at a reasonable rate of taxation. Then if that does not raise enough money to pay the expenses of this government, then the difference will be ascertained, because the difference will be the extra expense the city bears on account of its peculiar situation and the manner in which the streets, alleys, and so forth, are laid out. Some people want the District of Columbia run on a more magnificent scale than cities elsewhere are run. I see no reason for that, but men do; and if Congress should want more done than the tax raised in this way will do, then let Congress pay for it.

If you will assess this property properly, all kinds and character in the District, and then put a reasonable rate of taxation on it, and if that does not raise enough money to run this District government as it should be run I am more than willing to have the balance paid out of the Treasury, but until it does bear its just burden of taxation and assessment I will not permit that payment to be made except over my protest.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman be willing to include in what he calls the reasonable assessment just described the property which the United States Government owns in the District?

Mr. SISSON. No; I will not.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not?

Mr. SISSON. I am willing for the United States Government to take care of its own property and build its own sidewalks, because if it were not for the enormous pay roll, if it were not from the fact that money comes flowing from every State of this Nation into the Federal Treasury, with a pay roll amounting to——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Six million dollars a month.

Mr. SISSON. As the gentleman to my left says, $6,000,000 a month paid here. Failures in great manufacturing cities, bad health conditions, may affect them, but in the District of Columbia the salaries have been increased, not only in the amount paid per individual, but they have been increased gradually in number, and there is no such thing as a dearth of money in the District so far as wages paid is concerned, but in the steel industry when you close a steel mill down it affects the wages paid where it is located. In a great city like Chicago when you have great failures in mercantile establishments it affects the wages. So it is throughout the country. In the District of Columbia this perennial stream of money goes into the Treasury and from there it goes into the salaries of these wage earners, who in turn spend it here in the District of Columbia, keeping property values at what they are, increasing the value of property rentals, because all the property is to be developed from the benefit they get from the location of the capital city here.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SISSON. The city of St. Louis at one time was willing to take the Capital and duplicate these buildings here. The great city of St. Louis and the State of Missouri, in the center of the Nation, could well afford to duplicate all this property and carry the Capital City to the center of the Nation. In other words, mileage and expenses necessarily attached to getting to the Capital would soon pay for the Capital again. You talk about moving this Capital from the District of Columbia, and you will hear a howl go up, and after that they will complain that the Capital City is a curse to them. I have talked with them, and they complain about the Capital City having so much land, owning so many parks, and yet the men who own the real estate will turn over great tracts of lands and have the Government condemn them and tear down great buildings in order to force the development of the city along certain lines and in certain directions. They are the men who are behind all this park movement. In one breath you will hear them complain about the land that is in parks, and in the next breath you will hear them complain because Congress is so penurious that they will not buy the parks from them.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman's contention is that without the Capital here the property of the city would be of no value, and yet how is it that in cities like Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Cincinnati, and all cities of that class, where they have no capital to make their prosperity, they continue to be prosperous and happy, and the values of their land are equal to the values of the land here, and yet the tax rate there is not as high on the property owner per capita as it is here?

Mr. SISSON. Now, I will answer the gentleman. This was a perfect wilderness. It was set apart here not as a manufacturing city, but it was intended to be the seat of government. This is the seat of government, but this is not a city where without the Government it would have developed, surrounded as it is by Baltimore on the one side, Philadelphia on another, Richmond on another, Norfolk on another; and Alexandria is also an illustration of what happens to a town unless it happens to contain the Capital.

But no man contends that this city which we have here now would have ever existed at all on the map but for the location of the seat of Government here. That being true, these people are here, getting more and more benefit out of the Capital and out of the money that is spent here than anybody else in the United States, and more personal benefit; and if it were not for this, then the Capital City would have no enormous wage scale. No State government has ever paid taxes on the property in its capital city, and this Government will not permit it to be——

Mr. MADDEN. The fact that we have the Capital of the Nation here has prevented the development of a manufacturing industry here of any kind.

Mr. SISSON. I think that is true; but I do not think it ought to be permitted. But the Capital being located here, and having built a city, then these people want to add to this a manufacturing center. The contract between the States of Maryland and Virginia and the Federal Government was that this should be a capital city, and it ought to be a capital city. And I am willing that it should be treated fairly and properly. I am willing that all the burdens that they bear over and above the burdens which they ought to bear should be paid out of the Federal Treasury, and in that way the District of Columbia would pay what she ought to pay and the Federal Government would pay out of the Treasury the amount necessary to supplement that fund and conduct the Government as they saw fit and proper to have it conducted.

The people of the country are going to wake up on the proposition. When you tell me that you can go before your constituents and discuss this matter and justify the present system, I think you are mistaken. I do not think there is a constituency in the country that does not want the Capital City to be what it ought to be, but, on the contrary, I do not believe there is a constituency in the country that wants the landowners of the District to enjoy all the benefits without bearing their just share of the burdens in this city.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman has spoken several times about the necessity for having the law compel the District and the Government of the United States, respectively, to share equitably in the expenses, the burdens of taxation, and so forth, of the District. Has the gentleman from Mississippi clearly in his own mind just what he thinks would be a just division of these expenses and burdens?

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman had paid close attention, he would have remembered that this is what I said: Let the property of the District of Columbia of all character be assessed at a reasonable value, and then levy a reasonable rate of taxation against that. If it does not raise enough money to pay the expenses of the District of Columbia as Congress thinks the District ought to be maintained, then let the Federal Treasury supplement that difference. These estimates would come, then, to Congress, and if the District funds and the District revenues did not pay the demands made upon Congress with the showing which they could make, then Congress could supplement that with any fund they saw fit and proper. In that way the people of the District of Columbia, each and every property owner, would be paying his just share.

Mr. COOPER. He would not know in advance just what his just share would be.

Mr. SISSON. He would in this way: The exact amount would be indeterminate, but under the present system the District now raises a certain amount of money, and under the peculiar law they report it all to Congress; that then is reported to the Appropriations Committee, and we are then called upon to pay just as many dollars that they have raised by taxation as we see fit and proper to do.

Mr. COOPER. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

I will preface it by saying that some time since I introduced a resolution here, and that I have never owned, nor do I now own, any interest in real estate in the District of Columbia—though there would be nothing necessarily wrong if I did. The resolution provides for the appointment of a commission consisting of two Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker, two Members of the Senate to be appointed by the Vice President, and five other persons not members of either House to be appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, to take up this whole subject of the past and the present fiscal relations of the District of Columbia and the United States, to make a thorough investigation of these, and after such investigation to report to Congress what, in the opinion of the commission, ought to be the future fiscal relations between the people of the District and the National Government.

Now, what does the gentleman think as to the advisability of passing something of that kind?

Mr. SISSON. Something of that kind may be done. Perhaps something of that kind ought to be done. But that ought not to affect this bill.

Mr. COOPER. There is such a dispute here every week as to what ought to be done——

Mr. SISSON. I will submit this proposition to the gentleman: Does not the gentleman believe that all of the personal property of men moving into the District of Columbia and taking up their abode here——

Mr. COOPER. That is not germane to the question I asked.

Mr. SISSON. The proposition which the gentleman presented is not germane either.

Mr. COOPER. It was entirely germane to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi to which I referred.

Mr. SISSON. I answered the gentleman's question courteously. Does the gentleman not believe that personal property of men moving into the District of Columbia, to live here, should be assessed in the District of Columbia?

Mr. COOPER. The law of taxation is that real estate is taxed——

Mr. SISSON. I am not talking about real estate.

Mr. COOPER. In my State, and I suppose everywhere else, personal property is taxed in the place where the owner resides.

Mr. SISSON. Very well. Ought it not to follow him into the District of Columbia?

Mr. COOPER. Of course; but there ought not to be double taxation.

Mr. SISSON. But it does not follow him into the District. If a man came here from the outside with $100,000,000 of railroad bonds or notes, they would not be taxed.

Mr. COOPER. I am not speaking in favor of, or intimating that I am in favor of, any evasion of taxes, or anything of that sort.

Mr. SISSON. That is the system here now and many people are moving here to evade all taxation.

Mr. COOPER. One moment. The city of Washington is the Capital of the greatest Republic the world has ever known, and of incomparably the richest Nation. There is, in my judgment, a very distinct difference between what ought to be a system of taxation in the District of Columbia, where the National Government owns so many millions dollars' worth of property——

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield to a speech.

Mr. COOPER (continuing). And a city where there is no seat of a great Government.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman has not answered my question, and that is, Does he believe that a man should come here from New York City, or from anywhere else, and bring with him intangible assets, running into the millions, and pay not a cent of tax on them, and that the greatest Republic in the world should permit its Congress to perpetuate that sort of thing? That is what is being done.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I answered the gentleman's question by saying that personal property is taxed where the residence of the owner is located. I stated that in so many words.

Mr. SISSON. Then, if that be true, the District tax should be changed. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. On the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], does not the gentleman from Mississippi realize that the District Committee of the House in this Congress is now actively engaged in investigating these tax inequalities, and that it has reported bills for the correction of them, and that this is one of the bills that has been brought out for those various purposes, and that it also has a bill to tax intangible property and is designed to bring the taxation of the District of Columbia to an average uniformity with the taxation of other places of like size?

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. BORLAND. Then why is there any necessity for a commission to be paid for out of the Treasury?

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SISSON. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman. I want to state, Mr. Chairman, before I sit down that I am very much interested in a proper assessment and a proper tax rate for the District of Columbia. I believe that the duty devolves upon Congress to change the present system of taxation, which was put in vogue after the Boss Shepherd régime and the feather-duster legislature, which had placed this District overwhelmingly in debt.

Congress found it bankrupt, and in order that the District of Columbia then might be relieved of its burdens and the burdens of that corrupt government, Congress took the entire situation in hand. They had this anomalous situation to deal with, that one-sixth of the white voters and the entire colored vote of this city could elect all the officers of the city government. The result was that they had a bad system of government, a system so bad that the history of it still "smells to heaven." Congress then even assumed to guarantee the payment of the debt of the District in consideration of the taking away from the people their right of suffrage and their right to control and their right to vote. Congress said, "In order that you may be safeguarded properly, Congress itself will pay one dollar every time you pay a dollar." Now, the District of Columbia is out of debt.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It has $22,000,000 of debt.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no. The gentleman is consulting some old figures. The gentleman does not know anything about it. The District is practically out of debt now. Practically that has all been done out of the Federal Treasury, and the Federal Government has been paying half the expenses. And because the Federal Government came to the rescue of the District, because the Federal Government rushed to the aid of the District in time of need, the land promoters are now citing that as a precedent, and they are contending that a special privilege has ripened into a vested right. I contend that no man has a vested right in any system of taxation of any kind or character. But if you will read the public press in the city of Washington you will find that everyone of us is arraigned and traduced as an enemy of the District, because we complain of the evils that exist here. I would do no man an injustice. I do not believe that my friends who know me believe that I would intentionally do any man an intentional injustice. I would not do the humblest taxpayer or the humblest servant of the colored race in the District of Columbia one particle of injury. I would not do the richest man in the District one particle of injury.

But I do want a system of taxation that will be just and fair and honest, so that these people may bear the burdens of taxation about in the proportion that they bear in the city of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] or in the city of San Francisco or in the city of Richmond or in the city of Nashville or the city of Memphis or the city of New Orleans and elsewhere throughout the country. And when that is done I am willing to give the people here in the District of Columbia the benefit of the doubt, and if they pay a taxation reasonably within the limit paid in other cities throughout the country in the maintenance of their city government I am satisfied. If Congress feels that sufficient taxes are not collected, and that the Capital city is not managed as it ought to be, then let Congress in its wisdom supplement that fund. That is the proposition I stand upon. It is a proposition I can defend anywhere, at all times, and under all conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman kindly answer a question?

Mr. SISSON. I will if I can. I do not know that I can.

Mr. OGLESBY. By whom would the gentleman have these assessments levied?

Mr. SISSON. By a board of assessors.

Mr. OGLESBY. And by whom would they be appointed?

Mr. SISSON. By the President.

Mr. OGLESBY. Would they be residents or property owners in the District?

Mr. SISSON. If I had my way about it, if you could restrict the suffrage of the District of Columbia to an intelligent electorate, I would turn the government of the District of Columbia over to the people of the District of Columbia and let them run their affairs and let the Federal Government run its affairs.

Mr. OGLESBY. Would the gentleman permit the assessment to be made by people holding property in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. No; not unless the President saw fit to appoint men who owned property here.

Mr. OGLESBY. Under the gentleman's theory that every man is influenced by his own selfish interests, would not these men, in order to hold their jobs, be inclined to make assessments against the property of people in the District of Columbia which would not be fair to those people?

Mr. SISSON. My judgment is that they would give a fair assessment. If they did not, you could have your appeal just as they have in all the States. The only trouble is not that the property is assessed too high in any city, or in this District. The great trouble is that property is not assessed high enough, as a rule, everywhere. That is what makes the rate appear to be higher than it ought to be.

Mr. OGLESBY. Would not these assessors have to assess Government property as well as private property?

Mr. SISSON. Of course not. The sovereign is never going to permit its property to be assessed. On the contrary, if this city pays a just amount of taxes on its own property, and that does not give a sufficient revenue to run the District government as it ought to be run, then it will be the duty of the Government to supplement it by whatever amount is necessary, on account of the peculiar situation here.

Mr. OGLESBY. I understood the gentleman to say that under the system he proposed an assessment would be levied upon all the property in the city, both private and Government property, at an adequate rate?

Mr. SISSON. I would not have Government property assessed at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I make no apology for having some pride in the fact that we have in the United States the city of Washington and that it is our National Capital. It belongs to the people of the whole country. In answer to a considerable portion of the discussion that has been going on here, I regret exceedingly to have to state that I do not have a personal interest in any real property in the District of Columbia. I regret that I do not own a large number of houses in this city. I have a small van load of second-hand furniture. By moving rapidly the assessors have some difficulty in finding it, and I think that it comes within the exemption, anyway. So that I am not speaking in behalf of a tax in the District of Columbia that would relieve me of any burdens or benefit any property that I possess here.

Ever since I have been a Member of Congress I have been interested in the growth and development of Washington. I have been glad to see this city becoming year after year more and more beautiful, more and more attractive—a city that is attracting tourists from foreign countries.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not now.

Mr. BORLAND. Just for a short question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman realize that much of that beauty has been attained through appropriations made by Congress out of the Federal Treasury, without assessment on the District and without contribution by the District of Columbia?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I realize nothing of the kind. The city of Washington has become more and more beautiful largely because there have been public-spirited men here, who have been assisted by public-spirited men elsewhere in the country, and who, by devising plans and by public discussions of the things that would promote the growth and enhance the beauty of the city of Washington, have contributed to its growth and its beauty. I am surprised that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], who voted a few days ago for an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States of the amount of $25,000,000 for the purpose of building public highways—some of them in Jackson County, Mo.—I am surprised that since he has voted money out of the Public Treasury to be dumped into the Missouri River, at every opportunity——

Mr. BORLAND. For the commerce of the Nation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For the commerce of Kansas City, which will never be carried by river.

Mr. BORLAND. For the commerce of Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The only thing accomplished by these millions of dollars voted for the Missouri River is to make Kansas City a basing point for lower railroad freight into and out of Kansas City, and raising the freight rate into and out of every city in the State of Kansas that is not on the Missouri River.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is utterly mistaken.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know exactly what I am talking about. Every time rates are readjusted in Kansas they have to be raised to Topeka and Pittsburg and Independence and Winfield, in order that Kansas City, because it is upon an imaginary navigable river, may have a lower freight rate. And that is the reason the gentleman has the face to stand up here when the river and harbor bill is under consideration and vote millions of dollars out of the Public Treasury, out of the taxpayers of Kansas, the effect of which is to raise their freight rates for the benefit of Kansas City, and the gentleman votes millions of dollars out of the taxes of other people who live in the cities to be expended on the public highways in front of his farm in Jackson County, Mo. Yet he holds up his hands in holy horror because a few mills per capita are paid out of the revenues of the United States for the purpose of making uniform the sidewalks of the city of Washington and making them fit to walk upon. That brings me to the discussion of the question before the House, the sidewalks in Washington.

Before the present system of sidewalks was established the sidewalks of Washington were a disgrace to the Capital of the Nation. Everybody knows that. There were mudholes here, stones there, boards over here, bricks somewhere else, and the people simply stumbled through the mud and over such stone and brick and planks as the abutting property owners, for their own convenience and for the convenience of the traveling public, saw fit to build in front of their residences and their property.

We adopted the present system, in the first place, for the purpose of having suitable sidewalks to walk upon. These sidewalks are primarily for the benefit of the pedestrian public in Washington—for the people who come from Kansas City.

Mr. BORLAND. And Pittsburg, Kans.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And from Pittsburg, Kans., and from Kansas City, Mo., and every other State in the Union; and they come here in great numbers. These sidewalks have been improved so to-day we have in Washington sidewalks that are a credit not only to Washington, but to the Nation. The people of the Union, when they come here, have a pride in the city.

A couple of days ago I had a number of constituents here. Each one was a taxpayer in a small way. They spent a large part of the time in praising Washington, because of its streets and sidewalks and because of its parks and the general beauty and symmetry of the city in its growth and in its development. I have never seen a visitor in Washington from any part of the country who did not have a pride in the fact that this was the National Capital.

Now, as I said, we have the sidewalks that have been built under the policy which has been in vogue for years. The portion of the city that is now developed accommodates some 335,000 people, and their sidewalks have been built under this policy. There are others under contemplation. The young man just admitted to public service under a civil-service examination has been led to believe that because of the manner in which the law has been executed he is entering upon a life service if he maintains good behavior in Washington; he will go out in the remote parts of the District and purchase a piece of ground for a house and have one built upon it on the installment plan. Under the present policy a uniform sidewalk would pass that house. He would pay his proportion of the taxes and the sidewalk would be in conformity with the law as it now exists, a uniform sidewalk for the use of the whole people of the District.

The proposition now is, and I believe the gentleman from Missouri claims that he is the father of the idea, to make that young man pay for putting in the sidewalk, every dollar of it, notwithstanding the fact that the 350,000 people who are all provided with sidewalks and have had them built under the present policy and the supervision of the engineer commissioner, making them uniform in width, uniform in depth, and uniform in material, making them of a permanent nature and of durable quality.

The young man is told that now he must build his sidewalk. Of course, he will build it as cheaply as he can, or he will not build it at all unless he is compelled to; but if he does not build it, it will be built and his property will be assessed for the benefit of the public, to furnish a public sidewalk to be walked upon by the people of the District, by people who come from remote parts of the country. The young man must build it, and the logic of the proposition now before the House is to relieve the 350,000 people who have had their sidewalks built of any liability toward the new sidewalk that the young man is to have in front of his little house.

Everybody else has contributed to build the sidewalks that the citizen now has within this developed area, but the undeveloped area on the outside will have to build its own sidewalks and make its own improvements and relieve the bondholder and the rich property owners that we have heard so much about from any taxation for development, for the purpose of making a uniform sidewalk in the outskirts of the city, where the poor and the small wage earners and the men and women who receive low salaries live. That is the proposition before the House. I submit to you that if there were nothing else—if the question of uniform sidewalks, the fact that this is the capital of the Nation, in which the whole people are interested, were eliminated from the question—if there were nothing in the case at all but the fact that the people who go into the outskirts of the city to make for themselves homes are required to pay for all improvements, relieving the people who have had the benefit of the present policy within the developed portion of the city—I say if that were the only question involved in the case this bill would be unjust and unfair.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. KEATING. I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] to say a few moments ago that in the districts outside of the old city of Washington the original cost of sidewalks was levied against the abutting property.

Mr. CAMPBELL. During the time I was a member of the District Committee, when I was acquainted with these matters, when a subdivision was laid out and when we provided for a street of uniform width, the persons making the addition made the sidewalks under the supervision of the commissioner and paid for them.

Mr. KEATING. Who paid for them?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The owners of the addition.

Mr. KEATING. Was that the uniform practice?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was for eight years. I do not know what has been done for the last three years.

Mr. COOPER. As I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], he said that that had been the law since 1893.

Mr. KEATING. He said for 20 years the original cost of the sidewalks outside of the old city of Washington had been paid for by the property owners. Therefore I could not quite follow the reasoning of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, that depends altogether upon the addition. Every addition that I knew anything about, where the sidewalk was put in, the property owners paid for it.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is familiar with the general law in the District of Columbia. The law is, is it not, that one half of the sidewalk is paid for by the property owner and the other half out of the District funds? One-half of the cost is assessed against the property owner for three years, one-sixth each year. Now, if a subdivision is opened up and the owners want to get it quickly on the market, the property owner gets permission from the street commissioner, submits plans and specifications, and pays for the entire sidewalk. When he does that the city later pays for it, does it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; he paid for putting in his sidewalk. He put it in to make his addition immediately available.

Mr. SISSON. But when they want to make it immediately available they get permission to lay their own sidewalks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. But the law still remains?

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from California must have been in error.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In that regard I think that is true. If the addition had been laid out and developed as there was a demand for the lots, the improvements would have been made as the city's necessities demanded and under the law as it now exists.

Mr. Chairman, I have regretted on other occasions, and I regret now, what appears to be a disposition to look upon Washington as a place that can be made a target for attack when there is nothing else to do. I hope that this is not done for the purpose of making cheap campaign material to be used at home. If that is the effort, I am confident that gentlemen will find at home men are not engaged in that species of small peanut politics. The people of the United States still have a pride in the city of Washington, and they do not want to see it degenerate into such a city as we had here 40 years ago, with sidewalks that were a disgrace to the city and to the Nation, with streets that were no credit to the people of Washington or to the people of the country. The people of this Nation have as great pride in their Capital as the people of any Nation on earth, and I have never heard any sort of complaint about keeping up the National Capital. The people of this country welcome the people of other nations here as tourists to compare our Capital with their own and the capitals of other nations, and I am hoping that the time will come when the Congress of the United States will take the view of Washington that will build it up, make it attractive rather than make it a target for attack, and not attempt legislation that will degenerate it into a third-rate city.

I want to see the streets beautified and the sidewalks kept uniform. We have here in Pennsylvania Avenue the greatest parade ground in all the world. It is an avenue on which incoming and outgoing Presidents have for a century made their trips from the White House to the Capitol and return. It is an avenue upon which marched the greatest triumphant army that was ever mustered out of service, remembered by every man who yet survives and will be remembered for centuries by the posterity of those men who paraded up Pennsylvania Avenue in that grand review; and I should like to see some of those old rookeries upon that Avenue torn down and in their places public buildings for the use of the Nation and statuary that would be a credit to the Nation and to the taste of the people. I should like to see this city a city that would be more attractive than London, Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, or the capitals of any other nation in the world; but you can not make it that kind of a city by standing here every Monday and advocating legislation that will retard its growth, that will make its beauty and uniformity and symmetry impossible, that will make it a place where Members of Congress shall come only to carp about the people of Washington and then go back home and tell their constituents, "I tell you, I made those people down there at Washington understand that you could not be taxed for the benefit of Washington."

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman, then, would be in favor of all the property along Pennsylvania Avenue becoming Government property?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to see most of Pennsylvania Avenue on both sides beautified by public buildings for the use of this Nation, so that we could save about $500 a year rent.

Mr. LOBECK. Does the gentleman know the ownership, for instance, of the property on the north side of Pennsylvania Avenue from Seventh Street toward the Capitol?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not. I do not know the owner of a single foot of property on Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. LOBECK. Why I asked the question is to suggest that these people in Washington who have a great deal of pride in their city and probably get very good rental out of this property down lower Pennsylvania Avenue ought to improve it so that it would be suitable property and look respectable.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yielded merely for a question.

Mr. LOBECK. I wanted to know how that could be cured if the Government does not hold that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It can not be cured by the policies that are being advocated here every District day.

Mr. LOBECK. I am in sympathy with a good deal of what the gentleman says.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman not think that those splendid things he has pictured for Washington would be well done if, at the same time, the people living in the District were fairly taxed on their property as they are in other cities?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want them to be taxed.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman is in favor of building and paying for sidewalks in the manner done now?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. Would the gentleman be in favor of a law that the people who have sidewalks in front of their houses should use a little human energy and probably expend a little money and have the sidewalks cleared after a snowstorm, as we do at home?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I would almost give the remainder of my time to the gentleman——

Mr. LOBECK. But you have to clean your sidewalks at home, and these people here are evidently too indolent in this city to do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not a creditable thing to any property owner that 12 hours after a snowstorm the snow is still on the sidewalk in front of his property, I do not care where he owns property.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman can not leave snow on the sidewalk at his home, and neither can I, and we take some pride in having clean walks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I close, as I began, by saying I make no apologies for having a pride in Washington, and I want to see it grow and become beautiful and a good place in which to live for those who come here, rather than to have its growth retarded, as the policies now advocated on this floor would retard it.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to enter into a discussion of the proprieties of the situation, but I would like to say a word in regard to the justice of it. Every time that any attempt is made by the committee, of which I am a humble member, to do what we think is justice, straight even-handed justice between the people living in the District and the people living outside the District, we are not only assailed by every newspaper in the city, but by many Members of this House, and accused of a purpose on our part to make the city of Washington an old cowpen. Now, I am just as proud of the city of Washington, my National Capital, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], but I think I recognize something that the gentleman seems to be somewhat devoid of, and that is that justice precedes, and should precede, pride. I am proud of the city in which I live. I like to see it with beautiful sidewalks; I like to see women all beautifully clothed. I recognize Washington; I want to see Washington beautiful, her citizens handsomely dressed, but back of all this lies a duty upon every Member of Congress before gratifying his instinct of pride that he do absolute justice between the people of this country. Now, there has been a good deal of diversion in this discussion, and I want to say for a few minutes something involved in the specific question. Under the laws of the United States applicable to the District of Columbia now the property owner pays for one-half of the sidewalk in front of his property. The Federal Government and the District jointly pay the rest. Now, I submit that that is not fair.

I do not care how much of pride you have got; I do not care how much of sentiment you have; I do not care how much you desire people to come here from other parts of the country and view this Capital; it is not fair. Let me take a little illustration. Just a few days ago I had, under the appointment of this House, the privilege of visiting the beautiful city of Macon, Ga., the home of Senator Bacon. When we entered that city I was attracted by its beauty. Its streets are wider than Pennsylvania Avenue ever was or ever will be. On each side there are sidewalks which I estimated by stepping as being about 47 feet wide. I was told they are 50 feet wide. In front of these sidewalks was a beautifully paved street and in the middle of the street was a beautiful park with trees, in which a sidewalk ran in the center, and on the other side it was the same way. It attracted my attention, because I had been told so many times that you could not have a beautiful Washington without going into the Federal Treasury to provide it, so I took special pains to inquire about what the situation was. I first went to the mayor and said to him, "Now, who pays for this great, big beautiful sidewalk in front of these buildings?" He said, "The property owners pay for it." "Well," I said, "who pays for this pavement in front here?" He said, "The street railway company pays one third, the property owner one third, and the city the other third." That led me to think about the situation you have in Washington. Here are men taxed for the pavement of the entire sidewalk 47 or 50 feet in width. It does not seem to have bankrupted the property owners, because the town seems to be thrifty, healthy, and beautiful. Not only that, but they pay for the pavement in front of their property, and I wondered, as I stood there and looked at it, if I had the nerve to come back to Washington and say, "You men should not only pay for your pavement and sidewalks in front of your property, but help the other property owner in Washington who is just as rich as you are to pay part of his pavement and sidewalk."

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. With pleasure.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Iowa Legislature a short time ago appropriated something like $2,000,000, if I am correctly informed, to buy an addition to the gentleman's home city. Does the gentleman think that was just and right to the taxpayers outside of Des Moines.

Mr. PROUTY. The gentleman is just as inaccurate in his facts in this case as in the one before.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I may be incorrect as to the amount and as to the acreage.

Mr. PROUTY. Entirely incorrect. I will give the gentleman the facts and then ask him a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. All right.

Mr. PROUTY. The State of Iowa made an appropriation for the purchase of a tract of land adjoining the capitol, for the purpose of enlarging the capitol grounds, and paid for it out of the State funds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you think that was right?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes, sir; if they wanted to do it, but I was not there and did not help them do it. What would you think of the proposition that Des Moines should come in now, and claim that because the State has done this the State should pay for all the sidewalks and all the curbing and all the paving in the streets of Des Moines, because you are taking that particular property out of reach of taxation?

If he should carry out the argument which he has announced in every speech which he has ever made upon this floor on this subject, the fact that the State of Iowa has taken part of the property in the city of Des Moines puts upon it an obligation to pay part of the expenses of running the city of Des Moines.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is not that true?

Mr. PROUTY. Pardon me, but I want to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OGLESBY]. I will take you up later.

Mr. OGLESBY. I was very much in hopes that the gentleman would adhere to his promise that he was going to stick to the subject.

Mr. PROUTY. I ought to have put into that statement "unless some fellow asked me some fool question." Of course, then I would not be expected to do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. OGLESBY. I am always interested in hearing the gentleman from Iowa. I am sure that he did not mean myself.

Mr. PROUTY. No; because you have not asked your question yet.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He is just anticipating the question.

Mr. OGLESBY. The gentleman said he thought it was unfair for the property owner to pay half, the District a quarter, and the Government a quarter. What part of it is unfair—that the District should pay a quarter or the Government should pay a quarter?

Mr. PROUTY. My judgment is that the people of the city of Washington should pay just like any other humble citizens throughout the realm, and that these special improvements in front of their property should be paid for by them, just like they are in any other town in the country.

Mr. OGLESBY. We will leave out the question of the Government entirely. In this city the sidewalks have been paid for in part by the property owner and in part by the citizens of the rest of the city, and of course the Government has paid its proportion. A man who has had his sidewalk paid for by the rest of the town has, after that, to pay his share for building a sidewalk in front of other property that has not yet been improved. Would he now want to say, "Having got my sidewalk, having been assisted in the payment for my sidewalk, I will stop this plan and let the people who will have their sidewalks improved hereafter pay the total cost of it"?

Mr. PROUTY. I heard the gentleman ask my friend the same question a while ago. There are two answers to it. In the first place, the law is not as you define it. As has been truthfully said here, on property outside of the old line, which is comparatively narrow, the fellows who built their sidewalks there now have to pay for it themselves, unless they wait for the slow process of the grinding in the mills of the gods, which they never seem willing to do. So there is no pertinency in your question.

Mr. OGLESBY. Is there not a great deal of property in the center of the city——

Mr. PROUTY. There is a little; but I will say this: That any man who has been holding property for speculative purposes within the old part of the city of Washington has no right now to complain.

Mr. OGLESBY. For 20 years he has assisted in the building of sidewalks in front of other property.

Mr. PROUTY. Conceding it was wrong 20 years ago and it is wrong now because it was in force 20 years, will you say it never can be righted; and if righted, will you say when?

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield to one more question? Let us assume that the gentleman and myself and two other gentlemen have a luncheon arrangement together whereby each one pays the total cost for each successive day. It runs for three days and then it comes the gentleman's turn. Would he say, "We will now change the plan, and let each man pay for his own luncheon before the cycle has been completed"?

Mr. PROUTY. When do you say the cycle is completed?

Mr. OGLESBY. When every man who has been paying taxes has his sidewalks laid.

Mr. PROUTY. Then the cycle will never end, because they never will all be built.

Mr. OGLESBY. Having started that way, the plan should be followed to the end.

Mr. PROUTY. My answer to the question as the gentleman propounded it, and making it a somewhat personal matter, I would say it would depend very much on what the other fellows had served as to whether I would be under obligations to continue until we went clear around.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It would depend on how the game was made up.

Mr. PROUTY. That would depend on whether anything of unfairness entered into it or not. If it was fair, it would be all right, but if a fellow had treated me shabbily in the first three meals that were served, it would not impose upon me an obligation to give them a turkey dinner.

Mr. PLATT. Leaving the United States out of it, as my friend from New York [Mr. OGLESBY] did just now, does it make the least bit of difference which way you do the thing, provided you keep it in the end. Whether a property owner pays half, or somebody else pays the other half, or whether it is all charged on him, what difference does it make in the long run? As long as you do not change the rules of the game while it is going on, it works out the same way in the long run.

Mr. PROUTY. Here is the United States putting up its part without any reward.

It is a good deal like a story that I heard one time. I remember Gen. Stone told this story after he returned from the war. He said he had a man who was always good at foraging. One day he saw him coming up the hill carrying a great big rooster with spurs on him about an inch long. As the boys saw him coming up the hill, knowing his propensity for gambling, they said, "Let us get up a little game for the rooster." The forager hung it on the lower branch of a tree, and the boys said, "Say, let's play seven-up for that." He said, "All right," and got out his old, greasy deck; and they played away for awhile, and the boys won his rooster. Then he got up and said, "Look a-here boys; you fellows seem to have played fah, and you seem to have won fah, but what in thunder did you fellows have up against my rooster?" [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. In a moment. Now, let me make the application. Here you are making the United States Treasury put up money year after year, money that is paid by the people who have sidewalks of their own to construct at home. My good friend has a little home here. I have one out in Iowa. I built the sidewalk in front of my house. He builds his here; no, he builds one half and asks me to build the other half. I ask, What has he up against my rooster? That is the question I am asking him. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. Leaving the United States entirely out of the question, does it make any difference whether the property owner pays half and the city pays half, provided you keep up the system to the end? Is it not to the interest of every millionaire, for example, in the city of Washington who has his sidewalk laid down to have this bill passed, so that hereafter he will not have to contribute payment for the laying down of other people's sidewalks?

Mr. PROUTY. Suppose several fellows who have built their sidewalks within the last 40 years should say, "I want this change, so that I do not have to help build other people's sidewalks"?

Mr. PLATT. That is what you are saying now.

Mr. PROUTY. No; what I am saying is, if it is wrong, the sooner you change it the better.

Mr. PLATT. It is not wrong, provided the system entered upon is kept up. The only wrong is the changing of the rules of the game while the game is going on.

Mr. PROUTY. The game was in existence the other way longer than it has been this way.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not want to unduly interrupt the gentleman, but it seems he does not agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] that this is a proposition which does not involve the half-and-half system; and in order to answer the argument as to its justice or injustice the gentleman continues to interject the proposition that the Government should not pay any share of this expense. Does this proposition involve the half-and-half system as it was understood between the Government and the District of Columbia?

Mr. PROUTY. Of course, I do not undertake to stand sponsor for what anybody else has said on this floor. I only stand sponsor for what I say myself. I would say that in a way it might be considered an infraction, a slight breach, in that sacred, hallowed, divine thing that we have heard here referred to occasionally as the "hawf and hawf." [Laughter.] Is that frank?

Mr. OGLESBY. Now, let me ask this question: Would it not be a good idea, if you are going to change that system, to change it whatever way would make a fair and equitable division between the citizens here and the Government in the payment of the cost of the District government and not to do it piecemeal in this way?

Mr. PROUTY. Because you have eaten your pie is no reason why you should stop eating entirely. [Laughter.] We do not want to divide this piece of pie. We say it belongs to the other fellow. He ought to take care of it.

Now, to be accurate and careful from the purely legal standpoint, this law now upon the statute book does not, in a sense, recognize what you call the half-and-half principle. It is a violation, if you please, of the half-and-half principle, because it makes the property owner now pay half. If it makes him pay half it would certainly not be any further violation of the half-and-half principle to make him pay all of it, because it is his property. We are not required to assign any reason why you gentlemen in Washington should have your sidewalks built for you when everywhere else the people are required to build their own sidewalks.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not ask my constituents to pay for my sidewalk in Washington, but I insist that I should assist other residents here to build theirs when they have assisted and are assisting me to build mine.

Mr. PROUTY. If you have lived here 40 years, others have assisted you.

Mr. OGLESBY. This is not a personal proposition with me. I have got mine, and I am willing to assist the other fellow.

Mr. PROUTY. We are overlooking this point, that this proposition embraces the repair of sidewalks as well as the construction of sidewalks. Do you mean to say that a sidewalk in Washington will last forever?

Mr. OGLESBY. Mine will last longer than I will.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. With pleasure.

Mr. FOWLER. As I understand, the gentleman is a member of the District Committee?

Mr. PROUTY. I am.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to get it clearly in my mind how the sidewalks in Washington have been built up to this time. Can the gentleman inform me?

Mr. PROUTY. For about 80 years they were built by the private owners; up to 1874.

Mr. MADDEN. Up to 1893.

Mr. PROUTY. That is the law that was passed. Of course I can not undertake to give you all of these laws. It would take the rest of my hour and somebody else's, too. In a general way for practically 40 years the city of Washington or the District of Columbia and the Federal Government have paid for one half of the sidewalks and the property owners for the other half. I think the particular act we are working under now was passed in 1893.

Mr. FOWLER. The Government has paid one-sixth and the District of Columbia one-sixth and the property owners one-fourth?

Mr. OGLESBY. The gentleman means one-fourth?

Mr. FOWLER. Congress pays one-half, as I understand?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. And the District one-fourth and the Government one-fourth?

Mr. PROUTY. Correct.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, as I understand this bill, it provides not only for the building of sidewalks but for the maintenance of sidewalks?

Mr. PROUTY. It does.

Mr. FOWLER. What I am interested in more than anything else is, if this bill passes, will it materially change the plan that is now in operation?

Mr. PROUTY. Not materially, but to that extent it does.

Mr. FOWLER. It is simply carried just a little further. Is not that true?

Mr. PROUTY. Perhaps it is the clipping off of a little bit of the plan.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. It puts the whole cost on the property owner.

Mr. FOWLER. What do you think about the advisability of doing the same as they do in Macon, Ga., requiring the street car system to pay a portion of the taxes to keep up the sidewalks and streets?

Mr. PROUTY. I have no question about the equity of that.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you think it would be a wise plan here?

Mr. PROUTY. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. FOWLER. They get the benefit of it, do they not?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; but as I said, I wanted to confine my remarks to this particular subject of sidewalks.

Mr. OGLESBY. The street car companies do not pay for the sidewalks, do they?

Mr. PROUTY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. I thank the gentleman very kindly for his explanation.

Mr. PROUTY. I want to make a general observation before I sit down. There has been a good deal of refinement here apparently upon the proposition as to what constitutes robbing the Treasury, or, as one Member put it, looting the Treasury. It seems to me a strange mental operation that does not distinguish the difference between legislators appropriating money for the general benefit of the whole people and appropriating money the direct and immediate effect of which is to affect them personally. We could not any of us legislate if we did not vote upon some matters that indirectly affect us as a part of the common people of this country, but that is not the question that is involved here. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] referred to the good-roads bill as looting the Treasury by taking out $25,000,000. Can not anyone recognize the distinction? What is looting the Treasury? Looting the Treasury is taking out the money that has been put in there by one man and giving it to another. It is not looting to take it out and give it back in fair proportion to those who put it in. The bill that the gentleman has characterized as a looting of the Public Treasury was simply a recognition of the great principle that since the agricultural interests of this country have paid since the foundation of this Government more than a moiety of the taxes that have been paid into the Federal Treasury the time has arrived when a fair proportion of it should be returned to them in direct benefits. That is no looting of the Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, this ever-recurring subject of taxation in the District of Columbia and the division of its burdens is not new. I have heard of the half-and-half plan until it almost nauseates me to hear it mentioned; but I want to tell you where I first heard of it, and how I was touched with sympathy for the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. I was placed on the District Committee away back in the days when Mr. Cowherd, of Missouri, one of the most brilliant men that ever sat in this House, ranked me on that committee, and was, as I recall, the ranking Democratic member. His present successor [Mr. BORLAND] is another very brilliant Representative, who is an advocate of the pending bill, hailing from the same city.

Just prior to that time the opening up of Sixteenth Street to the boundary and the building of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge across Rock Creek, and other very large permanent improvements, had been authorized. The District revenues arising from the collection of taxes were wholly insufficient to pay the District's half currently. There were certain so-called enterprising, public-spirited citizens of the District of Columbia—I do not deny that they are enterprising, as well as energetic, because I have never heard of their sleeping day or night when anything touching the half-and-half plan was involved—who came before the District Committee and said to us, "It is impossible for us to meet our half of these requirements. We can not issue bonds and put the burden on the future. These great permanent improvements are made for the future as well as for the present"; and they had the grace to ask us to loan the District money without interest. They asked the Government of the United States to advance to the District without interest so much money as was necessary to enable it to pay its half, in excess of the amount raised by current taxation. My recollection is that they asked us to advance it without interest. It has been a long time ago—too long to remember the exact details. I opposed loaning the money without interest. The argument was made, "We are voiceless. We stand here as sheep, dumb before our legislative shearers. We have no vote in ordering these great improvements. We are taxed without being consulted, without representation; and inasmuch as you have put these enormous burdens upon us for improvements made necessary by this being the Capital City of the Nation, without any corresponding benefit to us, we certainly ought not to have to pay interest on the amount you force us to pay in excess of our annual revenues."

That was a strong argument and well presented. It was made before the District Committee many times. When the question came up as to the amount of interest, I advocated not less than 3 per cent for the excess that we loaned them over and above their current revenues. That was less than any city in the Union could borrow money for. Finally we compromised on 2 per cent interest to be paid by the District on the funds advanced by the Government in order to enable the District to pay its half over and above current revenues. These gentlemen did not ask for a repeal of the half-and-half plan. I do not want to make any false impression. But they used the condition in which they were placed to argue that the half-and-half plan was an exceedingly great hardship as to these large permanent improvements. I got to studying about the matter. I could see that we have the power to vote to open a 500-foot street through this city if we want to, and not a man in the Capital can say aught, only by way of arguments before a committee or to Members individually. We could absolutely ruin these people, for we could vote for public improvements on a scale away in excess of the ability of people to pay, and then raise their tax rate until their annual revenues would equal one-half of those payments. They have no power to protect themselves, and we could absolutely bankrupt them. The power to tax is the power to destroy. They made such arguments. They instilled them into my mind. I got my impression of the injustice of the half-and-half plan, when it was liable to wreck and ruin the helpless, voteless, voiceless people of the District of Columbia. They got the money advanced by the Government at 2 per cent. I do not know whether that borrowed money has all been paid back or not.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; it has been paid back.

Mr. SIMS. But, if you will compute the difference between the rate of interest which they paid the Government and what they would have had to pay in the open market, as other cities have to pay, I have no doubt you will find that they in this way saved hundreds of thousands of dollars. Yet, we have newspaper men in the District of Columbia—or some people who write for the papers here—and men who make speeches in public gatherings here who speak of some of us as "enemies of the District." I never saw a new Member of Congress who was an enemy of the District; he comes here an enthusiastic friend of the District. He regards the Capital of the Nation as a beautiful city and hopes to continue his service here as long as he lives. [Laughter.] He comes absolutely bubbling over with friendship for the District. Now, when does he become an "enemy"? Why should the long residence here make an enemy of any man to the District? Such characterization has been one method pursued toward Members of this House, as I believe, to coerce action. I do not say that the substantial, sensible people of the District of Columbia are guilty of anything of the kind; but it has been a common characteristic of the campaign of certain interests in this District against Members of the House. "Enemies of the District" and "friends of the District." Everybody is a friend when they come here, and there is no reason why they should not remain friends. But I want to say that true "friends of the District" means friends of the District as a whole—everybody in it and every institution in it. It does not mean that you are friends to a small ruling coterie of citizens who want to say what shall and shall not be done.

I served 10 years on the District Committee and I know from actual experience how this thing is done. Some people want a public improvement in the southeast, some people want a public improvement in the northwest, somebody wants a public improvement in the northeast, and other people want an improvement in the southwest. The current revenues will not admit of all this improving being done at once. What do they do? They talk to you, those in favor of the northwest, and say that the other projects are not needed, that it is merely a real estate movement; and every other fellow in each of the other sections does just the same thing. Not being able to pay for all of them at once out of current revenues, one section wants its own particular project and consequently becomes an enemy to all the others. Gentlemen who have been here a long time, and particularly those who have been on the committee handling this kind of legislation, must know that I am speaking the naked truth. They attempt to discredit everybody's proposition except the one they are for, but if by praising them all they can get them all through they pull together. It grows out of the necessities of the situation. One section of the city that wants an improvement feels that it needs it worse than any other section. I do not know how it is now—I have not served on the committee for a long time—but the people of the northeast and of the southeast honestly believed that they had not been justly treated. They honestly believed that bills were passed through the House and the other body through the influence of certain prominent citizens in the District of Columbia, and whether it is true or not they believed it. They believed that Members of the House were controlled by such influence as that. It is unfortunate for the Capital, which gentlemen want to make so beautiful, for a large proportion of the people to believe that we do not consider merit in our legislation for the District. But such has been the fact. I do not know how it is now; I can not speak for the present.

At the time these gentlemen wanted to borrow money without interest, and did borrow it at only 2 per cent, the Government of the United States could sell 2 per cent bonds at par because they were nontaxable and enjoyed the note-issuing privilege, but no State government could borrow money at that rate. As a solution of the situation which might not be altogether desirable in every respect, I arrived at the following conclusion: Some evils may follow it, but you have to put to a practical test any law before we can find out how it will work. I said to myself: Why all this friction and contention about this half-and-half plan of taxation or District support? Why should the United States Government be hampered in making improvements in its own Capital because the local people are not able to pay one-half currently of such proposed improvements? Why should we be required to loan the funds of the people out of the Treasury of the United States to District taxpayers at a less rate of interest than any other city could get it and thus make in its favor a palpably unjust discrimination? I said to myself that the only solution I can see is practicable is to levy a fair, reasonable, and just tax upon the people of the District of Columbia, pay the same into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, then make your appropriations for District purposes out of the Treasury of the United States without any reference whatever as to the amount paid by the District, whether it should be one-half, one-third, or three-fourths, or any other rate per cent of the total appropriation.

I advocated that, and for a long time I did not know that anyone else had ever advocated it. The people here would not care anything about how wide a street was to be or how expensive it was to make a contemplated improvement unless it increased their taxes. Under the system I speak of it does not increase anybody's taxes. One year the amount of such improvements might far exceed the amount collected from the local taxpayers, and in another year the amount that the local taxpayers paid in proportion to the current expenses might be far less. If this plan was adopted, it would stop the ever-recurring contention that we are or are not standing by the organic act. What is an organic act of Congress? Is it not one as easily repealed or amended as any other? I am not making any quarrel about the passage of that bill when it was passed. I do not want to go backward; the past is gone and we can not bring it back; why not act for the future? It must be plain to anyone who has ever made the slightest examination of this matter that the Government's expenses as a capital will not increase in a ratio equal to those of the District; that its needs will not increase in a ratio equal to those of the people who live in the city, and especially when it is extended. If it was just for the Government to pay one-half when it was a little provincial town, will it be just to pay one-half when it becomes a city of a million? How is it worth less to the people of the United States to pass a national law in a city where the population is 300,000 than to pass it in a city like Paris, where the population is 2,000,000? I can not see how it is possible for anybody to believe that it is conducive to the interests of the Nation that this Capital's expenses should increase simply because the population increases.

As far as population is necessarily brought here by reason of its being the Capital is concerned, such increased population will be so small that any additional city expense due to such a cause will be so little as to be negligible. I have heard some people say that because you send your children to school here the people of this country should pay one-half of all the public-school burden in this District. Pray, tell me, how many children of Senators and Members are attending the public schools here? Before the administration of President Taft, as a rule, we had a three months' session one year and a seven months' session the other, so your family was not necessarily brought here for more than three months one year and seven the other. As a rule many families did not come to Washington at all for the short session, but remained at home. We had much better pay the tuition of the few of our children who attend the public schools here than to burden your people and my people with half the expenses of all the public schools in the city of Washington. I am in favor of public schools, and I would be for public schools here if the city was not able to pay one dollar for their support and the Nation had to pay all. But gentlemen keep talking here about this beautiful city. It is a beautiful city, and it is going to remain beautiful, but when we had our trouble with the mother country and set up a government upon principles we contended for and for which we fought, was it the beauty, the physical perfection of the Capital City that was going to follow our success that we fought for, or was it the beauty of that we were going to establish for which we shed our blood?

You have here a disfranchised people that, measured by intelligence and education, is the highest of any city in the United States, black or white, and yet they are not willing to trust themselves to govern themselves if it will increase their taxation one dollar. At least that seems to be a reasonable conclusion at which we must arrive. I have never yet advocated having a form of local self-government here for local purposes and thus permitting the people to manage their own affairs and levy their own taxes in their own way, whether levied all on real estate or only in part or whether on personal property or otherwise, without its being whispered to me, I suppose because I am from the South, "Why, we can not have local self-government here on account of the negro vote." Now, the negroes in Washington are not one-third of the population. Go to the city of Memphis, in my own State of Tennessee. The percentage of black population far exceeds the percentage here. But the people there are not overawed by it. I have never yet seen an educated, intelligent, white population that could not outvote the negro. There is no menace about it. There are very few so far who will agree to the proposition I advocate. I learned after I reached my conclusion that Senator Hoar had advocated the same plan many years before I had. It came to me through the people of the District wanting us to advance them funds because they were not able to pay their one-half out of current revenues. I say, let them vote on these things and thus assume their own burdens as to strictly local matters, but I am perfectly willing to do just as I have said, levy a just, reasonable, and fair tax on the property here and make your appropriations out of the Public Treasury without any reference whatever to the amount that is received from the taxpayers for any one year.

Mr. OGLESBY. Has the gentleman any plan as to how that fair and equitable amount could be arrived at?

Mr. SIMS. With all the cities in the country to look to, how could it be hard to get a plan? Besides, every city in the Union that I know anything about, when the property of the citizen is taxed, pays money thus raised that is spent beyond the borders of the city. Take the city of Nashville, the capital of the State of Tennessee. The State does not pay any portion of the burdens of the city of Nashville because it has its capitol there, but the property of the city of Nashville is taxed for State expenditures that are spent all over the State.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman says that he would be willing to have a plan devised, or rather the plan that he suggests, that the people pay a fair tax and the Government pay all the rest?

Mr. SIMS. Pay the appropriations whatever they were.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why should the Government do that? When the gentleman's State fails to raise by its revenues enough to pay all of its expenses it issues a bond issue, and they have a bonded indebtedness. Why should these people be permitted to have all of the improvements they want, and if they do not have money to pay for them have you and everybody else all over the country pay taxes to help them out?

Mr. SIMS. I will show the distinction, and the injustice of the thing suggests itself at once. The people of the capitals of the States are not dehorned citizens; they are not deprived of all political power and influence, while the people here have none.

The people here are subject to taxation with absolutely no power in their hands, political or otherwise, to say how much money should be raised by taxation or how it is to be expended.

Mr. CARAWAY. Suppose you gave them the right to raise their local revenues and expend them as they pleased?

Mr. SIMS. They had that right once and they bonded the District——

Mr. CARAWAY. Suppose that is true—suppose they stole out of the revenues 30 or 40 years ago—should the country pay the taxes because they were not honest when they had local government?

Mr. SIMS. I appreciate the force of the case, but I can not say they were not honest; I do not know. It was charged that Mr. Shepard, called Boss Shepard, was a very bad man, and his bad management of the District was the chief argument for the passing of the acts of 1874 and 1878, the half-and-half plan, so called, and yet I was invited not many years ago to attend the unveiling of a statue to Boss Shepard in the District of Columbia in front of the Municipal Building. I conclude from the fact that a statue was raised to his honor that it is equivalent to saying that that charge was false or else they approved of what he did.

Mr. OGLESBY. I would like to ask the gentleman his opinion—because he has had so much experience, and I have tried to get some answer from other Members—in fixing the amount of taxes to be paid by residents of the District, does the gentleman think that any attention should be paid to the relative proportion of the value between the Government property and that of residents?

Mr. SIMS. If the Government is going to pay any of the taxes, it is exceedingly important, and if the Government is going to pay a portion regardless of receipts, what difference does it make what the value of the Government property is if we only tax the citizen fairly on what he has? It will not increase the taxes because the Government owns property here.

Tax it as though the Government was not interested at all but only the property owner. What difference does it make whether the Government pays taxes or not?

Mr. OGLESBY. Of course the gentleman would not get any two people to agree upon what is a fair amount that the citizen should pay. Would not it be much simpler to tax with some proportion between the relative value of public and private property?

Mr. SIMS. I think so. Now, one of the objections to the plan I have suggested is this, and it may be a very material one, too: Whenever the people who live in the District of Columbia pay a tax not increased in any way by reason of expenditures in the way of permanent public improvements, it will be to their interest to advocate the most extravagant expenditure in the District for such improvements, and will, as a natural result, bring all the influence they can to bear upon Congress in behalf of such expenditures. That is one of the weaknesses in the plan I have mentioned.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if it is not a fundamental weakness in the proposition which he makes.

Mr. SIMS. I think it is, but what I am trying to do is this. Under the plan I propose that——

Mr. BAILEY. One more question I would like to ask the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman spoke of the improvement of Sixteenth Street and Connecticut Avenue, and building a bridge out there, and the great burden it was upon the people at that time.

What was the value of that property after the improvement was made, as compared with the value of the property before it was made?

Mr. SIMS. I can not answer that.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the crux of the whole question.

Mr. SIMS. I can not answer that definitely, but I know it was very greatly increased.

Mr. BAILEY. In other words, the value of the property, after the improvement was made, was far greater than the cost of the improvement, was it not? It was not a mistake, was it?

Mr. SIMS. Well, I would not like to make a definite answer and find out afterwards that I was incorrect. I do not know just the extent of the added values. From the standpoint of a Government making physical adornments of the surface of the earth, it might all be a mistake, but if the United States as a Nation should want to build a 500-foot street from here to the boundary, they have the power to do it whether it turns out to be a mistake or not. Then why should an unrepresented, voiceless people be taxed to pay one-half of that which to them is wholly unnecessary. There is legislation needed and will continue to be needed in this District, outside of street improvements, outside of questions of taxation and things of that sort, but the ever-recurring half-and-half plan blocks this House, and blocks the committee, and the committee can not do anything, however wise it thinks it is, if it can be construed as not following the half-and-half plan.

Remember what a war we had here with the playgrounds proposition, a strictly local affair, to take care of the children in hot weather, when all the so-called enterprising, public-spirited citizens had gone to the seashore, or to the mountains, or to Europe. And they fought furiously to make the Government pay half of that cost, because not to do so would be a violation of the organic act.

Now, it is nearly impossible for gentlemen who have their ideas formed by knowledge of cities in which they live to be prepared for intelligent legislation in the District of Columbia without considerable service here and on the District Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman referred to the organic act. I have noticed that expression in the papers over and over again. What is there about that act of Congress that differentiates it from any other act of Congress?

Mr. SIMS. Absolutely nothing that I can see.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Then why call it "organic"?

Mr. SIMS. I can not answer the gentleman. The idea held out is that the Government obtained a great benefit by passing that act, and that after passing it and receiving the benefit it would be immoral and unjust to repeal the organic act, when the truth is the District received the benefit of the organic act and the Government assumed a burden of responsibility that was not on it before.

As I was saying, gentlemen are not qualified by that experience which is necessary to legislate with regard to District affairs the moment they come here. They talk about some of us making speeches on District affairs in this House in order to use them in our districts at home. Show me a man who ever paid one dime to have published anything he said on District affairs in this House for the purpose of sending it to his district. I served on the Committee on the District of Columbia for 10 years, and I never sent out a word of anything that I said on District affairs. We are compelled by the necessities of the case to depend on the District Committee. So far as an intimate knowledge of local affairs is necessary in order to legislate, we have to rely on the committee, especially as to details. Therefore it always follows, not because they were the wisest men in the House but because they know more about District affairs, that they should be relied on as to District legislation. I know that after I had been on that committee for a number of years my telephone bell was rung all the time by somebody who wanted to ask some question relating to District matters. The smallest thing anybody wanted in this District they seemed to think came as a matter of influence—not as a matter of right, but as a matter of pull which they had with a Member or Senator or with somebody somewhere.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. When these fellows continually come to you like they thought influence had something to do with this matter, do you not take that as a definite assurance that in the years past they have been educated to think that these things went by influence?

Mr. SIMS. You are absolutely correct. They did not think they could get anything without influence. It is unfortunate to have such a state of things.

I attended, by invitation, a banquet in the District of Columbia early in President Taft's administration at which the President was present and made a speech. One of the first speeches was a speech by Justice Stafford, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and it was a speech that ought to be in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read as often as Washington's Farewell Address.

Mr. MANN. We are not permitted to read that to-day.

Mr. SIMS. Justice Stafford made a great speech in favor of self-government for the District, and I advise you to-day, if you can find it printed anywhere, to read it. Considerable applause followed the speech. But President Taft, after the Judge's speech, called Washington a Federal city and opposed local self-government, and gave his reasons for so doing. After the banquet what did I hear from some of the participants who live in Washington? I heard many of the guests say, "If you do not like the District under the Federal Government, move out." That is the way they talked about it—"If anybody does not like the government we have got, let him move out."

Now, if you do not like the government Congress gives you, you have only the suggested remedy, namely, to move out.

There is another possible solution, and that is one to meet the oft-repeated argument that the Government owns so much property here that the Government ought to pay one-half of all local tax burdens. Now, the Government does not own near so much property here as it is going to own, and if it should own all that these so-called public-spirited citizens want it to own, it will own nearly all of it. Some of them get an option on it and want to sell it to the Government.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Practically all that the Government owns here is in parks, and the entire citizenship enjoy the use of them, do they not?

Mr. SIMS. Yes. Let me tell you, my friend, this: The people discount the free use to themselves and magnify the ownership of the Government.

Mr. CARAWAY. In their view, it owns it only for the purpose of paying on it?

Mr. SIMS. Yes. You will see that, if you look into these propositions that are coming up all the time, where people are urging the Government to buy this tract of land and that tract of land and the other tract of land before it goes up. They are always trying to save the Government and not the people; urging the Government to buy lands before the price goes up. That was the case with respect to the proposed Rock Creek Park extension. They said: "Buy it now, before the Government has to pay too much for it." Oh, my! Such sympathy for the Government!

There is another method by which you can solve this problem, but the moment it is suggested somebody says, "Oh, you are trying to commit Congress to the single-tax theory." It is this: Levy no taxes upon personal property at all. Levy no taxes upon improvements at all. Levy on the land owned by the Government and on the land owned by everybody else. The Government not owning any personal property, you can not put any personal tax on the Government. The question of depreciation can not be figured on these great public buildings as it is on private buildings. The way to do that is to levy a land tax; levy it on what the Government now owns and what it may hereafter acquire. Then, if the tax rate is increased, the Government's share would increase just as the other land is increased in value. The Government's share of land in quantity will increase more and more. The Government needs more land, and these people here are trying to sell it many squares that it does not need. When they shall have sold those squares these people will proceed to try to sell the Government other lands, and so on to the end of time.

The people of this District might just as well know that this half-and-half plan—which now is unwise, no matter how wise it may have been when it was adopted—which enables them to ask for improvements and to get them on an ever-decreasing contribution by themselves is to be terminated. You may increase the annual appropriations by millions and the one-half which the District pays may be obtained every year on a decreasing tax rate or by a reduced rate of assessment valuation. I understand there is now about a million dollars or so in the Treasury credited to the District, representing the excess above one-half of current appropriations, and the cry now is, "You must appropriate the whole of the amount we pay and add on an amount equal to the amount we pay."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The District is now raising about $7,000,000. If we double that and raise another $7,000,000 from the Treasury, that makes $14,000,000.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. And if we decide this year to spend only $12,500,000, that would leave $1,500,000 that we must either spend or else it goes into Uncle Sam's hat?

Mr. SIMS. Yes. It is unwise to raise taxation that you do not need. It is nonsense to talk about the people of this District being excessively taxed.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. REED. The gentleman does not claim that the District of Columbia is paying half the running expenses of the District, does he?

Mr. SIMS. I do not. I am merely speaking of the claim advanced by the supporters of the so-called half-and-half plan.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. SIMS. I have talked longer than I intended to, and I want to yield the floor.

Mr. REED. I would like the gentleman, in the course of his speech, if he has not already done so, to emphasize the pro rata taxation between the District and the United States Government, that part of it pertaining to this feature, that in all of our cities at home we are paying on 100 per cent valuation of our property. In this District they pretend to assess at 75 per cent of the value, but in our hearings it was brought out and demonstrated that in many cases they were not paying in excess of 33⅓ per cent of the true value.

Mr. SIMS. I will answer that in this way: If you do not need the money, why raise it? Why increase the assessment?

Mr. REED. If we are paying full value at home and they are paying only 50 per cent in the District of Columbia, ought we not, in justice to the people of the country, compel the District to pay 100 per cent on the value of its property, just the same as the people in the country?

Mr. SIMS. As I said, if 100 per cent value made the burden on the Government less, that would be an argument for it. But if 50 per cent of the value raises the half required, what difference does it make to the Government of the United States?

Mr. REED. About 50 per cent.

Mr. SIMS. If all the lands were assessed at 50 per cent of their value, and that 50 per cent valuation gave all needed to pay half the expenses of the District government, why increase the valuation?

Mr. REED. But at home we are paying 100 per cent.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly; and you have got no State or other government paying one-half of your expenses.

Mr. REED. And in this District they have no State or county taxes to pay.

Mr. SIMS. That is absolutely true. I know all about that. That is why I say the people pay less taxes here in gross and in percentage of value than the people of any of the States. They have no highway tax or State tax or any taxes that do not go to the direct support of the District itself.

Mr. REED. That is absolutely the fact, and if the gentleman will permit me, I will say they are not paying 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. SIMS. That may be true. I am not controverting the statement of the gentleman, because I do not know as to that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not want to take the time of this committee to the extent that I have, and I would not have done so had I not thought that something ought to be done to stop this eternal war on everything that comes up which indirectly affects the sacred act of 1878, erroneously called the organic act.

Mr. IGOE. I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill close in 15 minutes, 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill close in 15 minutes, 10 minutes of that time to be occupied by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SMITH of Minnesota addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I served four years in this House with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Joseph G. Cannon, and in all those four years I remember having agreed with him only once. On one occasion I heard him say that in the more than 30 years he had served in Congress he had never invested a dollar in property in the District of Columbia, that he was not and never had been a property owner here. I agree with him most sincerely in that respect. I do not know whether any misapprehension could have occurred from the remark of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but he could not have meant to convey the impression, which he did convey to some Members of the House, that I was a property owner in the District. I am not a property owner in the District. If I were a property owner in the District, I suppose it would be more to my credit that I am insisting upon a readjustment and equalization of taxes in the District to make property here bear a little nearer its just share of public burdens.

I have no criticism to make of gentlemen who own their homes in Washington when they can afford to do so. I think, however, that men who engage in buying property in Washington for speculative purposes must submit to all of the usual burdens that property elsewhere bears for the same purposes.

Now, whenever a reform is proposed in legislation relating to the District of Columbia the debate takes a wide range, including a great deal of filibustering against the bill. You would think, to hear some gentlemen opposing these measures, that we were tearing down the pillars of the Constitution every time we undertake to pass a little bill for sidewalks for the District of Columbia. If no bills are passed by Congress and no attention is given to the District, we are just as bitterly assailed because we have not given proper consideration to District affairs.

Here is a little bill, as the last speaker said, proposing to do what? To make the same regulation for the District of Columbia that exists in all other cities of the same size and class in the United States.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I am sorry I can not. I know the gentleman wants to ask me if it is fair to change this system at this time.

Mr. OGLESBY. No; I was not going to ask the gentleman that.

Mr. BORLAND. I think that question has been thoroughly answered. Whenever a bad system is started any change may cause some hardship.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to say that I believe it is an established fact that only about one-sixth of the District of Columbia has been built up; therefore the bad system the gentleman speaks of has been made applicable to only one-sixth of the District, and it should not now come in and be made applicable to the remaining five-sixths.

Mr. BORLAND. Of course we must legislate for the future; we can not restore the status that has existed in the past. But the great argument that has been made here, especially by the gentleman from Kansas, who, I am sorry to see, is not present in the House to take part in the discussion and vote on the measure—his argument was that the Government clerk was the one to be affected. These people come here and always shelter themselves behind the Government clerk. I have never seen anybody come forward in opposition to these propositions of reform except the man who is exploiting property here. The Government clerk back in Kansas City and Pittsburg, Kans., if it is large enough to have Government clerks, and I hope it is, who is going to buy his home has to pay the usual expenses that such property bears, and pays them relatively out of the same salary that the Government clerk here pays.

I am not here to justify Government salaries; they may be too low; but certainly if they are too low in Washington they are too low in the country at large. How about the Government clerk at home who wants to buy a little home; how about that young man when he buys a piece of property; does he not have to pay for sidewalks, street paving, and sewers? Of course he does. The truth about the matter is it is not the Government clerk that is objecting. There are 40,000 Government clerks here; and being here and under the civil service, with a reasonable assurance of a job, a paymaster that never misses the pay roll, in an industry that has no seasonal depression, never has a strike, a lockout, or a panic, these employees are here to be exploited by certain parties of real estate men. These real estate men build homes for the purpose of selling them to Government clerks at a dollar down and a dollar for life, or whatever they charge. They sell them at a price not measured by what the raw land and building would cost, but what the property is worth after all the improvements are made; and if any portion of the improvements have been put in by the Federal Government it is charged in and the Government clerk pays it and pays interest on it, every dollar, from the time he occupies the house.

Every dollar that enters into that class of improvements is added to the value or the sale price by the real estate men, charged to the Government clerk, and collected from him. When the agent sells the house he sells it on the representation that taxes are reasonably low, a reasonable cost, and that there are no assessments for special benefits.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Can the gentleman prove that what the Government puts into the sidewalks is charged in the value of the property?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think that requires much proof. I can prove it by specific instances if the gentleman is in need of that information, but I do not think it would be necessary for any jury of business men. I do not think it needs any particular proof.

Mr. PLATT. Does not the gentleman think that if the system is changed the cost of these homes would be largely increased?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I think the profits of the men who build the houses will be decreased a little. It is absolutely right to say that we have the responsiblity of governing this District. It is the Federal Capital, and therefore private property in it should bear the same rate of taxation that similar private property bears elsewhere in the United States.

Gentlemen can defend it as they choose, I do not question their own consciences, but to my belief it is morally wrong to vote for these exemptions for private property in the District of Columbia that a man would not dare to vote for in his own district. There is no reason why private property used for private purposes, whether it be home or business, should not bear the same level rate of taxation that is customary and usual and necessary in every other city throughout the United States. For this law imposes no heavier burden on private property in the District than is customary in other cities; it is unobjectionable from a moral or economic standpoint. These tax exemptions, if they exist, and I believe they do, should be corrected. I have listened to all the speeches made pointing out the abuses which have grown up here—and made them myself. There are numerous tax exemptions in the District that are indefensible.

There is the exemption from taxation of intangible property. If these abuses exist, they have no relation whatever to the beautification of Washington as the national capital—not a bit. We do not find these gentlemen who are enjoying these tax exemptions engaged in any private enterprise for the beautification of Washington. We do not find that they are erecting public halls, convention halls, or any other civic improvements of any kind. The beautification of Washington has been done by the people of the Nation through the hands of Congress, and it will continue to be done by the people of the Nation through the hands of Congress, without charging the people of the District of Columbia therefor. But reasonable burdens of the government of the District of Columbia should be laid upon private property in the District of Columbia to the full extent it would be laid on private property elsewhere. A great deal of the land that the Government owns in this District it does not use for Federal purposes at all, and never will. It holds it merely as a trustee for the public, for the beautification of Washington, for the people of the Nation, for the people of the District. This law should pass.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cox). The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Minnesota was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and empowered, whenever in their judgment the public health, safety, or comfort require it, or whenever application shall be made therefor, accompanied by a deposit equal to the estimated cost of the work, to improve, construct, and repair sidewalks in the District of Columbia of such form and materials as they may determine, and to pay the total cost of such work from appropriations for assessment and permit work.

Said commissioners shall give notice by advertisement twice a week for two weeks in some newspaper published in the city of Washington of any assessment work proposed to be done by them under this act, designating the location and the kind of work to be done, specifying the kind of materials to be used, the estimated cost of the improvement, and fixing a time and place when and where property owners to be assessed can appear and present objections thereto, and for hearing thereof.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, lines 5, 6, and 7, strike out the words—or whenever application shall be made therefor, accompanied by a deposit equal to the estimated cost of the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "thereof," insert:

"If, after such hearing, the said commissioners shall decide to proceed with the proposed work, they shall serve notice of their decision upon the property owners to be assessed. Such notice shall be served upon each lot owner in the same manner as provided in this act for the service of notice of assessment. Each of said property owners may, within 10 days after service of said notice, make application for a permit to do that part of the work for which said property owner would be assessed, said application to be made and said work to be done in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of this act. At the expiration of 10 days from the service of said notice, the commissioners shall proceed with that part of the proposed assessment work for which the property owners have not received permits and the total cost of the proposed assessment work shall be levied, collected, and enforced as herein provided."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I suppose there has been all the debate on this bill that gentlemen here want to listen to; but I have been asking some questions that may leave some doubt as to where I stand on the matter. I want to relate a little experience that I had while I was chairman of the finance committee of the common council of the city of Chicago. The city of Chicago was organized in 1837. The territorial area of the city from that time on until 1889 was 37 square miles. In 1889 the city annexed a large additional area, making the total area of the city about 196 square miles. Prior to the annexation in 1889 the city always built its sewers out of what was known as a general fund, assessments being levied on the basis of 2 mills on the dollar, to be used exclusively for sewerage purposes. From 1837 to 1889 all the people living within the boundaries of the old city had their sewers constructed out of this general fund. After annexation the first thing that was done by a member of the city council coming in from the new territory was to introduce an ordinance for the construction of a sewer in what was known as the twenty-seventh ward. The cost of the sewer would amount to $350,000. The value of the property in the territory embraced in the ward, if assessed on the 2-mill basis, would yield a revenue of $5,000 a year, making it necessary to levy assessments on that basis for 70 years in order to make payments for the first sewer that was proposed to be constructed by this gentleman from the general fund.

Those of us who felt responsible for the integrity of the finances of the city saw at once that if we continued to build sewers out of a general fund we would only last about 30 days before the city would become bankrupt, and so we decided after consultation to begin to build sewers by special assessments, and from that time up to this, although it might have worked some injustice to those who lived within the boundaries of the old city and had paid their taxes from 1837 to 1889, we realized that the time had come when we must go upon a special assessment basis, and that every street in which a sewer was constructed from that time on must have it constructed by an assessment against the property fronting on the street. The justice of the thing appealed to everybody at once, and the sanitation which resulted from the act of forcing a change in the system from the construction of sewers out of a general fund to that of constructing them by special assessment became manifest, and our city has been able to go on with the extension of its sewers, the improvement of its sanitary condition, and the protection of the health of the city. We build sidewalks there by special assessments. Everybody who owns a foot of property on a street is assessed for the construction of a sidewalk in the first instance and in the next instance and forever during his ownership of that property. We build the streets by special assessments also, not only in the first case but in every case. I see no reason why we should not even now in the District of Columbia, though it may do some injustice to those who have been paying taxes for sidewalks and have got them, change the system and compel in the future the construction of all sidewalks at the expense of the abutting property.

Mr. OGLESBY. What is the special reason in the gentleman's mind for the change?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not changed my mind.

Mr. OGLESBY. In the gentleman's mind what is the special reason for making this change in the system?

Mr. MADDEN. It is evident from what has been said by those who have given study to the question that it would be unjust for those who are in one section of a city to be compelled in the future to pay for the building of sidewalks in another section of the city, and it is no great hardship, anyway. If a man owns a 25-foot lot here and has a house built upon it, he would be very glad to pay for building his sidewalk. I think this bill ought to pass.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. It seems to me that this change of the system of assessments is a change away from the changes of policy made in most places. The gentleman from Illinois has just told us his experience in the city of Chicago in changing from a sewer system built by the whole city to a sewer system built by special assessment. I could give him an instance in my home city of Poughkeepsie where sewers had always been constructed by special assessment on the property owners, where they had to change the charter to require the city to pay for some of them, because it was necessary sometimes to put a trunk sewer through sections where the property was not built up at all for the benefit of the health of the city.

Now, it is a fact, of course, that in the United States, generally speaking, what are called "benefits" are assessed on the property owners, but it is an American development, and all economists will say that. In Europe, as a general thing, cities have paid for all the improvements, paid for both paving and sidewalks, and it is only recently that some of them have changed in part to our system, while the development in this country, I think, has been away from assessing everything against the property owners in order to get more improvements made. For instance, in my home city we used originally to assess all pavements against the property owners, but paving proceeded so slowly that it was necessary after awhile to change that system and assess one-third on the city.

Now, it seems to me it does not make any difference whether you assess all the cost of sidewalks on property owners or half the cost on the city and the other half on the property owners, providing you keep the system unchanged, so as to equalize it in the long run. Just because in most of the cities in the United States the cost of sidewalks is assessed on abutting property is no good reason why Washington should have it. Other cities furnish merely precedents, but that is no reason. It seems to me if this bill is passed it ought to exempt at least the old city, for the old outlying section between the Capitol and the river, much of which has no sidewalks, and has paid its taxes for other sections, should not be compelled to pay all the expense for its own. You will never get sidewalks there at all if you make the property pay for it, for the people can not afford to pay.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Then it is the gentleman's theory that because property deteriorates in value it should not be assessed for special improvements.

Mr. PLATT. I would not say so necessarily, but I think it is unfair to change the system for all the old outlying property. I admit that this bill may be all right to apply to the new District that is divided by the old city line of Florida Avenue NW. I do not think it would be fair to apply it to the old part of the city.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman has referred to New Jersey Avenue running to the river front?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. And the gentleman says it is without proper sidewalks?

Mr. PLATT. Part of it.

Mr. KEATING. A greater portion of it?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. How does it come under the system which the gentleman is advocating that there have been very few sidewalks laid down in this section of the city where the poor post-office clerks live, whereas out in the Northwest where the millionaires live you have good sidewalks.

Mr. PLATT. The assessment of half the cost of the sidewalks on this property is a heavy burden, and now you propose to put it all on him, and you will never get any sidewalks there.

Mr. KEATING. There has not been any paving under the present system.

Mr. PLATT. You can not pave there because the people are poor. Many of the cities of Europe pay the whole cost, and there is no assessment for sidewalks. It seems to me that either system is right. You can not say one is right and the other wrong. One has just as much right as the other, provided it is followed through to the end. But the change proposed in this bill is a change in opposition to improvement and progress.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting an expression on certain language used in this paragraph. The bill reads, on page 1:

That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and empowered, whenever in their judgment the public health, safety, or comfort require it.

The word "it" seems to be superfluous.

Mr. IGOE. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that the language is copied from the law as it now is, but I think the word is proper. Now, if the gentleman will give a reason why he thinks it does not belong there——

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think it is good English at all, and it ought to be stricken out. I think it very crude, but, of course, if it has been carried in the act heretofore——

Mr. IGOE. It is in the present law, and we simply copied it into this bill. This is exactly the language of the present act.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the language ought to be—

That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and empowered, whenever in their judgment the public health, safety, or comfort require to improve—and so forth, omitting the word "it." Mr. Chairman, in order to get the sentiment of the committee I move to strike out the word "it."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "it," after the word "require."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the total cost of the assessment work herein provided for, including the expenses of the assessment, shall be charged against and become a lien upon abutting property, and an assessment therefor shall be levied pro rata according to the linear frontage of said property. The cost of the assessment work done under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia as follows: One-third of the amount within 60 days after service of notice of such assessment, without interest; one-third within one year; and the remainder within two years from the date of such service of notice, and interest shall be charged at the rate of 8 per cent per annum from the date of service of such notice on all amounts which shall remain unpaid at the expiration of 60 days after service of notice of such assessment, which in all cases shall be served upon each lot owner if he or she be a resident of the District and his or her residence known, and if he or she be a nonresident of the District, or his or her residence unknown, such notice shall be served on his or her tenant or agent, as the case may be, and if there be no tenant or agent known to the commissioners, then they shall give notice of such assessment by advertisement twice a week for two weeks in some newspaper published in said District.

The service of such notice, where the owner or his tenant or agent resides in the District of Columbia, shall be either personal or by leaving the same with some person of suitable age at the residence or place of business of such owner, agent, or tenant; and return of such service, stating the manner thereof, shall be made in writing and filed in the office of said commissioners: Provided, That the cost of publication of the notice herein provided for and the service of such notices shall be paid out of the appropriations for assessment and permit work.

During the reading of the above,

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know whether this bill will be read by paragraphs or by sections?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read by sections.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the section.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 3, line 9, after the word "property," insert the following language:

"The said commissioners shall notify each of the said property owners of the amount of his or her proposed assessment and fix a time and place when the said property owners may appear and present objections and for hearing thereof. Said notice shall be served in the same manner as provided herein for service of notice of assessment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 3, line 22, to strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "six."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the passage of this bill. I think it presents an equitable and fair proposition which ought to command the respect of everybody. While I am in favor of the abutting property owner paying for the building, improvement, and maintenance of the sidewalks, yet I would not impose upon him any extra burdens. It is provided in this section of the bill that he shall pay an interest rate of 8 per cent on certain levies which are to be paid in the future. I think that is too high. We have seen the interest rates of various States cut down from 12 to 10, 8, 6, and even 5 per cent, and the legal rate throughout the country, as a rule, does not reach above 6 per cent. So I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the liberality, which is the watchword in rates of interest, ought to be extended to these people. There is no good reason why it should not.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman, but I had some thoughts I wanted to present.

Mr. BORLAND. On that very point of the rate of interest I wanted to ask the gentleman if he did not realize the difference between charging a man a rate of interest for money which he borrows and putting on him a rate of interest in the nature of a penalty to compel him to promptly pay some public obligation?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I do.

Mr. BORLAND. If we made the rate 8 instead of 6, would it not make the payments come in a little faster and work a little bit better? Is not that the way they work?

Mr. FOWLER. That is probably true, Mr. Chairman, but I do not understand this to be a penalty rate. I understand it to be the rate required to be paid on certain moneys which are to be paid in the future, after the levy has been made. If that be the purpose of this rate, Mr. Chairman, I think it is too high. I repeat that if a change in the system of sidewalk building is to be effected, as proposed by this bill, we ought to give the home builder an opportunity to build his home and surround it with sidewalks necessary for convenience at as little cost and expense as possible.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that 8 per cent is the rate that is allowed now in the law here in the District of Columbia, one of the gentlemen on the committee having so informed me, and yet I presumed the law was passed many years ago fixing the rate at 8 per cent. I know that in Illinois the rate used to be 10 per cent when I was a boy, but we have hewed that rate down until to-day the lawful rate is 7 per cent but the legal rate is 6 per cent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in behalf of the home builder that we have heard so much about here on the floor of this House during the discussion of this bill. I offer it in harmony with the progressive idea of to-day of hewing down extortionate rates of usury so that money may be commanded at a rate within the reach of the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman that if we were to fix this thing over, and knew the whole proposition, they ought to pay 6 per cent, perhaps. But there is this objection. At the present time, with the special assessment work for alley improvement and for sewers, under the law as it stands and will stand after the passage of this bill, if it does pass, the property owners will be paying 8 per cent for those special assessments, and it seems to me the rate ought to be uniform. And, in addition, there are 60 days given to the property owner under this bill for which there is no interest charged, and I think the amendment should not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 5, after the word "That," insert the word "one-half," so that the line will read:

"SEC. 2. That one-half of the total cost of the assessment work," etc.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to reargue this proposition. I want to say, in my judgment it is not a question of the half-and-half system, but a question between the individual property owner and the general fund of the District. If it is not fair the Government should pay one-half of the expenses of running the District of Columbia, then some plan should be devised whereby the Government will pay its just proportion; but there has been for a number of years a system in vogue whereby the sidewalks have been built, one half of the cost being assessed against the property benefited and the other half paid out of the general fund. This bill seems to me subversive of the elementary principles of justice. We have no annexed district, and all of the property in the District of Columbia has for 20 or 30 years been paying a share of the expense of constructing sidewalks in front of property as it is improved, and to change the system now and relieve the people who have gotten those benefits of the expense of paying any portion of the cost of building sidewalks in front of other property which has not yet been improved is unfair and unjust.

Now, so far as aiding in real estate schemes is concerned, the Commissioners of the District have it entirely within their power to say what improvements shall be made. Wherever a man is developing a piece of property in the suburbs or outlying districts for speculative purposes, he can not get the improvements put in. He has to pay for them out of his own pocket, because the commissioners will not make the sidewalks ahead of the natural development of the city. But as the city grows, the man whose property is in line of development is entitled to be assisted in the payment of the cost of his sidewalk when he has for years and years paid his share of the expense of building sidewalks elsewhere in the District.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] stated that this added cost would not be paid by the man who bought the property, a Government clerk, or somebody else who had bought a piece of property on which to build a modest home, but that it would be paid by the real-estate speculator. The gentleman ought to know, if he knows anything about real-estate speculation, that the man who sells the property will add that extra cost to the price, and the fellow who buys the land on the installment plan and puts his house on it has to pay that, together with the rest of his expenses.

Mr. BORLAND. I claim that he puts it on the price now, although the Government pays it in the first instance.

Mr. OGLESBY. I have heard the gentleman make a good many other claims which he can not substantiate.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it not true that if the owner of a piece of property can represent to the purchaser that from this time on he will have to pay only a small tax, he can put a larger price on his property?

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman mean that if the sidewalk already exists, and he does not have to pay for the sidewalk of somebody else, therefore it will increase the value of that property?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. No. The gentleman does not understand my question. Suppose the real estate man says, "From this time on, no matter how long it may be, you will never have to pay more than one-half of the price of repairing or rebuilding this sidewalk." Does he not add that to his price? Is not that the reason why lots in this city are worth twice as much as similar lots elsewhere in any city of the same size?

Mr. OGLESBY. I will say to the gentleman, if the agent tells him the whole truth he will say, "You have only to pay one-half of the cost of building your sidewalk and keeping it repaired, but you will also have to pay in taxes each year something for the expense of building sidewalks in front of other people's property wherever it is improved, anywhere in the District."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman desire us to do with the second amendment here?

Mr. OGLESBY. It was simply to carry out the provisions of the first, and the first has been lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That any property upon which assessment and accrued interest thereon, or any part thereof, shall remain unpaid at the expiration of two years from the date of service of notice of such assessment shall be subject to sale therefor under the same conditions and penalties which are imposed by existing laws for the nonpayment of general taxes; and if any property assessed as herein provided for shall become liable to sale for any other assessment or tax whatever, then the assessments levied under this act shall become immediately due and payable, and the property against which they are levied may be sold therefor, together with the accrued interest thereon, and the cost of advertising, to the date of such sale. Property owners who request improvements under the permit system shall deposit in advance with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia an amount equal to the estimated cost of such improvements, and in such cases it will not be necessary to give the notice herein provided for.

All moneys received by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia for work done upon the request of property owners, as herein provided for, shall be deposited by him in the United States Treasury to the credit of the permit fund.

Upon the completion of work done as aforesaid at the request of property owners, the commissioners shall repay to the then current appropriation for assessment and permit work, out of the permit fund, a sum equivalent to the cost of the work, and shall return to the depositors, from the same fund, as application may be made therefor, any surplus that may remain over and above the cost of the work.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 5, line 8: After the word "sale" strike out the remainder of the page.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 5 in lines 7 and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 5. Whenever any owner of property in the District of Columbia shall make application to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for authority to improve, construct, or repair, at his own expense, the sidewalk abutting said property, the said commissioners shall grant to such owner a permit to improve, construct, or repair said sidewalk. Said permit shall be granted only on condition that the work shall be completed within the time specified therein and in the manner and of such materials and according to such plans and specifications as may be approved by the said commissioners. The said commissioners may revoke said permit at any time for a violation of any of the terms and conditions thereof. In the event of a revocation of said permit, the said commissioners may cause the said work to be completed and the cost thereof shall be charged against and become a lien upon the abutting property and an assessment therefor shall be levied and collected in the same manner as is provided in this act for assessment work.

"SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we return to section 2, page 4, line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to return to section 2, page 4, line 13. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, for what purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. For the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. MANN. What is the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The amendment is to insert after the word "age," in line 13, the word "discretion," so that it will read "a person of suitable age and discretion."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. IGOE. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. IGOE. I will say to the gentleman that that is already the law at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for the improvement, construction, and repair of sidewalks in the District of Columbia and for the assessment and payment of the cost thereof, had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. IGOE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of illness.

TWELFTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a resolution involving the privileges of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] presents a resolution involving the privileges of the House. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 427.

Whereas JAMES M. CURLEY was duly elected and qualified as a Member of this House from the twelfth congressional district of the State of Massachusetts; and

Whereas the said JAMES M. CURLEY was thereafter elected mayor of the city of Boston in said State January 13, 1914, and duly qualified and entered upon the duties of the office of mayor of said city of Boston February 2, 1914; and

Whereas the offices of Representative in Congress and mayor of the city of Boston, Mass., are incompatible, and it is impossible for any one person to perform the duties of both; and

Whereas the acceptance of the office of mayor aforesaid of said JAMES M. CURLEY was, in effect and in fact, a vacation of the office of Representative in this House: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the name of JAMES M. CURLEY be stricken from the roll of membership of this House and the seat formerly occupied by him be, and it is hereby, declared vacant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if this resolution is not similar to one that was passed by the House some years ago in reference to the governor of Connecticut?

Mr. MANN. It is very similar to the resolution which was passed in the Lilley case.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not suppose the gentleman desires to take up the matter in the House at this time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I ask to have it referred to the proper committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANN. I think that is where the other resolution went.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to refer the resolution to the Judiciary Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill (H. R. 13612).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13612) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, with Mr. BOOHER in the chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word of the pending paragraph simply for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to the amendment which was agreed to Saturday night to the paragraph in reference to the payment of traveling expenses and subsistence of the members of the Committee on Industrial Relations. Apparently, the way the language reads, if it were not violently construed, it would forbid the payment of any traveling expenses whatever except not to exceed $5 a day for subsistence. Of course that was not the purpose. It may be that if it should get into the law in this shape it would be construed to apply only to subsistence. I will ask the gentleman to reexamine the matter, so that to-morrow, if the gentleman desires to shift the language of the amendment, he may do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Capt. J. R. McAndrews, Sixth United States Cavalry, the sum of $460 disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this allowance of $460, which is provided for in this item, was rejected by the Auditor of the War Department on the ground that it was included in an original contract for the making of some improvements. I am not able to tell all of the details of the improvements. I understand that it involves the construction of some electric lines, that there was an amount agreed upon for doing the work, and that after the work was completed and turned over it was found that there was a failure to comply with the contract, and that certain telegraph poles had to be remodeled or reestablished, and after the beneficiary in this item had complied with the requirements of the department he presented this bill of $460, and it was promptly turned down by the Auditor for the War Department.

Mr. Chairman, if I am correct in my information, this item ought not to be carried in this bill, but ought to be stricken out. If the Auditor for the War Department was wrong in his conclusions, the beneficiary ought to have taken an appeal to the Comptroller of the Treasury for the purpose of having the matter finally passed upon in the regular way; but instead of doing that he sought to come before the Committee on Appropriations, and he has lodged his claim in the deficiency bill. I do not think it is just, if I am correctly informed as to the history of this claim.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to read from a report concerning the matter, so that I may get myself before the committee properly. This is the item in the bill:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Capt. J. R. McAndrews, Sixth United States Cavalry, the sum of $460 disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

In the deficiency estimates underneath this item appears the following annotation:

NOTE: This amount was expended by Capt. McAndrews, under proper instructions, in making repairs to the electric-lighting system at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., payment having been made on voucher 3, abstract B, of his money account for June, 1911.

It appearing that the transmission line between the power house and the post at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., was in poor condition, requiring $405 to replace a number of telegraph poles; that two iron poles should be relocated in rear of a building No. 4 at a cost of $10; and that a 2-kilowatt transformer was necessary in the power plant in order that transformer losses could be done away with by cutting off the post line at times when lighting was needed in the power plant only (the transformer to cost $45), authority was given September 9, 1910, for the repairs, etc., at a total cost of $460. The Auditor for the War Department disallowed this expenditure by Capt. McAndrews, taking the ground that the work was included in a contract previously made for the remodeling of this line, and that no additional expense should have been incurred. But at the time the specifications covering the remodeling were prepared in the office of the Quartermaster General there was no information to show that the pole line in question was in poor condition, and the changes recommended by Capt. McAndrews as constructing quartermaster being deemed necessary and considered entirely in the interests of the service, were duly authorized. It is believed that had this work been delayed, the cost to the Government at a later date would have been very much greater. (Henry G. Sharpe, Brigadier General, Quartermaster Corps, U. S. Army, Acting Chief of the Quartermaster Corps.)

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, it is evident to my mind that this amount was included in the original contract; that this repair work for which this item is presented was included in the original contract; and that McAndrews ought to have had that repair done under the original contract. That being the case, I feel quite sure that had he taken an appeal to the Comptroller of the Treasury he could have had a decision thereon, upon which we could have based some kind of conclusion, and I have no doubt that the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury would have been in harmony with the decision of the Auditor of the War Department. For that reason I do not think this item ought to be allowed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois should prevail. The gentleman has stated the facts substantially, but he seems to be laboring under a misapprehension. Capt. McAndrews had no contract with the Government. He was an Army officer stationed at Fort Bayard, where there is a sanatorium, and he was in charge of certain construction work. A contract had been made for the overhauling of certain matters about the place. The specifications that were prepared in the Quartermaster General's Department in Washington did not show that the particular items mentioned in this paragraph were required. Capt. McAndrews reported that certain things should be done—two poles set up and a 2-kilowatt transformer installed, and he was instructed to have the work done. It was done and paid for. When his accounts were transmitted to the Auditor of the War Department he disallowed the item of $460. There was a difference of opinion as to whether the contract included this work. But the Army officer in good faith, acting under the instructions of the War Department, had had this work done and he had paid for it. The only question now is whether he shall be required to pay for it out of his own pocket or whether, in view of all the circumstances, the item shall be allowed in his accounts.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a fact that the reason assigned by the Auditor of the War Department for disallowing this claim was that the work was embodied in the original contract?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what the auditor stated, but at the same time the specifications prepared in the Quartermaster General's Department in Washington and transmitted to Fort Bayard did not make it clear. These things were necessary to be done. Capt. McAndrews wired the department, stated the facts, and asked for authority to have them done. He was instructed to do the work; he had it done and paid for it out of the funds in his hands. When the account came in the item was disallowed. The only question now is whether this officer, acting in good faith, under instructions of his superior officer, shall pay for the work himself or whether it shall be credited to his account.

Mr. FOWLER. Why was it not presented to the Comptroller of the Treasury?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I imagine that no appeal was taken to the comptroller because it was believed that the auditor's decision would be sustained. While it is not a common thing, it is not infrequent that a difference may arise as to what a contract should have included, particularly when, as at Fort Bayard, it is not easily accessible in communication with the department. But the officer acting in good faith and under instructions from the department ought not to be compelled—and it is not justifiable to compel him—to pay the $460 for work that has been done for the Government for which the contractor has been paid. It is merely a question of whether the item shall be allowed in his accounts or whether he will be compelled to pay it. We have stricken out of the bill a number of requests to allow credit to be made in accounts, but it seemed to the committee that there could be no justification for penalizing an officer who acted in good faith under the circumstances disclosed here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask unanimous consent that he have two minutes longer, for I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] requests that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. In the committee's investigation of the matter, did they investigate as to whether the Auditor of the War Department was correct?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; in the investigation we assumed that he was. We assumed that he had justification for his opinion. It was stated to the committee that the items the auditor said were included in the original contract did not appear when the specifications were prepared in Washington to be required.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think that the best course to pursue is for him to take an appeal?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not. I do not think it would do him any good. He realizes, probably, as everybody else does, that the comptroller, under the facts appearing, would sustain the auditor.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think the item ought to be stricken out in all good faith?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not; for we would then compel an officer, acting in good faith, acting under instructions from the Quartermaster's Department, at a place distant like Fort Bayard, to pay this from his own pocket. He applied to the department, suggesting that certain things should be done and asked authority to do them. As the auditor decided that they should have been included with some other work, I do not believe it is justifiable to compel him to pay for it. If there was an error and anybody should be penalized, it should be those in the department who ought to have had the information and who ought to have included it in the original contract. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Transportation: For transportation, including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, $57,931.53.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of this committee to this item, because I think the Navy Department in the future ought to be more cautious about their methods of transacting business. The fact about this item of $57,931 is that they had a naval review of some kind in New York and they wanted the ships all to have a full complement of men. They permitted Naval Militia men to enlist in the Navy so that they could carry them to the place of enlistment and fill out the complement of men.

The law is that when they enlist they must be enlisted for four years. Immediately after the naval review was over the Secretary of the Navy discharged the men and they went back to the Naval Militia post. In other words, it was a clear evasion of the four-year enlistment law. They had no authority to have these men carried to New York for the purpose of making a show unless they enlisted them for four years. So he arbitrarily enlisted these men for four years, and as soon as the naval review was over they were immediately discharged.

Mr. MADDEN. They were naval militiamen?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Would they be required to enlist them to use them in the maneuvers?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; to put them on the ships as members of the crew. They admit that.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought perhaps they could draft them into the service without enlisting them?

Mr. SISSON. No; they can not enlist them and put them on the ships. They put them on the ships as sailors.

Mr. MADDEN. All of this $57,000 is due to that?

Mr. SISSON. Due to that expense. These naval militiamen were around the lakes generally, and they took them wherever they could get them, in fact, and tried to get them convenient to the city of New York to reduce the expense; but I do not believe that an officer of the Navy Department or the Secretary of the Navy or anyone else is justified in evading the plain provisions of the law. I did not favor the proposition personally, but your committee felt that in view of the fact that the money had been expended in that way it ought to be covered in the deficiency bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Was it necessary to have these naval militiamen in order to have the maneuvers successful?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that it was, but they wanted the Navy to appear in good shape and each ship to have its full complement of men ready for war duty.

Mr. MADDEN. What was the special reason for the maneuvers?

Mr. SISSON. It was at the time they had the review up there in New York, and they invited the President and others to see it.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman suppose anybody who went there to see the maneuvers would know whether they had a full complement of men or not?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so.

Mr. MADDEN. How many men were there?

Mr. SISSON. I do not remember the number of men carried. This was simply for transportation, and I do not believe the Navy Department in the future ought to be guilty of matters of this kind, and I think it is well enough to throw this little piece of dirt or grass, and I hope Congress will never permit an item of this kind to go in again.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois). The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Freight: For freight, including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, $200,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, after line 1, insert the following:
"For clerk hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of district land offices, $30,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there was presented to the committee for its consideration an estimate for the reappropriation of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for 1913 under this head. That unexpended balance amounted to $50,000. The committee did not see fit to approve the estimate. I have consulted with the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to the needs of that office, and I am satisfied that these land offices could be kept running with the present force of clerks for the balance of the fiscal year with an additional sum of $30,000—the amount I have named in my amendment. The appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1913 was $310,000. There was an additional appropriation of $90,000, making $410,000. The amount actually used was $360,000 for the fiscal year 1913, and, with the allowance of the $30,000 now asked for, the department will have $10,000 less for the current year than it had for the fiscal year 1913. I have a statement prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, at the request of the chairman of the committee, showing the business for the fiscal years 1912 and 1913 and for the first six months of the current year, showing that under all classes of business, original filings, homestead filings, final proofs, final homestead proofs, and so forth, the business transacted for the first half of the present fiscal year was as great, or nearly as great, as the business for the past fiscal year. The department, it is true, did not contemplate as large an expenditure for the current fiscal year as was expended the year before, because they expected a falling off in business. That expectation has not been realized, and while they have discharged 20 clerks, the business is and promises to continue to be as great in volume as it was the last fiscal year, when the department had $10,000 more for this service than it will have if this item of $30,000 is allowed.

Let me call the attention of the committee to the class of business that is transacted by these offices. They have to do with all original filings, with all final proofs, and they are the local representatives of the Government in all matters relating to settlement upon location or entry of or securing titles to the public lands. The commissioner tells us that unless he is allowed this additional $30,000 it will be necessary to curtail the force in a considerable number of these land offices. There are 104 of them, and many of them are somewhat behind with their business at this time, owing to the constantly growing heavy volume of original filings and of final proofs. The discharge of these clerks will result in very great hardship to entrymen and loss to the Government. It will necessitate delays in the making and passing upon final proofs and in transacting all of that vast volume of business that the land seeker has with the Government agents all over the western country.

I sincerely hope that the chairman of the committee will accept this item of increase.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. In addition to the duties which the gentleman has stated, which fall upon these offices, is it not also a fact that they have to investigate fraudulent entries and matters of that character, entailing great expense of time and labor?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true. They are the representatives of the Government in the field. Of course, in addition to those men, there are the special agents, but those are the men with whom the people locally do their land business.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. The reports of the special agents go to the Land Office for investigation and criticism.

Mr. MONDELL. They do.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is another suggestion I would like to make in connection with this which I think the gentleman overlooked. The gentleman remembers last year we passed a law permitting final proof of a homestead to be made in three years instead of five years.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; that is true.

Mr. HAYDEN. And a great many people of Arizona, to my knowledge, have taken advantage of that law, and it has created a congestion of business at this time. It may be that after the effect of that reduction period has passed the need for keeping up the clerical force of these offices might not be so great, but at the present time they are not only pressed by the ordinary business but by the fact that a great many have taken advantage of the shorter period, and it has created a large amount of business.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true, and the statement which I have here, and which I think the gentleman has seen, makes it very clear that not only has the volume of these final proofs kept up, but there has been no decrease in the number of original filings, so that the land offices have done quite as much business now for the first six months of the present year as they did for the year 1913, during which time they had $90,000 more for the current year, $40,000 of which was used, leaving a balance of $50,000. The reappropriation of the unexpended balance was asked for, I assume, because the Commissioner of the General Land Office desired to call attention to the fact that the $90,000 to take care of the three-year proof was only used to the extent of $40,000 and the balance returned to the Treasury. That fact makes it very clear that the land office will not use any more of this fund than is necessary to take care of the business, but unless we do give them this additional sum it will be necessary for them to discharge some clerks, and entail loss and hardship on entrymen. They have already discharged 20, and it will be necessary for them to discharge 60, and that means the discharge of one clerk in approximately two-thirds of all the land offices. I am familiar, as is the gentleman from Arizona and many gentlemen here, with the conditions in these land offices. The work is congested, and they are doing all they possibly can. A reduction of the force would mean a very great loss to entrymen and a very great loss to the Government, and I hope the chairman of the committee will see his way clear to allow this additional sum. I shall insert in the RECORD the statement of Land Office business prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to which I have referred. It is as follows:

NOTE.—Figures for January 1914, are not given for the reason that a number of offices have not yet transmitted their reports for that month.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word simply to add my voice to what has been said by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

New Mexico is a new State and the land offices are all congested with business under the present force they have at their command, and I think I can appeal to the chairman of the committee, and to this committee itself, that it is an absolute necessity, so far as my State is concerned and I am well acquainted there and get letters almost every day bearing upon the subject, to afford these land offices relief in their already great congestion of business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the committee did not believe that it was justified in recommending the additional appropriation for the contingent expenses of these land offices at this time. The appropriation for this service has been increased very rapidly, and no matter how rapidly it is increased there never seems to be any stop to the demands for more. In 1908 appropriations were $225,000, based on an estimate of $225,000. Seventy thousand dollars additional was given for that year. In 1909 the appropriation was $295,000 and $6,000 additional. In 1910 and 1911, $295,000 for each year. In 1912, $320,000. In 1913, while the appropriation bill was pending Congress passed the three-year homestead act permitting proof to be made in three years instead of five, and in order to take care of the rush of applications it was expected would be made during last year a very large additional sum, amounting to $90,000, was placed at the disposal of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. For the current year $320,000 was estimated as being sufficient. The Commissioner of the General Land Office in explaining the estimate stated that the amount of money recommended for last year was very much in excess of what could be used, and that instead of requiring the $90,000 additional he would only use $40,000; that in this year the first rush would be over and the offices would be down to their normal basis.

The deficiency estimate was submitted to Congress on the 15th of January of this year asking that the unexpended balance of $50,000 from last year be made available for this year. On the 12th of February, within a month of the time the estimate was submitted, under questioning of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, it was ascertained that the land office had decided that instead of $50,000 being required $20,000 would be sufficient. Then it was stated, so that there should not be any doubt, that it might be better to give $30,000, particularly as there was pending in Congress a bill to create an additional land office. The experience of members of the committee has been that whenever it is possible inside of a period of less than a month to reduce a deficiency estimate by more than one-half, with almost five months still to go in this fiscal year, the probabilities are that this great rush will be over and the money will not be required. For the present year, with the exception of last year, when this particular law was enacted, the appropriation is the largest made in our history for such purposes. I can only repeat, Mr. Chairman, what I said when their bill was presented to the committee, that in appropriating money for the conduct of the various public services during the current fiscal year the Committee on Appropriations, with the knowledge that a Democratic administration was to be in charge of the affairs of the Government, carefully and deliberately appropriated such sums as in its opinion would be sufficient to conduct the public business efficiently and economically. It has not found any reason to change its opinion that the appropriations that were made so advisedly are not sufficient. In my opinion it is not necessary to make this increase at this time. I do not believe the conditions of the public service require it. As the estimate came before the committee it was a request to permit to be spent during this fiscal year the money that could not be spent during the last fiscal year. If such a policy were to be pursued, and the heads of the service were to be encouraged in the belief that because money could not be expended in the conduct of the public service in the one fiscal year, it should be made available to be expended in another fiscal year, the appropriations would exceed all reasonable sums.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 18.

Mr. MONDELL. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, how many were there who voted in favor of demanding tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirteen. The Chair has announced that the amendment is rejected, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Office of Solicitor of Labor: For one clerk of class 1 during the balance of the fiscal year 1914, $400, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend the preceding paragraph by striking out the figures "1914," and spell them out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to strike out the figures "1914," and insert the spelling of the same in lieu thereof. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow, upon the approval of the Attorney General, from the annual appropriations for the maintenance of the United States penitentiaries at Atlanta, Ga., and Leavenworth, Kans., the expenses of travel and subsistence, not exceeding $268.86 incurred by R. J. W. Brewster during the fiscal years 1913 and 1914 in connection with the supervision of prisoners on parole from said penitentiaries.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I do not think this item ought to be carried in this bill. It is proposed to allow a deputy United States marshal whose duties were confined by law to the District of Columbia traveling expenses in other parts of the country. I do not think he had any business in other parts of the country which entitled him to transact business under the law and be paid for it by this Government. I feel that there is no authority whatever under the law for this provision, and it ought to be rejected for one reason only, if for no other, and that is to teach men in authority to comply with the law of the land. This way of doing business loosely, and then coming in and asking Congress to appropriate in a deficiency bill money to pay the expenses thereof, I think, Mr. Chairman, ought to be stopped. And, unless the chairman of the committee can give some good reason, which I have never seen yet, and I have read the evidence submitted before the committee, I shall insist on my point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have no information additional to what has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Brewster was an inspector of prisons. The parole law provides that the supervision of paroled prisoners shall be under the parole officers of the penitentiary and the United States marshals. Mr. Brewster was appointed a United States deputy marshal for the District of Columbia, so that when he was sent out to inspect the prisons it was thought he might also do certain work in connection with the obtaining of information regarding some persons who were on parole. He did this work, covering some period of time—I do not know how long—until the 1st of last July, when, for some reason, the question was submitted to the comptroller as to whether that could be done, and the comptroller held that certain items of expense incurred by him as United States deputy marshal for the District of Columbia while doing work in connection with the parole of certain persons outside of the District could not be allowed.

Now, it was considered much more economical and better administration to have this man, while doing this inspection work, look up certain prisoners who were in localities near where he was required to go, rather than to send parole officers either from Leavenworth or from Atlanta, Ga., to the particular places.

There has been disallowed in his accounts $268.86, money which was expended by him for actual expenses while performing the duties which devolved upon him. The object of this provision is merely to permit him to have these items allowed in his accounts. Otherwise he will be compelled to pay out of his own pocket the expense of doing the work, which was done in good faith, and it was believed it was an economical and wise way to do it. The gentleman does not get much compensation.

Mr. FOWLER. He gets $2,500 as a salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He was appointed United States deputy marshal for the District of Columbia, and he could act as a parole officer within the District of Columbia, but when he was sent outside of the District on inspection work and endeavored to act as a parole officer outside of the District, it was held that the authority did not go that far, and the money he expended in doing parole work outside of the District is disallowed. It is a case of charging to some man who is not paid a very large sum for his services more than a month's salary for expenses incurred by him in the discharge of his public duties.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. FOWLER. I find from the hearings that Mr. McGlesson says the shortage is $74.94.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is out of one appropriation. It could have been charged to two appropriations, part to Leavenworth and part to Atlanta.

Mr. FOWLER. The amount of the bill was $268.86.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and the one part would have been chargeable to the Atlanta prison and the other to the Leavenworth prison.

Mr. FOWLER. His duty as a parole officer was confined strictly to the District of Columbia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. He had no authority to act as an officer outside.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He was an inspector of prisons, and he was sent to inspect prisons in which Federal prisoners were confined. If the paroled prisoner lived at some place where it would be convenient for him to go while making the inspection trip, it would be more economical to have him go and ascertain whether the paroled prisoner was living up to the regulations than it would have been to have sent a parole officer from some other place. If they had sent him from some other place, either Leavenworth or Atlanta, there would be no question about the expenditure.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is quite a heavy snowstorm outside, and Members will undoubtedly be delayed in getting home beyond the usual hour.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are only two or three more items under the Department of Justice.

Mr. MANN. I hardly expect to get home for dinner now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are only two or three items; another page; that is about all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rent of rooms: For rent of rooms for the United States courts and judicial officers, not exceeding $9,144, for the balance of the fiscal year 1914, and for the purchase of necessary furniture and other like equipment for court rooms in the city of New York, $13,000; in all, $22,144, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves to strike out the paragraph. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 1.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Attorney General is authorized to enter into a lease for rent of rooms for the United States courts and judicial officers in the city of New York at an annual rental, not exceeding $8,810, for a period of five years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Chairman, I hope this provision will not be stricken out. There is a necessity for these rooms in New York. The post-office building is being reconstructed for the benefit of the courts, but it leaves the judges without any chambers. An opportunity is had now in the city of New York for leasing rooms for the judges for their own use and for court purposes, and not only for the judges of New York City but judges from the South and the West who help us on our calendars; and it seems to me that it is essential that the Secretary of the Treasury should be permitted to lease these rooms for the purposes of the judges for five years. Under the present law it can not be done for more than one year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTOR. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why should we appropriate for leasing these offices there and at the same time make an appropriation of $200,000 for additional accommodations in the courthouse?

Mr. CANTOR. Because the additional accommodations are not sufficient. The courts will require a number of rooms there; they will require rooms for the judges there as well as elsewhere.

Mr. MANN. We have an item on this bill for $200,000 for additional quarters.

Mr. CANTOR. That is in the post-office building only.

Mr. MANN. It is in the old courthouse. We appropriate $200,000 to give additional accommodations to the courts in that item for a term of five years.

Mr. CANTOR. Perhaps I have not made myself clear. I wanted to say to the gentleman from Illinois that even the accommodations provided for under the item of $200,000 are insufficient for the courts and the justices. I wanted to explain that the Post Office Department would still retain one or two of the floors in that building, and that therefore there would not be sufficient room for the judges and the courts. We ask therefore that outside accommodations be provided for the judges, so that there will be an orderly procedure in the courts of New York City.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this motion is made by the direction of the Committee on Appropriations. I regret that my colleague [Mr. CANTOR] has requested me to make a statement regarding it. After further consideration the Committee on Appropriations decided that these items should go out. Instead of asking for $8,810 a year for the rental of these offices, the department asks for $18,620. It is proposed to provide quarters for six Federal judges in the Woolworth Building, and two rooms for the holding of courts there without juries, together with accommodations for the judges' secretaries and large rooms for the marshal and clerk. It appeared to the committee on a further consideration, in view of the expenditure that is to be made for the rehabilitation of the old post-office building, to be entirely too much. I myself in the hearings called the attention of the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, who appeared before the Committee on Appropriations in connection with this matter, to the fact that as it appeared from the diagram submitted by himself it was proposed to give to each of the judges, both the four judges belonging to the southern district of New York and the two judges who are expected to sit there by assignment from other districts offices about double the size of one of the rooms of the Committee on Appropriations. In addition, there would be rooms for their clerks.

I am somewhat familiar with office rooms and conditions in the city of New York, and upon a more thorough consideration of the entire matter the members of the committee decided that they did not care to make this recommendation.

In view of all the information at hand, I can not say that we are justified in renting over 11,000 additional square feet of space in the Woolworth Building, proposed to be rented for the accommodation of these courts. The six courts will not be in session the entire year. The business in the southern district of New York is very greatly congested, more than 300 criminal cases and more than 400 civil cases in which the Government is a party being undisposed of when the present district attorney was appointed; nevertheless, in view of the fact that a very large sum is to be expended on the post-office building, it is believed it should be possible by some rearrangement to make better accommodations in the post-office building or to obtain accommodations not so extensive nor so expensive if additional offices are required outside, it seems to the committee that this item ought not to be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], chairman of the committee, to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, and for supplies for guards, $2,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13612) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, February 24, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11245) extending to the port of Providence, R. I., the privileges of section 1 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 299), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 13765) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes; to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 13766) to establish in the Department of Agriculture a Bureau of Farm Power; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DANFORTH: A bill (H. R. 13767) to provide for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a public building at Albion, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. J. M. C. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 13768) in aid of pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the War of the Rebellion and the War with Spain; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER: A bill (H. R. 13769) to authorize the acceptance and administration of savings by the postal savings bank service of the Post Office Department for crescent life annuities; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 24, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, Thou art the all-wise and the all-loving One. We bow before Thee and worship Thy holy name. We pray that our hearts may be the inward sanctuary for Thine own indwelling, and that out of their fullness we may speak words of wisdom and truth. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE LATE SENATOR BACON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a note from the minister of Venezuela expressing regret at his inability to be present at the funeral services of the late Senator BACON, which will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The letter is as follows:

LEGACIÓN DE LOS ESTADOS UNIDOS DE VENEZUELA,
Washington, D. C.

P. E. Rojas, minister from Venezuela, presents his respects to Mr. James M. CLERKS TO DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2902) to reduce fees in the United States district courts, to fix the salaries of the clerks of such courts, to increase the mileage and per diem of witnesses and jurymen therein, and to repeal section 840 of the Revised Statutes and all other conflicting laws, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 284) thereon.

THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 4096) to amend the act authorizing the National Academy of Sciences to receive and hold trust funds for the promotion of science, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 283) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is a very short measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the Congress may at any time limit the amount of real estate which may be acquired and the length of time the same may be held by said National Academy of Sciences.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to authorize the National Academy of Sciences to receive and hold trust funds for the promotion of science, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1884, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the National Academy of Sciences, incorporated by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1863, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and empowered to receive, by devise, bequest, donation, or otherwise, either real or personal property, and to hold the same absolutely or in trust, and to invest, reinvest, and manage the same in accordance with the provisions of its constitution, and to apply said property and the income arising therefrom to the objects of its creation and according to the instructions of the donors: Provided, however, That the Congress may at any time limit the amount of real estate which may be acquired and the length of time the same may be held by said National Academy of Sciences."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Lawton in Arlington Cemetery, Va., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution to be read, and, with the accompanying documents, ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution (S. Res. 280) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be reprinted in one volume, for the use of the Senate document room, 500 copies of Senate report entitled "Memorials of Authorities of the City of Washington, etc.," by Mr. Southard, Twenty-third Congress, second session, February 2, 1835; report of the joint select committee of Congress appointed to inquire into the affairs of the government of the District of Columbia, Senate Report No. 453, Forty-third Congress, first session, part 1, pages I to XXIX, inclusive; report from the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives on "Legal Relations of the District of Columbia and the United States," House Report No. 627, Forty-third Congress, first session; and report of a joint select committee appointed to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia, etc., Senate Report No. 479, Forty-third Congress, second session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution, with the accompanying documents, will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On February 23, 1914:

S. J. Res. 110. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in an international commission of phytopathology; and

S. 3439. An act appropriating funds for the purpose of the investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera and dourine.

On February 24, 1914:

S. 1294. An act to regulate the hours of employment and to safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate an order coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the order submitted by Mr. SMITH of Arizona on the 19th instant, as follows:

Ordered, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4425) to provide for the lessing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Gore	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Hitchcock	Oliver	Smoot
Brady	Hughes	Overman	Stephenson
Brandegee	James	Page	Sutherland
Bristow	Johnson	Perkins	Swanson
Bryan	Kern	Pittman	Thompson
Burleigh	Lane	Poindexter	Townsend
Burton	Lippitt	Robinson	Vardaman
Catron	Lodge	Saulsbury	Walsh
Clark, Wyo.	McCumber	Shafroth	Warren
Colt	McLean	Sheppard	Weeks
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Works
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Shields
Fall	Myers	Simmons

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. KERN. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is unavoidably absent, on account of illness.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] on imperative official business.

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON], and to state that he has a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the order submitted by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if I thought the motion I have made, at the request of the Committee on Public Lands, to transfer the Alaskan coal land leasing bill to the Committee on Public Lands, meant a delay in the proper consideration of that measure, I should have been somewhat averse to accepting the duty imposed upon me. A bill of a similar nature—an identical bill, in fact—is, as I understand, before the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives. I further understand that that bill has been under consideration in that body, and in the course of time the House bill will come to the Senate. Naturally it will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, for any member of that committee being present would make the motion and the reference would necessarily follow by a vote of the Senate or by the very proprieties of the occasion. I expect the Committee on Public Lands will give the bill instant consideration and as careful consideration as any other committee of this body could possibly do. There is no more industrious committee in the Senate, nor is there one that has a quorum present more frequently on the regular meeting days, and which holds many more extra meetings than the Committee on Public Lands. When the House bill to which I have referred shall come to the Senate the Committee on Public Lands will expect to consider it, and it being the identical bill now under consideration in the Committee on Mines and Mining, it would bring confusion in the regular order of business here rather than add to the prompt conduct of the business of the Senate.

In making the motion to discharge the Committee on Mines and Mining from the further consideration of this bill, neither I nor any other member of the Committee on Public Lands is attempting in any way to cast the least reflection on the Committee on Mines and Mining, for every member of that committee has the confidence and respect of every member of the Committee on Public Lands, but the motion is made in the interest of the regular conduct of the business of the Senate, so that this may establish the precedent that the control of the coal lands of the United States, scattered all over the country, is a matter only for the Public Lands Committee of the Senate. When we refer the question to any other committee—to the Committee on Territories, to the Committee on Mines and Mining, or to any other committee—it simply adds to the confusion of business. Therefore, Mr. President, if there is no further argument to be made concerning the matter, so far as I am concerned, I am ready to have the question submitted to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, is this an original motion? If so, I would suggest that, under the rules, it must lie over for one day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter has previously been before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. My absence from the Senate on public business deprived me of the knowledge that the motion had heretofore been discussed.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to make reference to the fact that this coal-mining bill, by the very nature of the subject, has properly been referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. The Committee on Mines and Mining was organized for the express purpose of dealing with that special feature of the public lands. There is not any question, nobody disputes the fact, that all questions relating to the acquirement of title to public lands for the purpose of mining the precious metals are considered by the Committee on Mines and Mining. Jurisdiction of all questions of mining was the express purpose for which that committee was created. So long as that committee has been created for that purpose and this bill has been referred to the committee and the committee is proceeding promptly to its consideration, I can see no sufficient reason for discharging the committee from its consideration.

The desire of everybody in the Senate and everybody in the country, I think substantially, is that action should be taken upon this matter. It seems to be somewhat of an impression from the making of this motion and the conditions under which it has been made that it is meant for the purpose of forestalling the action of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator from Washington that there is no such intention. The Committee on Public Lands of the Senate has heretofore reported a similar bill, which has once passed this body. There is no need of any further hearings. The committee has had hearings upon this bill at different times for the last three or four years. I will say to the Senator that I am quite sure the bill can be reported from the Public Lands Committee just as quickly as it can be from the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Then, Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that this identical bill is before the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives. I desire to call his attention to the fact that the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Senate has never in the history of the Senate had referred to it a bill of this character.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That may be very true, Mr. President. There are a great many bills referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining which heretofore have been referred to some other committee. New committees for the purpose of considering special features of the public business which have heretofore been considered by older committees are constantly being created. The fact that heretofore titles to coal lands have not been considered by the Committee on Mines and Mining is a very poor reason for objecting now, when the Committee on Mines and Mining is about to act and when the committee has a bill under consideration, to the further proceeding with it before that committee.

The great trouble that the country suffers from, so far as committees and the reference of business to them is concerned, has been the burying of bills in committees, the inaction of committees. It has not come from undue haste on the part of committees nor from the reporting of bills by committees. It is impossible that the business of the Senate should be obstructed or that any delay should occur by the reporting out of this bill by the Committee on Mines and Mining. Even if we should report it out and a similar bill should also be reported out by the Committee on Public Lands, it would then be for the Senate to consider them both, to determine which of them it would proceed with. There could not be any confusion resulting. The Senate would then have the benefit of the advice for whatever it may be worth, and the consideration of two committees instead of one. If there were any difficulty to be avoided by discharging the Committee on Mines and Mining from the consideration of this bill, the motion would have more weight.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, the very purpose of the motion is to avoid a duplication of work, so that the matter may be considered and reported upon by the Committee on Public Lands, which has had a bill of similar import before it for quite a long time and which has taken hearings on the bill and had them printed. I received a letter this morning from a gentleman who is on his way to appear before the committee with some suggestions as to the proper handling of those coal lands. He is a man who, I think, knows as much about the coal formations in Alaska, being a practical coal man, as any other who has ever been in that country.

A bill identical with the bill now before the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Senate has been before the Committee on Public Lands of the House, has been reported by that committee, is now on the calendar of the House, and was recently under consideration in that body. That bill no doubt will be passed, and when it comes to the Senate it should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. In the meantime the Committee on Mines and Mining may have made a report on the bill now before it, although by that time the House may have passed a different bill, which will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands in the Senate. That committee will investigate and consider the House bill and will probably make amendments to it and submit a report. Then we shall have the anomalous condition of the Committee on Mines and Mining reporting on a question which the Committee on Public Lands have had under consideration for years, on which they have made a report and have once secured the passage through the Senate of a bill covering the subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would be, Mr. President, very much to the credit of the Committee on Mines and Mining if it should be more expeditious in reporting on the matter than the Committee on Public Lands, which has delayed for years making a report. Even if the condition resulted which the Senator from Arizona describes, there would be no confusion; there would be no obstruction to the public business. We are not concerned as to what committee the House of Representatives refers certain bills. The bills in relation to this matter will all come before the Senate, and the Senate will not make any inconsistent disposition of the same bill. I think it would be advantageous to the country if two or three committees were considering the matter of the opening up of the coal fields of Alaska. If it is intended to get action, then we would have some result.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me, his purpose seems to be to get immediate action without consideration at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If it is a mere question of getting action, you can get it by bringing the bill before the Senate without reference to a committee at all. It is, however, a question of considering the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all; the Senator has no reason for assuming that the Committee on Mines and Mining is going to report on any bill without just as careful consideration as the Committee on Public Lands would give.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Nor has the Senator a right to conclude that the Committee on Public Lands will not report the bill out just as speedily as will the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have the reason for assuming that which the Senator has just stated, that the Committee on Public Lands has been considering the question for some seven or eight years.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator from Arizona also stated that the Committee on Public Lands have not only reported but secured the passage of bills of similar import in the Senate. We have been just as expeditious as any other committee of the Senate has been.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not in this Congress; in some previous Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No committee has reported a bill on this subject at this Congress; but we have been investigating it. The Committee on Mines and Mining have not reported it. By the way, in this connection I want to say that the reference to the Committee on Mines and Mining was not due to the action of the Vice President. The bill was presented at the desk, as bills usually are, with a request for reference to the Committee on Mines and Mining. In such cases it follows, as a matter of course, that unless there is objection the presiding officer refers the bill to the committee requested. That is the way this bill was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. The presiding officer proceeded in the regular way. He can not stop to read bills and see where they should go, but he accedes to the request of a Senator for a particular reference, unless objection is made, and that is the way the bill got before the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, nobody is moving to deprive the Public Lands Committee of jurisdiction of any bill which has been referred to it. The Committee on Public Lands can proceed and report the bill to which the Senator from Arizona has referred and the Senate will take such action upon it as it sees fit. There is no more occasion for the members of the Public Lands Committee moving to discharge the Committee on Mines and Mining from the consideration of bills pending before it than there is for the Committee on Mines and Mining to make a similar motion with reference to bills before the Committee on Public Lands. No conflict is going to result; no embarrassment in parliamentary procedure will result from leaving matters just as they are.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, it is a matter of more or less embarrassment to be called upon to decide upon the conflicting claims of committees. If this were a matter of first impression, if the bill had just now been introduced in the Senate, an entirely different situation would be presented. When this bill was first introduced it might have appropriately been referred to any one of three different committees. It pertains to Territories. Alaska is the only Territory we now have in continental United States, and the bill might properly have been sent to the Committee on Territories. It deals with the public lands of the Nation, and therefore might with great appropriateness have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It deals in every section, as I read the bill and remember it, with the mining of coal and other minerals, and of course might properly be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. It was referred to that committee; and the question now is whether a bill which has been referred to a committee to which it might appropriately have been referred shall be taken away from that committee. As a matter of comity and courtesy, it seems to me it should not be done except for very grave reasons.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will allow me the interruption, if the bill could have been properly referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, I would have said nothing about it.

Mr. KERN. It has occurred to me, as I said a moment ago, that the bill might properly have been referred to either of three committees. It was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. I think it would be a violation of the courtesy which prevails here to take it away from that committee. I should not have favored taking it away from the Public Lands Committee if it had been sent there or from the Committee on Territories if it had been sent there. I can not view it in any other light than that. I have no doubt that either of these committees will give the matter careful consideration and give the Senate the benefit of an intelligent investigation; but it is now in the hands of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KERN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to suggest that I suppose, from the number of bills which are before the Public Lands Committee and the amount of work which it has to do, it has more work than it can possibly do now. It must be a busy committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that such is not the case. I know of no bill that is pressing before the Public Lands Committee that has not been considered, and there is no Senator that I know of, and no Member of the other House for that matter, who has ever requested consideration of a bill when immediate consideration has not been given it at the following meeting.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I do not know that there are any bills before the committee that are pressing, but I know that the public-land laws now are, and I think have been for 10 years, in a demoralized condition; and if the Public Lands Committee could find time to do so, there would be nothing that would be more beneficial to the people of the West than to have the committee recodify and reconstruct the public-lands laws in a great many ways. I know that there are some bills before the committee that it would take considerable time to dispose of. I do not know that there is any bill of any importance before the Mines and Mining Committee, and I do not know just why that committee was created if it was not for the purpose of taking care of such measures as this. This is a mining proposition——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KERN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is far more than a mining proposition, as the Senator from Idaho will see if he will take care to read the bill; it is a proposition that involves public surveys; it is a proposition that involves the withdrawal of land.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, those things would necessarily appear in it; but, while the question of surveys and, to some extent, the question of public lands, are involved in the bill, on the other hand there is the question of mining.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all.

Mr. BORAH. Then I have misread the bill. I supposed that that was what it covered. I feel that I am not in error that a question of mining is involved.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is entirely correct in that statement. It does involve the matter of mining.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As I understand, it involves the leasing of certain land for mining purposes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The leasing of certain land for mining purposes and the manner in which the mines shall be operated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I think not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have read the bill very carefully.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There are a number of bills, of course, I do not know that all of them deal with the matter of mining.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I refer to the particular bill which is now under discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. For instance, some of the bills——

Mr. KERN. I yield further.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Some of the bills, and I think this one, limit the amount of coal land that shall be owned by a single company, for the purpose of preventing monopoly of coal lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is essentially a mining proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It seems to me it is the disposition of public lands.

Mr. KERN. One word further, Mr. President, and I shall have finished.

It is a matter of entire indifference to me as to which of these committees shall have jurisdiction over this bill. I have great confidence in all the committees. I find the bill in the hands and possession of one committee. It seems to me the only question is whether or not there shall be, unnecessarily, a reflection on that committee by taking the bill out of its hands.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It was a reflection on the other committee to have the bill take the course it did.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have been somewhat prejudiced against the attempt to retain this bill in the Committee on Mines and Mining.

In the first place, according to the statement of the chairman of that committee, certain heads of committees got together and amongst themselves, in connection with the Secretary of the Interior, determined in advance that this bill should be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. That, it seems to me, was an improper interference with the orderly procedure of the Senate.

Again, the Senator who introduced the bill is chairman of the committee to which it was referred. It is fair to presume that he had the bill referred to his own committee so that he might control it and bring about a favorable report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the statement made by the Senator from California, I think it is due to the Senate to repeat what I said the other day.

The bill was prepared as the result of conferences between the Secretary of the Interior, the chairmen of the three committees of the House on Public Lands, Mines and Mining, and Territories, respectively, and the chairmen of the same three committees in the Senate on Public Lands, Mines and Mining, and Territories. Those participating in that conference requested the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining to introduce the bill in the Senate, and requested him to have it referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, so the personal feature is entirely eliminated from the matter.

Mr. WORKS. That is precisely what I stated, and that is the matter to which I object—that manner of determining how a bill shall be referred when it comes into the Senate.

I know of no reason why this bill should not have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The efforts to retain it in the Committee on Mines and Mining have assumed the phase of a direct reflection upon the Committee on Public Lands. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], early in this discussion, put it upon that ground. That statement has been made by various Senators upon the floor of the Senate—that the bill should remain in that committee, because a report would not be expected from the Committee on Public Lands.

That is entirely unjust. The Committee on Public Lands has dealt very carefully and conscientiously with this whole question. As has been stated here by other Senators, a report has been made upon a bill, and it has actually passed the Senate. So there is no reason for any reflection upon the Committee on Public Lands in connection with this controversy.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Montana, who has taken us into his confidence thus far in regard to this gentlemen's agreement between the chairmen of the three committees of the two Houses and the Secretary of the Interior.

We have a Committee on the Public Lands in the House and a Committee on Mines and Mining in the House. We have a Committee on Public Lands in the Senate and a Committee on Mines and Mining in the Senate. Why was it that in this conference the bill was to be referred by the conference to the Committee on the Public Lands in the House and to the Committee on Mines and Mining in the Senate?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to answer the Senator from Wyoming with respect to that matter.

It perhaps will not be forgotten that the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining took a very deep interest in the passage of the Alaska railroad bill. The consideration of that bill necessarily required very earnest consideration of the subject of the disposition of the coal lands of Alaska. The chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining attended the conferences referred to in the hope that the bill would receive speedy consideration by the Senate, a hope he expressed at the time the other bill was before it. The probability is that by reason of the fact that he evinced some special interest in the measure and aided in some small way in its preparation, it was thought by the conference that perhaps its passage might be expedited by having it take this course.

Let me say further, that at the same time, and in connection with it, the same conference had under consideration the preparation of a bill for the disposition of lands containing radium-bearing ores. The chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining in the House, Dr. FOSTER, of the State of Illinois, had taken a special interest in that matter. He had made a special study of the use of radium in the treatment of diseases. It was agreed upon all hands that Dr. FOSTER, the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, should present that bill in the House, and that it should be referred to that committee in the House. There was no more reason why it should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining than why the Alaska coal bill should. Both of them referred to the disposition of the public lands, but one of them referred to the disposition of mineral-bearing lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I might suggest, then, that all bills relating to public health and national quarantine should be referred to the committee of which our friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] might be chairman, because of his professional interest in those matters, rather than to the committee itself.

Mr. WALSH. If you followed the assignment of any of these matters to a logical conclusion, you would reach an absurdity nearly every time. I have answered the question of the Senator from Wyoming, however, as to why one bill was sent to the Committee on Public Lands, and the other to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that the question as to whether a bill for the mining of radium should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining or to the Committee on Public Lands was very well presented the other day by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who pointed out the reason why one bill should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and the other to the Committee on Public Lands. I do not know whether all the Senators present heard him or not; but to my mind there is not a particle of doubt as to the wisdom of the statement that was made by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I was present at the meeting which assisted in framing this bill, and I was also chairman of the Committee on the Territories at the time the question was under discussion whether the Senator from Montana should present this bill and have it referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. I belong to all three of the committees which might have jurisdiction of the bill, and therefore I have no particular personal interest in the matter. I wish to say, however, that I believe the Committee on the Territories properly has jurisdiction of this bill, as it is special legislation, affecting only the coal in the District of Alaska and nowhere else. Hereafter, when any such bill is presented to the Senate, I am going to request that it be referred to the Committee on the Territories, and if it is objected to leave it to the Senate to determine the matter.

In the meantime I wish to say that as between the Committee on Public Lands and the Committee on Mines and Mining, I think a bill dealing with the mining of coal should go to a mining committee. I know that the Senator from Utah will say that it has always been treated as land. It may be treated as land, but it is not mined as land. It is mined as ore. It is mined as any other ore is mined, and it requires a knowledge of mining to legislate concerning it.

It is presumed that the Mines and Mining Committee was constituted of Senators who have some knowledge of mining. As between the two committees, I believe the bill should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining. There never was any objection to that phase of it when the representatives of all these committees were present.

Although I believe the bill should have gone to the Committee on the Territories, I do not believe it is right at this time, after the Committee on Mines and Mining has actually considered the bill, and after it has offered amendments to the bill, to come in now and ask to have it changed to another committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will permit me, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to section 12 of the bill, in answer to his statement that it does not deal with mining. That section provides—

> That no lease issued under authority of this act shall be assigned except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property; a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed shall be observed, and such other provisions as are needed for the protection of the interests of the United States.

It seems to me that in the narrowest construction of mining that would be within the definition.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, that is one of the last sections of the bill, and it simply follows out the general plan of the bill. The bill provides for the leasing of land. It also provides, as do other bills for the leasing of land, that the lease shall be executed by the Secretary of the Interior. It also provides for certain matters that shall be safeguarded in the lease. It all depends upon the leasing of the land. That is the prime purpose of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LANE (when Mr. CHAMBERLAIN's name was called). I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is detained from the Chamber by illness. In the absence of that Senator, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a pair upon some matters with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]; but upon this question as well as upon some others I have reserved the right to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. For that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I am credibly informed that he would vote upon this question as I intend to vote, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I withhold my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. RANSDELL (when Mr. THORNTON's name was called). The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is absent on account of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. By his permission, I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. BANKHEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have already announced my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I again announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence from the Senate of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. MYERS. I announce the unavoidable absence, on account of serious illness, of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON], and not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Bankhead	Jones	Robinson	Stephenson
Bradley	McCumber	Root	Swanson
Burton	McLean	Shafroth	Thompson

So the order submitted by Mr. SMITH of Arizona was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is withdrawn from the Committee on Mines and Mining and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN & HARTFORD RAILROAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 277, by Mr. NORRIS, directing the Attorney General to inform the Senate if any contract has been entered into or contemplated with the officials of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad regarding the reorganization of said company.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a very important resolution and that it is very far-reaching in its provisions. I think, in justice to the Department of Justice and to all parties interested, the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I make the motion that it be so referred.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this resolution simply calls on the Attorney General for information. I understand that there have been for several weeks conferences between the Department of Justice and the people representing this road as to a reorganization of the various roads that have heretofore been combined under one management; that the proposition there is, if possible, to agree upon a settlement of the difficulty; and that when such an agreement is reached the Attorney General will bring the proper suit in the proper court, and that judicial sanction shall thereupon be given to the agreement reached.

One of the particular things involved is the separation of the Boston & Maine Railroad from the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and the contention, as I understand it, is as to an agreement as to who shall compose the board that shall manage these two roads after the dissolution takes place and as to how long the board thus selected shall be in control. In other words, it is practically conceded, I understand, that the combining of these two roads is contrary to law, but on account of the financial condition of both the roads it has been deemed advisable that the dissolution shall be gradual and that some time shall be given to bring about a dissolution without bringing disaster to either of the roads.

As everyone knows, and it is unnecessary to go into it now, I think, various financial transactions have taken place, the result of which has been practically to bankrupt what was before the beginning of these transactions one of the most prosperous railroads in the civilized world.

The object of this resolution is to ask the Attorney General to give information as to whether in this contemplated agreement there is in contemplation "the giving of immunity from prosecution to any person or persons connected with said railroad company or any of its subsidiaries, any of its fiscal or financial agents, or any other person or persons."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, has the Attorney General a right to give anyone immunity?

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not. I am going to come to that in a minute. The object is also to ascertain "whether such contract, agreement, or understanding, either directly or indirectly, contemplates the surrender by said railroad company or any of its stockholders of any right to begin and maintain an action for the recovery of money or damages on account of the misappropriation of the money, funds, or other property of said company by its officers, agents, employees, fiscal agents, or other person or persons."

It will be noted that in the body of the resolution this language is used:

> And if any such contract, understanding, or agreement has been entered into or is contemplated, then to inform the Senate specifically whether said contract, agreement, or understanding, either directly or indirectly, contemplates—the things that I have mentioned.

Now, while I am not contending, and I do not believe anyone will contend, that the Attorney General can make a specific agreement which will give immunity, I believe he can make agreements that, if carried out by a subsequent judicial action, will, in effect, indirectly, do that very thing, that will in effect prevent those who have been robbed in the past from beginning and maintaining actions for the recovery of that which has been wrongfully and illegally taken from them.

If the new board that is going into the control of these railroad is controlled by the same interests that wrecked the roads in the past, it will be easily seen that by their control of the situation, while in theory they could not make it impossible they can practically make it at least extremely difficult for any action of any kind to be successfully maintained.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator says that he doubts whether the Attorney General can give immunity by a contract which he may enter into. I ask him also if he thinks that the Attorney General could enter into any agreement which would prevent anyone from having an opportunity to bring a suit in any court of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I have not claimed that. But let us suppose that some men who have wrongfully taken, in round numbers, from the stockholders of these railroad companies about $200,000,000 in the last five, six, or seven years, when this reorganization takes place under the sanction of the Government of the United States are left in control of these railroads, does anyone doubt for a moment that it would be extremely difficult to get the facts, to get the information, to get sufficient publicity that would enable anyone to mainain an action either criminal or civil?

Mr. LIPPITT. I noticed the statement of the Senator just now in which he said that some men had wrongfully taken from the stockholders of the road $200,000,000. Does the Senator mean to make that statement?

Mr. NORRIS. In round numbers, something like that.

Mr. LIPPITT. In round numbers or any other?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; in round numbers, as I remember it. I am speaking from memory. I gave the figures in the Senate the other day. I think it amounts to somewhere in that neighborhood.

Mr. LIPPITT. Will the Senator kindly state who took $200,000,000. That is a very large sum of money for anyone to take.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I should like to have this investigation disclose. The money has disappeared. The railroad stock which was selling up as high as $200 is now down to less than 50 cents on the dollar. A railroad, one of the most profitable institutions of the kind in the world, is now practically bankrupt. The money has disappeared. I can not give the Senator the information as to just exactly who took it and in what amounts and in what way they took it. If I knew that, I would not have introduced the resolution.

Mr. LIPPITT. Has the Senator any fact at all on which to make such a statement as that, that anybody has taken $200,000,000? If the Senator means that there have been $200,000,000 spent by the former directors of the road in acquiring certain property for the road, I will have nothing more to say; but when the Senator implies that somebody has stolen $200,000,000, I venture to say that he can find no facts anywhere to justify such a statement.

Now, I am not and do not want to be captious about this matter; but it is a subject of great importance to the people of New England, and I do not like to have such a general and loose statement as that go in the RECORD unchallenged.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I did not intend to-day to go into it, and I do not believe I will be led into a discussion of all the details that were brought out here the other day. I have gone over the matter in the presence of the Senate here. I am stating to-day from memory. I supposed it was admitted that the stockholders of this railroad company had been systematically robbed.

Mr. LODGE. Which railroad?

Mr. NORRIS. The New Haven Railroad Co. I do not know that anyone even hinted at a denial of it when the matter was discussed here the other day and the first resolution was passed.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I think that would be a proposition it would be impossible to maintain. While I do not want to go into the argument at this time or perhaps at any time, because I think if there is anything of the sort it is really a question for the courts to decide; but if the Senator is trying to maintain the proposition that the directors of that road systematically robbed the stockholders of the road, which is what I understand the statement to be that he now makes, I think he is in very great error.

The directors of that road did make investments at various times amounting in round numbers to some $200,000,000. On very many of these investments no one questions that they had a good basis of fact. On some of them it is very doubtful whether they were wisely made or not, but at the most they were errors of judgment so far as anybody has been able to show any facts in regard to them. Any supposition that there has been any such sum as $200,000,000 stolen by anybody is directly contrary to the facts as I understand them. The rehabilitation of the New Haven Railroad is a matter of great importance to the people of my section and to the people of my State, and it can not go along with the best results if unwarranted statements of that kind are made about them and are allowed to prejudice the public mind. I think the statement is entirely unwarranted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think I have explained the statement sufficiently without going into the record to give an itemized account.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask the Senator's view about one phase of this matter. I have not any doubt in my own mind that there have been some transactions in connection with this railroad that ought to be very thoroughly investigated by the executive department of the Government, and that in all probability there have been some transactions of such a nature that somebody ought to be prosecuted; but primarily those are matters which belong to the executive department. I should like the Senator's view upon this phase of the matter. Suppose we pass this resolution and the Attorney General can furnish us the information which it calls for, then what can the Senate do about it? What is the function of the Senate in the matter? Suppose the Senate is informed that in some contract that is being made immunity from prosecution is given to some person or persons connected with the railroad, what can the Senate do about such a matter?

Mr. NORRIS. This resolution is no reflection on the Attorney General, as might be imputed from some of the questions that are being asked. The Attorney General, in my judgment, can only answer it in one way. He will say that he has no intention of giving immunity, that he has no intention of entering into any contract that either directly or indirectly will give immunity or will preclude a civil action on the part of the stockholders who have been wronged. In my judgment the passage of this resolution and the answer of the Attorney General, as it undoubtedly will be along the lines I indicated, will strengthen his hands in the negotiations that are now going on as to the reorganization of these companies. And the good will then have been accomplished. If the Attorney General says that neither directly nor indirectly is he going to make any agreement or contract that will give immunity from either civil or criminal prosecution—if the Attorney General says that, and I think he will say it—then it follows that in making that agreement he can never consent that the men who have been guilty of the wrecking of this railroad should be on the board of control under the new management that he is going to sanction. I think that is the good that is coming from it. It will mean publicity; it will mean that the men who have before controlled will not control when the Attorney General makes this agreement and receives judicial sanction in a court for it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am not inquiring what good might result from it in a general way, but I was trying to ascertain in what aspect of this matter it would be any business of the Senate. The Senate is a law-making body; it is not a publicity bureau; it is not an organization to elicit facts and set the Attorney General right, if there is a misunderstanding about them, before the country. The functions of the Senate are pretty well settled by the Constitution. I am asking the question in absolute good faith, because I can not see upon what theory it is any business of the Senate as an official body. Of course, as citizens we may all be interested in these questions; it may be a very gratifying thing to us as citizens to ascertain what the Senator from Nebraska thinks we shall ascertain if the Attorney General is required to make answer to the resolution; but, after all, conceding the good that it may do in the country, conceding that it may set the Attorney General right, conceding that we may have these facts to publish to the country, we come back finally to the question again, What business is it—what official business is it—of the Senate as an official body?

Mr. NORRIS. I will undertake to answer that question. The Senator from Utah intimates that it is none of the Senate's business. We have here one of the greatest railroads of the world brought to ruin, an interstate railroad, one the regulation of which we have, in part, not only the right but the responsibility to legislate for. That railroad has been wrecked financially; thousands and thousands of innocent people who have invested their savings of a lifetime in its stock have practically seen the work of a lifetime disappear and are without any income whatever. There is now a proposition to reorganize; there is a proposition to go into court with a suit, the judgment of which will be agreed upon in advance, by which this railroad can again do the business that it ought to do—bring proper results in the way of financial returns to its stockholders and comply with its duty to the public. There, it seems to me, is where the Senate becomes at once interested; the entire country is interested. If we are going now to say to the men who have robbed the stockholders of this railroad, now that it is down and out and without any income, "We are going to leave you in control and permit you again to build it up, if you can in the meantime, while you are demanding, in order that you may do it, an increase of rates that must come out of the public generally." It seems to me that it is brought home directly to the Senate to see, in so far as we are able, that this organization does not cover up any of the sins of the past by which innocent men will be deprived, as a practical proposition, of the right to maintain suits to recover what they have lost, or that those who may have been guilty of violations of the criminal statutes may escape punishment.

It may be said by the Senator that, while technically this will bring no result, for the reason that the Attorney General can not make an agreement that will preclude a bringing of civil actions, let us say, yet we all know if those in control of the railroad from now on are going to "sit on the lid" and prevent publicity, cover up the sins and crimes and wrongs of the past, it will be a practical impossibility for any individual stockholder, unless he is a very wealthy one, to recover anything that has been taken from him by the wrongful action of those in control during the last few years.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. In all seriousness, I would ask the Senator from Nebraska if he thinks that under any conditions the Attorney General would, in advance, state what class of men he would be willing to put in control of this property?

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to our question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not expect him to do that. I am not asking the Attorney General to give the names or anything of that kind. I do not suppose that he would do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand the matter, it is in contemplation at this moment that most of the directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. intend to resign and that a new set of men will take their places; and I think the Senator from Nebraska need have no fear that the Attorney General or anyone acting in behalf of the Government will in the reorganization of this great property allow the public to be further wronged, if they have been wronged; and I think they have been in many particulars.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I will say to the Senator, that is the object of this resolution. I think it will strengthen the Attorney General's hands. When he goes on record in a public answer that he is not going, even indirectly, to agree to any settlement that will either directly or indirectly prevent these men from recovering what they have lost I believe he will be in better shape to contest with the other side and to bring about an agreement that will faithfully carry out that kind of a proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Attorney General has not asked for our assistance in this matter.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. He is a very capable official, universally recognized as a man of ability and integrity, and it does seem to me that we are interfering in a matter that does not concern us. I feel sure that if the Attorney General, in a matter that was before the Senate, should undertake to interfere with us and to advise us we would resent it, and so I sincerely think——

Mr. NORRIS. Now, the Senator from New Hampshire must not get the idea that we are advising the Attorney General. We are doing here what has been a common and ordinary and almost an everyday practice both of the Senate and House of Representatives. We are asking for information from the head of one of the departments. What do we ask him? Nothing but two simple questions, as I take it; and the answer could only be one way as to either one of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, during a somewhat protracted service in this body I will say that I think our habit has not been to ask any department of the Government for information concerning a matter of great importance that that department has under consideration. We do ask for information to aid us in legislative matters, and it is proper that we should do so, and we direct that the department shall furnish such information to us; but to interfere by resolution in a matter that is being seriously considered by the law department of the Government, asking in advance for information concerning what an officer proposes to do and what he proposes to advise, is, to my mind, bordering on, I might say, impertinence; and I do not believe that the Senate will act wisely if it does it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am sorry that the Senator from New Hampshire takes the view of the matter that we would be acting with impertinence if we asked the Attorney General, not for his opinion, but what he contemplates doing in a matter in which the entire country is vitally interested. That may be impertinence; but if it is, the Senate and the other House have been guilty of impertinence for a great many years. I have no such idea. My own judgment is that, after the passage of this resolution, when it is known that the Senate is taking an interest in the settlement of this almost vital question, the Attorney General would feel encouraged, with hands upheld by the legislative branch of the Government, to go on and bring about a settlement, if any is brought about, that shall put in the control of those railroads men who have not been instrumental in the past in committing the wrongs that it is practically conceded have been committed.

Mr. President, I might go on at great length. I have had several consultations——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska what form of settlement or what provision of settlement he thinks the Attorney General has in contemplation which may be properly submitted to the Senate at this time?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, in answering the questions propounded in the resolution he would not need to submit anything that would be improper. The questions are plain. We ask him whether this contract or agreement, if there is one or if one is contemplated, involves the giving of immunity to any person or persons or involves the surrender on the part of anyone of a civil right for damages.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Nebraska if he thinks the Attorney General has any power to give immunity to such men?

Mr. NORRIS. I think, Mr. President, I have answered that question several times. I have explained it, but I do not know whether the Senator was present at the time.

Mr. WEEKS. I was not here.

Mr. NORRIS. I have explained that, as a matter of law, I am not contending for anything of that kind; but I have said, and I will repeat, that indirectly this can be done: If an agreement were made in the reorganization of these railroads that would put in control the same men who wrecked the railroads, and give them, say, 10 years before they would have to turn the property over, that would be practically and indirectly depriving every stockholder of a civil right to maintain an action for damages that otherwise might be his right, for the reason that he would not be able to get the evidence without the expenditure of a large amount of money. If, on the other hand, the men placed in control through this agreement would "take off the lid," open up the books, and say, "Here and there are forgeries" or "here and there are instances where this person or that corporation has fraudulently taken the money of these stockholders," and give some publicity to it, it would be practically an easy matter for anyone who had a right under the law to maintain an action to recover damages. That is the reason I say that indirectly involved in this proposition, it seems to me, are the rights of innocent stockholders, many of whom have lost practically everything that they had been able to accumulate in a lifetime.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not want unreasonably to take the time of the Senator from Nebraska, but I would like to make the suggestion to him that, as I understand, the Attorney General is now in deliberation with the governor of Massachusetts, the governor of Maine, the governor of New Hampshire, and the governor of Connecticut, trying to determine who the five men shall be in whose hands as trustees shall be placed the Boston & Maine stock which is owned by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he thinks that is a matter with which the Senate has any interest, outside of the general individual interest that every man has, and is it a matter in regard to which the Attorney General could furnish the Senate any information?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think it is. I think that is a matter outside of the ordinary interest of the individual. The Boston & Maine Railroad is a part of a great system of railroads which has been wrecked. The entire public are interested in it. Senators may laugh and scoff at it, but I want to say to Senators that when we reach the point in this country where men who are worth millions can wreck railroads owned by thousands of stockholders, many of whom are poor, and take all they have and all that they have been able to save in a lifetime of industry; then put the mantle over it, cover it up, and say, "We have no business with it"—I say when that time comes, and if we have reached that point, then we are on the brink of danger. After we have enacted laws applying to the individual, to the ordinary person, to the poor man who goes out and steals a nickel or a loaf of bread and send him to jail, when some financial pirates, through their control of a great artery of commerce, can rob the people who own that great system of railways, and then go scot free, and the Senate will do nothing to give publicity, either to punish those who have committed the wrong or to give publicity, in order that those who have been wronged may get what is honestly their due—if we are in that state, then we ought not to wonder why we have anarchists in this country. If we have reached that stage where those who rob by the millions can go scot free, and with the money still in their pockets escape even civil suits for damages, then we have reached a stage where the very fundamental principles of our Government are at stake. That the matter be covered up and that nothing be done is not demanded by the innocent stockholders who have been robbed; it is not demanded by the public whose conscience has been outraged, but it is demanded by the financial pirates who have committed the robbery, and, with the stolen money still in their pockets, they are demanding that they continue in control of these railroads, in order, perhaps, that if in a wave of prosperity or after an increase of rates the roads will be built up again they can perform the operation a second time.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WEEKS. Inasmuch as I was on my feet when the Senator commenced the remarks which he has just concluded, and he said something about "Senators may smile," I want to resent any implication that I or any other Senator within my vision was smiling at anything, unless it was the extravagance of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska. The truth of the matter is, Mr. President, that the Attorney General of the United States and the governors of four or five New England States are trying to select five men to act as trustees of the stock of the Boston & Maine Railroad which was purchased by the New Haven Railroad and which is now in the New Haven treasury. They are searching industriously to find men who have no entangling complication whatever or no connection with any railroad company, past or present. That is what they are trying to do; and if we can not, without a senatorial investigation, trust those five officials, representatives of the people not only of the United States but of the four New England States, to work out this proposition to the extent of finding five trustees, then I say the public service is in bad shape; but the Senator from Nebraska has no right to imply that anybody is trying to cover up robbery or trickery or anything of that kind, because every Senator, so far as I know, wishes it exposed; but we do not wish to have public officials hampered in their legitimate duties by resolutions which have no application.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator assumes something that I have not undertaken to do. I have not charged that either the Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator wanted to cover up anything. I have not charged that any Senator here wants to give immunity to anybody guilty of crime. I have said, in substance, as far as these negotiations are concerned, what he has said: That certain officials—the Attorney General, the governor of Massachusetts, and some other governors—have been negotiating for some time to agree upon a board of directors to serve when this reorganization takes place.

I want to arrange it so that that board will consist of men who do not want to cover up anything. I have not said that Senators here were trying to get men on the board who did want to cover up anything; but I do say that in the negotiations that have been going on those who have represented the railroads in those negotiations have so far refused to agree to a board that would be in favor of giving assistance to, instead of blocking, either a criminal prosecution or a civil action for damages.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have been listening here for some time to try to find out exactly what the Senator did expect to accomplish and what he wanted to do. Now he says that what he wants to do is to provide that a board of directors of a certain character shall be elected by the New Haven Railroad. I should really like to have him connect up this resolution, asking about the effect upon immunity of an agreement that is being made, with the question of who is going to constitute the board of directors of the New Haven Railroad. I confess I do not exactly see that proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know who is going to constitute the board of directors of the New Haven Railroad, and so far as I am concerned I am not trying to name anybody that shall compose it.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator has just said, as I understand him, that what he was trying to accomplish was to provide that men of a certain character should sit on the board of directors of the Boston & Maine Railroad.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. How does this resolution do that?

Mr. NORRIS. I have gone over that once or twice, and the Senator has been here and heard it. Of course, either my explanation does not explain or he is not exercising his usual intelligence in trying to find out just what I do mean. I have said that if this new board is composed of men who are the same men, or in sympathy with the same men, who have done the wrongs in the past, then there will be very little accomplished, and indirectly there will be immunity given, and there will be impediments placed in the way of any civil suit on the part of the directors.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, do I understand that the Attorney General and these governors of the States are at the present time trying to pick out a board of directors for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co.?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I think it is the Boston & Maine Co. That is one of the subsidiary companies of the New Haven Co., as I understand.

Mr. LODGE. They are trying to pick out five trustees, are they not, to take the stock?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not been enlightened as to just what they would be called; but, as I explained at the beginning, if the agreement is made and carried out there will be a suit commenced, and they are trying to agree now——

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Since I have such difficulty in making anybody understand what I say, I wish the Senators would help me just a little——

Mr. LODGE. I have not interrupted the Senator before.

Mr. NORRIS. No; and I am not objecting to interruptions, but I can only answer one question at a time.

Mr. LODGE. And I should not have done so then.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me finish the sentence. I should like to answer the question from one Senator before another Senator insists on his question being answered.

If this suit is commenced after an agreement is made as to just what shall be accomplished by it and what kind of a suit it will be, as I understand, it will contemplate the appointing of a board. Whether you call them directors, or trustees, or presidents, or what not, I do not know; but they will be appointed under the decree of the court, and this railroad will be——

Mr. LIPPITT. Appointed under the decree of the court?

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator please let me finish my sentence? This railroad will be turned over to them. Within a certain time the temporary control—if you might call it such—that would be provided for by this suit would be dispensed with, and the road would be taken in charge by the stockholders themselves.

Mr. LIPPITT. Do I understand the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. There are two things involved in this proposition.

Mr. LIPPITT. Do I understand——

Mr. NORRIS. I want to finish this statement, if the Senator will permit me. One is the personnel of that board. Now, you may call them trustees if you wish. If I call them a board, and I am wrong about it, some man picks me up right away and says, "Why, they ought to be called trustees." I do not know what they are going to be called. I do not know the form of the decree; I do not know what they may be called. But one contention is as to the personnel of those men, and another contention is as to how long they shall be permitted, under the decree, to hold this property and manage it. What I am trying to get at is that the personnel of this board shall be one that is entirely free from the financial transactions that have taken place in the past, and that they shall not be left in control such a long time that the statute of limitations, for instance, might run against any actions that could be properly commenced.

I now yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. The question I asked was, how in the world the information the Senator asks the Attorney General to give him has any bearing upon what he now says is his purpose. As I now understand, the purpose of the Senator from Nebraska is to have some influence over the personnel of some board that is going to manage some part of this railroad system, or have some connection with it; and the question——

Mr. NORRIS. I want to interrupt the Senator there and say that I have already gone over that matter at least twice, to the best of my ability. If I have not made it plain to the Senator, I shall not be able to do it by making the attempt a third time.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am quite aware that I tried to ask the question, and the Senator made an answer twice.

Mr. NORRIS. That answer will have to stand. If it is not good, and I have to suffer for it, I will take the consequences. If it is good, and the Senator does not understand it, he will have to blame himself.

Mr. LIPPITT. No doubt all the things that I do not understand are due to my own thickheadedness.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. LIPPITT. This is the third time the Senator has prevented me from asking the question I have been trying to ask him.

Mr. NORRIS. Let the Senator ask it the fourth time then.

Mr. LIPPITT. This will be the fourth.

The Senator's resolution asks, in the first place, that the Attorney General shall say whether what he has in contemplation or what he is doing will give—> immunity from prosecution to any person or persons connected with said railroad company or any of its subsidiaries, any of its fiscal or financial agents, or any other person or persons.

That is the first question he wants to have answered—whether immunity is being given to anybody by the agreements that are being made between the Attorney General and the railroad officials. The second question he wants to have answered is:

> Whether such contract, agreement, or understanding, either directly or indirectly, contemplates the surrender by said railroad company or any of its stockholders of any right to begin and maintain an action for the recovery of money or damages on account of the misappropriation of the money, funds, or property of said company by its officers, agents, employees—

And so forth.

I may be very thickheaded, but I really can not see how the answering of those questions has any bearing at all or any influence upon the question of who are going to be appointed as a board of receivers or as trustees to hold certain railroad property. If what the Senator says he wants is what he really wants, this resolution has no bearing upon that at all; and I really can not see any reason why at this time the Senate should go into the details of this question in regard to this railroad.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator ask the question that he started out to ask five minutes ago? I am waiting for the question.

Mr. LIPPITT. I thought the Senator would understand it. The question was, How can the Senator connect up the demand for that information and the giving of that information with the question of the directors of this road or the board of trustees that the Senator talks about?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I did want to have this matter disposed of before 2 o'clock; and while I have answered the question two or three times to the best of my ability, I will answer it again for the benefit of my friend. This answer may not be satisfactory to him. It may not appeal to him, and it may not appeal to other good, wise, able men like him. To me it does appeal. I believe it will have some effect.

My resolution asks if the Attorney General contemplates or has agreed upon anything that either directly or indirectly takes away the right of an individual stockholder to sue for his loss. Now, let us take up that part of the resolution, and that will answer both of them. My theory is that when the Attorney General says, as he undoubtedly will say: "I have no idea of making such a contract or agreement; I will make no such contract or agreement," and publicity is given to that, and it comes to the Senate of the United States, it strengthens his arm in refusing to agree to any personnel who are now or have been in the past connected with the financial transactions of these roads, and would necessarily imply that he must insist on having men in control who are in favor of giving all the assistance they possibly can to stockholders who want to begin actions, and thus indirectly be of great assistance to them. On the other hand, if he agreed upon a personnel of men the same as those who have controlled the finances of this road in the past, he would be indirectly blocking the right of any stockholder to maintain a civil action in the courts, because the stockholders' source of information would be covered up by these men.

If we had authority to give instructions or advice to the Attorney General, this resolution would have been entirely different, if I had drawn it. It seemed to me, though, that in asking for this information, having the Attorney General go on record before the country as to what stand he was going to take would be notice at once: "If there is any agreement made here, this must be the basis, and no other kind of men will be put on this board, at least with the consent of the Government."

Of course, the Attorney General has the right to begin a suit, if he wants to, without anybody's consent. He can commence this suit, even against the opposition of the men who are opposed to it, if he wants to; but he is undertaking to bring it about by peaceable means. If he can accomplish this perfectly, well and good.

That is the explanation, and the only one I can give. To me it means something. Probably it is not as full as it ought to be. It is not a direct method of reaching the matter, because we are handicapped in that respect and can not reach it directly.

Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] the other day offered an amendment. He could not be here to-day. I suppose under the parliamentary situation it would not be in order until after the motion is disposed of, and not in order then unless the motion is defeated. I wish to say, though, that if this motion is voted down, in a modified form, a form agreed upon by the Senator from Minnesota, I want to offer his amendment to the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to suggest that I suppose there will be some debate, judging from what Senators have said. It is now 5 minutes to 2. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over without prejudice until to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to say something upon this question.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have no objection; I am not trying to take the Senator off his feet; but it will be 2 o'clock soon, and if the Senator will permit me at 2 o'clock to make that request I have no objection to his talking until then.

Mr. LODGE. I repeat that before this resolution is disposed of I should like an opportunity to say something in regard to it.

I have been reminded by the discussion here of an anecdote of Judge Hoar, who was Attorney General in President Grant's Cabinet. He was asked what was thought in Massachusetts of a gentleman who had just been appointed to high office from Massachusetts. He replied: "I do not know; his reputation is exclusively national."

I have been led by this debate to suppose that these railroads were exclusively national, and therefore I have naturally some slight hesitation in saying anything about them. They concern very deeply the State I in part represent and the three New England States north of Massachusetts. They concern them very immediately and directly. I feel rather diffident about pushing any local considerations into a purely national discussion. At the same time I should not feel justified in allowing this resolution to go to its final disposition without an attempt to say something about the effect it would have on the interests, the prosperity, and the well-being of the people of my State and of the adjoining States, who are directly interested in it.

I suppose the Senator from Alabama intends to go on with the Post Office appropriation bill at 2 o'clock?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Therefore I hope this resolution may go over.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request that the resolution may lie over until to-morrow? The Chair hears none. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, has morning business been concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; long since.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I gave notice some time ago that on yesterday I should ask the Senate to consider the Post Office appropriation bill. The unexpected adjournment yesterday prevented the taking up of the bill. I ask that the bill may be laid before the Senate at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 254, to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission in investigating certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I beg pardon; I thought it had been informally laid aside.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. I object, Mr. President. I have no objection to its being done by motion.

Mr. NELSON. I move that it be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let the motion be restated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to lay the unfinished business temporarily aside. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to. The unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. LODGE. I think there must be some misunderstanding. I thought the Senator from Minnesota moved to lay the unfinished business aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He did.

Mr. LODGE. Not temporarily. That can not be done. He moved to lay it aside. If that is correct, of course the resolution goes to the calendar.

Mr. NELSON. I asked unanimous consent to lay it aside.

Mr. LODGE. I objected.

Mr. NELSON. Then the Senator from Massachusetts came up to my desk and told me "you can not ask for unanimous consent; you must make a motion."

Mr. LODGE. That is right.

Mr. NELSON. And I complied with his request and made the motion.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. That is what I understood, and so did everyone else, until, in answer to the Senator from Alabama, the Chair stated that it had been laid aside temporarily. That is just what I wished to avoid.

Mr. NELSON. I made the motion.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Senator from Minnesota to make the motion to lay it aside.

Mr. NELSON. No; to lay it aside temporarily.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No such motion as that can be made.

Mr. LODGE. No; there is no such motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the resolution is displaced and the Senate proceeds to something else, of course it ceases to be the unfinished business. The Chair announced, if I understood him correctly, that the motion to lay it temporarily aside had prevailed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the motion.

Mr. LODGE. There is no such motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am aware of that; but the Chair announced that it had prevailed, and what has become of the resolution is the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is exactly the status of the resolution: The Senator from Minnesota asked to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business and the Senator from Massachusetts objected, but said he would not object if a motion was made to lay it aside, and that motion was made and carried.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair accordingly rules that it is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Minnesota asked in regular order for unanimous consent to lay it aside temporarily. That is the only request which can be made. I objected. I could not have objected to a motion to lay it aside, of course. One objection does not stop a motion. Then the Senator from Minnesota moved, as I understood him, to lay it aside, and that is the pending motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He moved to lay it aside temporarily.

Mr. LODGE. I am not aware that one can condition such a motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled upon it, and an appeal may be taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Pending that right, I would ask as a parliamentary inquiry what has become of the unfinished business which the Chair has declared upon motion to have been temporarily laid aside?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business was a Senate resolution about which the Chair knows nothing. When the hour of 2 o'clock arrived, and it was laid before the Senate, the Senator from Minnesota requested that it be temporarily laid aside by unanimous consent, as has been done many times since the present occupant of the chair has been here.

Mr. LODGE. It is constantly done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would take it over as the unfinished business until to-morrow. The Senator from Massachusetts said that he would object, but that he would not object to the Senator from Minnesota making a motion that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. That the record may stand right, I said that I would not object if the Senator from Minnesota would make a motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course; but whether the Senator from Massachusetts objected to the Senator from Minnesota making a motion or not is immaterial. The question is whether the motion is in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am making a parliamentary inquiry and I have been recognized for that purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry is a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to ask the Chair, if a motion is made to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business and it is carried, will he then have the matter remain on the calendar as the unfinished business? That in my opinion is not possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is clearly of opinion that under any ordinary circumstances a motion to pass over a pending subject made and carried would put it back on the calendar. The Chair may be entirely mistaken as to the purpose of the Senator from Massachusetts, but the Chair was clearly of the opinion when the Chair put the motion of the Senator from Minnesota that if carried the unfinished business would go over as the unfinished business of to-morrow; but as a strict parliamentary question there is not any doubt that when business is laid aside on motion it goes to the calendar.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And ceases to be the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. And ceases to be the unfinished business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, what is the status of what was formerly the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes to the calendar.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It loses its place as the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It loses its place. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber. I do not believe that the status of the resolution ought to be changed in the absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], who is ill. I think, to be fair and courteous to him, it should retain its present status until his return, which will be, I understand, in a day or two.

Mr. LODGE. Then we can not take up the Post Office appropriation bill except by unanimous consent.

Mr. KERN. Has anyone objected?

Mr. LODGE. I objected.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I had no interest in the resolution; but knowing that the Senator from Tennessee, who introduced it and was interested in it, was absent, I felt, as a matter of fairness to him, that the resolution ought not to be disposed of or be put back on the calendar and that, as a matter of courtesy to him, the resolution ought to hold its place.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in case the resolution is temporarily laid aside and the Post Office appropriation bill is discussed, then could not the same motion be made from day to day when the request was made to proceed with the Post Office appropriation bill, and from day to day, under the rules, the resolution be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Tennessee might be present and make such disposition of it as he saw fit?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has trouble enough ruling upon pending questions without passing upon what would be the rule in a case suggested for the future.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am still on my feet, and I have put a question to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair refuses to decide in advance what can or can not be done.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am just making a parliamentary inquiry. What would be the status of the resolution if it was to go through the process that I have mentioned from day to day? Could it not be temporarily laid aside and still remain the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unainmous consent it may be temporarily laid aside and remain the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I beg the Chair's pardon for interrupting him to make the inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. I had forgotten for the moment that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is ill. I do not wish to take any advantage whatever of an enforced absence of that kind, and therefore I withdraw my objection, so far as I am concerned, to the resolution being temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the resolution be temporarily laid aside? The Chair hears none. The resolution remains as the unfinished business. The appropriation bill will be proceeded with.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, before proceeding with the reading of the bill, I desire to make a very brief statement with reference to it.

The bill carries the largest appropriations of any supply bill that has ever been presented to the Senate for the Post Office Department or any other department of the Government. The total appropriation carried in the bill is $310,000,000 in round numbers, an increase over the bill of last year of $25,000,000 in round numbers. The reason for this large increase is obvious. It comes from the fact that the Post Office Department has engaged in a number of activities heretofore unknown so far as that department is concerned.

The Rural Delivery Service has increased enormously. In 15 years the appropriations have grown from $14,000 to $50,000,000, the number of routes being about 46,000. The Post Office Department, under authority given by Congress in the postal-savings-bank act is one of the largest banking institutions in the country. There are now organized and in operation 8,600 postal savings banks. The parcel post is another controlling factor in the increased appropriation this year. It will be remembered that the original parcel-post act authorized the establishment of the system with a limit of 11 pounds, fixing certain zones and rates. Very soon after the system went into operation, following the discretion given the Postmaster General in the act creating the parcel-post system, the weight limit was increased to 20 pounds and the rate materially reduced, and the zones were changed under that discretion. Very soon after this change went into operation another change was made, increasing the weight limit to 50 pounds, changing zones and rates, and the distinctive stamp, which was intended to enable the Post Office Department to reach something like an approximate estimate of the amount of revenue derived from the system, was abolished. So it is that all of these new activities, so to speak, have been going at a runaway pace ever since they were started.

A little further along in this bill perhaps there will be some discussion of a provision proposed by the committee prohibiting the Postmaster General from making further increases in weight limits or rates. When that provision comes up I shall seek an opportunity, Mr. President, to give some views I hold on that important question. This is all I care to say just now.

I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that——

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator makes that request, may I ask him a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Yesterday afternoon I undertook to compare the present bill with the bill of a year ago to see what changes there were, and I sent for the report, thinking perhaps there was a report made when the bill was reported, but I find that there is no Senate committee report.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is a report, but it is not a detailed report going into the changes.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the report the Senator refers to?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. What I was going to ask the Senator is, Did the House committee make a full report on the bill? I did not have time to send to the House for the report made there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The House committee made a full report after extensive hearings, all of which can be furnished to any Senator who desires it.

Mr. SMOOT. What I wanted to get was a concise statement showing just what are the changes or the increases.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator will find that given in the report.

Mr. SMOOT. In the hearings before the House committee and the report of the House committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. I will say further, Mr. President, while I am on my feet, that it was the purpose of the committee in preparing the bill to follow as nearly as possible the provisions of the appropriations made by the House. In only one or two instances, I believe, have the appropriations made by the House been changed. As a rule they have been accepted because they were agreed to by the House committee after very thorough and complete hearings of the heads of bureaus of the Post Office Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if he intends now to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not expect that the bill will be passed to-day?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That depends upon the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. What I mean is this: If we are going into a discussion of the bill with the idea of passing it to-day, I think we ought to have a quorum here. I am quite sure that there are many Senators who are interested in a number of items that will lead to discussion. I would not like to see the bill pass this afternoon with those Senators absent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Our only purpose now is that the Senate shall consider the committee amendments. If any Senator desires to offer an amendment to the bill, he will have ample opportunity after the committee amendments have been disposed of. I will say further that we have no burning desire to press the bill to a conclusion to-day, but we do want to make as much progress as possible with it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am in full accord with the Senator as to that, but I want the Senator to know that I would not wish to have the bill passed this afternoon without the Senators who are absent knowing at least that the bill is before the Senate. I have no objection now to the consideration of the bill for action on the committee amendments——

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all we ask.

Mr. SMOOT. But I do not want the Senator to ask that the bill be passed to-day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the Secretary will proceed to read the bill in accordance with the agreement.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the First Assistant Postmaster General," on page 10, line 18, after "$44,470,000," to insert "and the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum," so as to make the clause read:

> And to provide for the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade, and for the promotion of 75 per cent of the clerks in second-class offices from the fourth to the fifth grade; in all, $44,470,000, and the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General," on page 14, after line 16, to insert:

> That the personnel of the membership of the committees and commissions created and provided for in sections 1 and 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912, shall continue with the same authorities, powers, and provisions for expenses until final report is made to Congress, which shall be made on or before March 4, 1915.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator having the bill in charge whether there is any expense attached to those commissions?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, of course there is a very little expense attached to them in the way of clerical help. There are no salaries attached.

Mr. SMOOT. What I was going to ask the Senator was, if there is any expense, from what appropriation will it be paid?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The appropriation was made when the commissions were created.

Mr. SMOOT. And is there enough of that appropriation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes; an ample amount. Very little of it has been spent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 15, after line 4, to insert:

> Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized, in his discretion, to use such amount thereof as may be necessary for the purchase and maintenance of wagons or automobiles for and the operation of an experimental combined screen wagon and city collection and delivery service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 11, after the word "routes," to strike out "$55,188,000" and insert "$56,188,000," so as to read:

> For inland transportation by railroad routes, $56,188,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, at the end of line 22, to insert the following proviso:

> And provided further, That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall be brief, and in opposing the amendment I must not be understood as in any way disparaging the work of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Much as I appreciate their work, however, much as I honor them for the services they have preformed to the country and to the people at large, I must, in the most vehement manner, respectfully, of course, take this opportunity to express my extreme disapproval of this proposed amendment.

Mr. President, the action of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in proposing the amendment we are now considering amazes me. No provision of the parcel-post law was more thoroughly discussed prior to its enactment than the provisions which this amendment now proposes to nullify. The wisdom of their adoption has been proved in the developments of the parcel post that have taken place as a result of the administrative powers thus granted. No legislation enacted by Congress has so generally commended itself to the people, and particularly to the farmers, as these very provisions, which will become a dead letter if this amendment be adopted. They have become known far and wide as the "farmer amendments." They were advocated and fought for by the organized farmers of the Nation, even to the point of repudiating and rejecting any parcel-post measure that did not include them.

Senate Document No. 895 of the Sixty-second Congress, presented by Mr. LA FOLLETTE, was a memorial stating the farmers' position on the parcel post by the secretary of the Farmers' National Committee on Postal Reform. Its main contention was—I quote the exact words—

> That no limited parcel-post measure could be accepted as meeting the reasonable expectations of the people which did not provide in unmistakable language for the handling of farm products.

And—

> For the regulations for rates, weights, and zones by the Postmaster General, subject to the review or order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

And the memorial specifically stated that the then pending bill was unsatisfactory, even as a beginning, because it did not contain these provisions.

This memorial was an able presentation of the farmers' position. Mr. George P. Hampton, its author, is well known to Senators as a thorough student of this subject, and I am somewhat surprised that the committee did not see fit to give him and other representatives of the farmers a hearing upon this point before taking a step which the farmers will undoubtedly construe, and justly so, it seems to me, as a direct slap and turning down of that part of the parcel-post law which they feel to be especially their own and which they believe to be vital to a parcel-post service that shall be of any practical value to them.

I desire now to quote an excerpt from an address delivered by the man who is known in this country as the father of the parcel-post system—Hon. DAVID J. LEWIS, of Maryland—in the House of Representatives on Friday, February 20, 1914:

PARCEL-POST REPEAL.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, a rider attached to the Post Office appropriation bill, as reported to the Senate, contains the following proviso:

The same proviso which we are now discussing—

"That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law."

This proviso is designed to repeal the most substantive provision of the parcel-post law, which reads as follows:

"If the Postmaster General shall find on experience that the classification of articles mailable, as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability, or any of them, are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of service greater than the revenue, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions (of mailability), or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue adequate to pay the cost thereof."

This provision merely confers on the Postmaster General the same right to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission to revise or reform a rate or condition of service that is given every freight shipper and railway and express company. This is necessary in order to be able to accomplish the two fundamental objects of transportation, namely:

(a) To promote the service to the public, or

(b) Insure the receipt of revenue adequate to pay the cost thereof.

It is hardly necessary to say that these objects are complementary, and that the parcel post ought to serve the public and pay its way. It is under the same obligation to do both as is the railway or express carrier. Under the above proviso, and with a view to accomplish both objects made mandatory by the statute, after seven months' experience and the most detailed departmental investigation by his experts, the Postmaster General filed a petition with the Interstate Commerce Commission asking permission to raise the weight limit from 11 pounds to 20 pounds in the first and second zones—150 miles—and reduce the rates in such zones. After full consideration, this tribunal, the most expert in the world, granted its permission to the petition.

Again, subsequently and after many months' experience and consideration, the Postmaster General filed his second petition, asking its consideration and permission to extend the 20-pound weight limit over all zones and raise it to 50 pounds in the first and second zones, the size limit not changed; and, coupled with it, a request to reduce the rates in the other zones and include books in the parcel post. After several weeks' consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission, permission to make these changes in rates and conditions was granted; that is, the Interstate Commerce Commission decided that the changes "promoted the service to the public," and "insured the receipt of revenue adequate to pay the cost of service."

Mr. President, I wish now to read some excerpts from an editorial from a recent issue of the Washington Times of this city:

The Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has need to put forth a prompt and detailed defense of its action in hog-tying the parcel post and undertaking to prevent its expansion and development. It is nothing less than amazing that at this particular time, when the whole country is peculiarly gratified with the results of the parcel-post experiments thus far, and when there is universal conviction that its development has only fairly begun, the Senate committee should undertake to stunt it. For that is just what has been attempted.

The law as it now stands provides that the Postmaster General, with the assent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, may make changes in weights, zone limits, or rates of postage on parcels. This is left to the discretion of the Postmaster General, in consultation with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Its effect is to make possible the ready adjustment of conditions to the needs of the service. It removes one of the very greatest obstacles to effective Government management of such a facility by making it easy to achieve adjustments and readjustments without a lot of delay and red tape.

Under this wise and common-sense provision changes have already been made in the service, and further ones are contemplated. If this power be taken away from the people in control of the service, it will be utterly impossible for the parcel post to adapt itself to the necessities imposed by the vigorous competition which the express companies are inaugurating.

Yet the Senate committee actually does propose to take away all this discretion. It has inserted in the Post Office appropriation bill, reported to-day, a proviso which reads thus:

"There shall be no change in the existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones of fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law."

Those few words, if they shall remain in the law, will be the deathblow to it. The express companies are right now diligently at work adjusting their rates, practices, and services to the purpose of taking everything possible away from the Postal Service. That is perfectly natural. Competition is necessary, certainly it is desirable, so long as the Government does not frankly assume a monopoly of this business. The express companies, being free to adjust their conditions to the momentary necessities of business, can take advantage of whatever opportunities may present. Not so the Government, if this provision shall remain in the law. No weight limit or distance zone of rate can be changed without first getting Congress to pass the necessary law.

It is just as plain as day that such a change would be the biggest possible victory for the express companies and the worst possible blow to the parcel post.

When I began my remarks I stated what obligation the American people owed to the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has since come into the Chamber. He is a member of that committee. I am utterly amazed that this committee, composed of men who have rendered such services to the public as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. BANKHEAD]—I am not only amazed, but saddened, that this backward step should have been taken with respect to the parcel-post law.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Lest my position on this matter be misunderstood, I desire to say that I do not in any way favor the provision which the Senator from Arizona is criticizing. I hope sincerely that the parcel post may be extended further. I think it is a great advantage to the people of the whole country, and I want to extend its benefactions rather than contract them. I should like to see it take the place absolutely of the express companies. Such a change would be of great pecuniary advantage to the people of the entire country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to state——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Since my name has been mentioned in connection with this matter, I should like to state that at the proper time I will give to the Senate my views on this particular amendment to this bill, and I think at that time it will be known to members of the Senate just where I stand in reference to it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that I may include the remainder of the editorial in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The remainder of the editorial referred to is as follows:

You might as well turn two gladiators into the arena to fight, one with hands and legs shackled, the other free and fully armed, and expect a fair fight, as to presume that the Government can make a fair show in such a contest as this.

Competition is not competition unless it is full and free competition. To announce that the Government rate shall be as now established, and that it can't be changed save by law, means to invite the express companies to readjust their rates and arrangements with the specific purpose of taking the remunerative part of the business, with all the profits, and leaving the Government to do the unremunerative part and carry all the losses.

It is very easy to understand how any interest desirous of proving that Government operation of such a service is certain to fail would want to get just this provision written into the law. There could be no surer way to make Government business management appear incompetent and incapable. But it is wickedly unfair. The Postmaster General, if anybody will take the trouble to ask him, will say that he does not want such a restriction written into the law. He will say—because he is a man of common sense and is an honest friend of this Parcel Post Service—that it would hamper him and his assistants at every point in developing the service.

All experience in parcel-post operations—in England, in Germany, in Austria, Belgium, Hungary, Canada, and other countries—has demonstrated clearly that the rates and regulations are purely administrative and not legislative matters, and can not be written, hard and fast and right, into the statute. They must be subject to readjustment at the discretion of some proper administrative authority. Congressman LEWIS of Maryland, who is our American authority on this whole set of questions, demonstrated this particular point beyond cavil in his speeches in the House on the subject. It is difficult to believe that anybody who has given the matter a moment's serious thought can have failed to appreciate that point.

There will be tremendous rejoicing among the people who want the parcel post to fail if that provision remains in the law.

There will be eminent satisfaction among the people who want to see it proved that the Government is incapable of running any business.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before yielding the floor, I wish to say that I shall demand a roll call upon this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum before this important question is discussed further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson	Page	Smoot
Bankhead	Jones	Poindexter	Stephenson
Brady	Lane	Pomerene	Sterling
Brandegee	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Sutherland
Bristow	Lippitt	Saulsbury	Swanson
Bryan	Lodge	Shafroth	Thompson
Catron	McCumber	Sheppard	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Vardaman
Fall	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Walsh
Gore	Nelson	Simmons	Warren
Gronna	Norris	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Hughes	Oliver	Smith, S. C.	Williams

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the item objected to appears at the bottom of page 15 in the Post Office appropriation bill and reads as follows:

And provided further, That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

Mr. President, this proposed amendment throws a heavy burden of explanation upon the Post Office Committee. The general attitude of the press and of the public, so far as I am advised, is to the effect that this proposed amendment will seriously cripple the whole Parcel Post System. Of course, it may be that the committee have excellent reasons for this proposed change, but I should like, as an illustration of the public sentiment on this proposed amendment, to read the following editorial from the Baltimore Sun of February 14:

A BLOW AT THE PARCEL POST.

The Senate committee's amendment to take away from the Postmaster General the right to fix rates and change zones is a direct blow at the parcel post. Its success is dependent upon adjusting rates to meet conditions, and the fixing of hard-and-fast rates or districts while the system is in a formative state will be a decided handicap to its development. It is hard to believe that the proposition comes from the real friends of the parcel post. What good reason can be brought forward for such a change? The Postmaster General's power is not arbitrary; in fact, it is distinctly limited by the provision that the rates he proposes must be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as are the rates proposed by express and railroad companies. What more safeguard is needed?

Postmaster General Burleson's course has not been radical. The changes in zones, reduction in rates, and increase in the size of packages have been necessary to make the system what its founders intended. They have been in the interest of the public. Perhaps it is this very success in making it a vital public service that has aroused opposition that calls for restrictions. It is a power that some official or body must exercise, and where else could it be as well placed as in the hands of the Postmaster General?

Forty years of effort were required to establish the parcel post. Shall its usefulness be diminished and its growth hampered by unworkable restrictions before it has had a chance to prove the full measure of its worth? It was this very provision that Congressman DAVID J. LEWIS made the fight of his life to have included in the law. He regards its elimination as suicidal, and no man knows more about the system and its requirements than Mr. LEWIS. Leaving changes in rates, zones, and weight limit to Congress means opening the door to politics. Years might be required to secure changes that should be made in weeks; sectional and other interests would be involved in fixing zones. It would substitute the slow process of legislation for the adaptable, workable method that has already justified itself; and to what advantage? The proposed amendment may serve one good purpose in rallying friends to the support of the parcel post and arousing them to the necessity of constant vigilance to prevent any change that might hamper the development of a service that in its first year has become a necessity.

I simply lay this editorial before the Senate with a view of giving the committee, if they have not already got it, some conception of the onus probandi that this amendment lays upon them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee, on which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the clause is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it will be noticed that the amendment is a limitation upon the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes. Therefore, I contend, the amendment is in order.

It will be observed by examining the bill that the Senate committee increased the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes from $55,188,000 to $56,188,000. That was done in pursuance of the estimate made by the department. In other words, the House fell a million dollars short of the amount of appropriation the Postmaster General felt would be necessary to pay the railway mail expense.

Certainly it is germane in making an appropriation to limit the use of it. If, by reason of the carriage of parcels under weight limits much greater than the present ones, the appropriation would need to be increased, the committee can obviate the necessity of such an increase by allowing the conditions to remain as they are.

I submit, therefore, that the point of order is not well taken. A limitation upon an appropriation bill is always in order, as I understand, under the rules.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, in addition to what the Senator from Florida has said with reference to this amendment being obnoxious to the rule, it seems to me there is another well-established principle of parliamentary law that properly might be invoked. That is that when an amendment is offered, a point of order can not be made after consideration has been entered upon and the amendment debated. That is a general principle of parliamentary law.

Besides that, briefly, this amendment is not new legislation in the sense that it is obnoxious to any rule of the Senate. This amendment is simply a limitation upon an appropriation made by the Senate and contained in the bill, and is certainly germane to it.

It seems to me that the matter is so plain that it is hardly necessary to cite authorities or to read rules on the subject. Therefore I confidently submit the question to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the point of order was made; but I suppose the point of order is made on the amendment at the bottom of page 15 on the ground that it is general legislation. It could be made on no other ground that I can see.

In both Houses the rules especially provide against amendments to increase an appropriation or to add a new item of expenditure. Our rules provide particularly against that. It has always been held in both Houses, however—I think the precedents are unbroken—that an amendment which in its effect limits an appropriation is always in order on an appropriation bill.

It is perfectly clear that this amendment has the effect of limiting the public expenditure; and it seems to me, therefore, that it is clearly in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it seems to me that the language of this proviso is clearly the language of general legislation. If it were intended as a limitation, it should read:

And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available if there shall be changes in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

It seems to be an attempt to legislate directly and independently in an appropriation bill. Of course, in one sense, any legislation whatever would be a limitation of some kind on the appropriation bill. You may put any kind of legislation which the mind of man may conceive in an appropriation bill and in a certain sense it would be a limitation on the appropriation; but this clearly, as you can see by looking at the language, is independent legislation.

I submit the matter to the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think this amendment is certainly proper for another reason, which has not been mentioned.

Whenever we make an appropriation we have a right to direct just exactly how that appropriation shall be used and how it shall not be used. When we provide that it shall be used in such a manner that it will apply to the present weights we mean that it shall not be used in another manner.

Therefore the amendment is proper, as directing the particular channel in which the appropriation may be used and how it may be used within that channel.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. But this amendment makes no specific reference to the manner in which the appropriation shall be used. It is an independent enactment that there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, and so forth.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, certainly. That means the manner. That means that it shall not be used on a different weight, and the Postmaster General can not provide other rates and apply the appropriation so that it shall be used in transporting a greater bulk and for different rates.

Mr. SHEPPARD. But what the Senator says is a mere inference. So far as the language of the law is concerned, there is no reference whatever to the use of an appropriation. This amendment does not mention the appropriation. It does not mention the use of money. It is an independent legislative act in so far as the language here used is concerned.

Mr. McCUMBER. But we must construe it according to its purpose. We do not have to say "money." We are simply passing a bill for the appropriation of money. This provision simply goes to show that the money may not be used, and therefore it is perfectly appropriate for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the appropriation itself. I will cut out all the balance of the section, with the exception of that making the appropriation, and the proviso. That is all there is to be considered in determining whether a point of order will lie against the proviso.

It would then read in this way:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, $56,188,000: Provided, That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

That is a limitation, and it is always in order to offer an amendment to an appropriation bill that is a limitation.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to ask the Senator how that is a limitation on this appropriation? All of this appropriation goes to the railroads—every dime, cent, and nickel of it. It is fixed by the weight. Not a cent of it goes to the parcel post.

Mr. SMOOT. But every pound of it is to be carried by the railroads.

Mr. SWANSON. But they do not get any of this appropriation for carrying it. There is no limitation on the appropriation. It is a clear change of existing law. It is a change and a repeal of general legislation. A repeal of general legislation is as much general legislation as the original general legislation itself. This has nothing to do with the appropriation. It does not touch it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire of the Senator from Virginia if this appropriation is not primarily an appropriation of $56,188,000 for the payment of the railroads for carrying the mails?

Mr. SWANSON. That is true.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do not the railroads carry parcel-post mail?

Mr. SWANSON. They do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does not this amendment provide that there shall be no increase in the weight of the particular kind of mail in payment for which this amount of money is to be expended?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is correct in saying that this provision repeals the existing law, which is general legislation; but a limitation on an appropriation is one that provides some disposition or limit on the specific money appropriated. Now, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BRISTOW. But I should like first to have the Senator from Virginia answer the question I asked him, if he will. I asked the Senator if this is not an appropriation of $56,188,000 for the purpose of paying the railroads for carrying the mails?

Mr. SWANSON. It is.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is admitted. Now, the railroads are required to carry parcel-post mail. Part of this money goes for that purpose. There is an amendment here providing that there shall be no change in the existing weight limits on this mail. Is not that a limitation on the amount of weight that may be put into the railroad trains for which the Government has to pay? And if the weight should be far in excess of what it has been, would it not require an additional appropriation because of the using up of this fund?

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, an amendment of this kind is permissible only where it imposes a limit on the appropriation. That is admitted. There are precedents for it only where there is a limit controlling the specific appropriation. Now, you can have general legislation affecting the appropriation, affecting whether the Government will pay the railroads so much or not, but this can not affect the payment of the railroads one iota by way of limiting the amount they shall receive. It might control the amount of money that would go over, but it is not a limitation on the specific appropriation. It seems to me it is a clear repeal of general legislation, and a repeal of general legislation is the same as general legislation itself.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there can be no question that to repeal general law is general legislation. That is undoubtedly true. It seems to me, however, that it is absolutely clear that this is a limitation, because if the parcel post limit is largely increased, of course it means a deficiency. It is a limitation on expenditure.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me right there——

Mr. LODGE. In one moment. The Senator in charge of the bill, the chairman of the committee, will correct me——

Mr. SWANSON. It is a limitation on the legislation.

Mr. LODGE. I have not yielded yet. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question as to the addition of $1,000,000 that was made by the Senate committee to the gross amount appropriated for transportation. Was not that increase made at the request of the department?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was.

Mr. LODGE. On account of the increase of the parcel post?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. Therefore we have increased it because of the parcel post. Now, unless you limit the weight in some way you are bound to add to the amount of that appropriation in another bill, of course—a deficiency bill.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me now, this legislation does limit the parcel post, but it does not limit the appropriation. It is permitted to remain in the bill only where it is a limitation on the appropriation, and not on the subject of the appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. That is precisely what it is. It is a limitation on the public expenditure—that, and nothing else.

Mr. SWANSON. No; it might affect it, but it is no limitation on it.

Mr. LODGE. Of course it is a limitation.

Mr. SWANSON. Any legislation in this bill might affect the amount of mail that the railroads would carry, but you can not go into a question of general policy. This amendment specifically repeals general legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] had the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. No. I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. Suppose this appropriation had remained $55,188,000, and at the end of the year, with this limitation or without any limitation, the amount for carrying the parcel post amounted to $56,188,000. Does the Senator say that we would not have a deficiency bill to cover that?

Mr. SWANSON. You might have a deficiency bill, and that would be proper. The point I make is that under the construction contended for you could have any kind of legislation on an appropriation bill if it affected in any degree the amount of money you would have to appropriate.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator said that the proviso here did not affect the appropriation.

Mr. SWANSON. I said it affects it, but it does not limit it, because it has nothing to do with the appropriation of this money. All legislation affects it. I say it is not germane merely because it affects the subject matter. It must be a limitation on the expenditure of the specific money.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not any question in my mind about the fact that it affects it in this way: Suppose we should raise the parcel-post limit to 100 pounds. The Senator must know that $56,188,000 would not pay the expense in that event. If that is true—and I think the Senator will admit it—then it does affect this proposition.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator had listened to me, he would know that I said that it affected the amount of money that would be paid the railroads. That is true; but that does not come within the rule. The rule requires it to limit the specific sum appropriated. Any legislation in a bill affects the amount of money to be expended for any of these purposes; but this is no limitation on that $56,000,000. There is no limitation on it.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator point me to the rule which says that it must directly limit the appropriation?

Mr. SWANSON. Here is the general rule. I will read the rule, on page 17.

Mr. LODGE. I know the general rule. I can read that. The rule I want to find out is not the rule in the book, but the rule the Senator is laying down.

Mr. SWANSON. There is no specific rule. I say the precedents have established the rule that where an amendment limits an appropriation it is not general legislation. This is not a limitation of that appropriaton. It may affect it; it may increase it or decrease it; but I say the precedents that have been established are that it must be a limitation of the appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. I wish the Senator would favor the Senate with some of those precedents. I have read them with great care.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish the Senator would present a case where general legislation was repealed and where such a provision has been held in order.

Mr. LODGE. Why, I can show the Senator any number of precedents for anything limiting the appropriation.

Mr. SWANSON. This does not limit the appropriation. It might affect it.

Mr. LODGE. If it affects the appropriation, it either increases or decreases it.

Mr. SWANSON. What you mean by limiting the appropriation is specifying that it shall not be used for a certain purpose. If you should say that the $53,000,000 appropriated for rural delivery should not be used for city delivery, it would be a limitation on that specific appropriation. Here, however, you come in with general legislation affecting the general parcel-post system, and say because it affects it that it is in order.

On page 17 there is this rule:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

That rule is clear, broad, and specific. Here is general legislation affecting the parcel post; and a repeal of general legislation is as much general legislation as the original enactment of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire, for the information of the Chair in ruling, what the present law is with reference to the parcel post?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, in the last Post Office appropriation bill there will be found this provision:

Provided further, That on account of the increased weight of mails resulting from the enactment of section 8 of the act of August 24, 1912, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, the Postmaster General is authorized to add to the compensation for transportation on railroad routes on and after July 1, 1913, for the remainder of the contract terms, not exceeding 5 per cent thereof per annum, excepting upon routes weighed since January 1, 1913, and to be readjusted from July 1, 1913, until otherwise provided by law.

That provision is not in this appropriation bill; but the Post Office Department asked the House for the increase of 5 per cent, which would have made the amount recommended by the Senate committee. The House appropriated $1,000,000 less. We put the appropriation up to what the department asked for. Then, in order that that amount of money might be sufficient, in our judgment, we added the amendment in dispute, providing that the weight limits, the zones, and the rates should not be changed, because, in our opinion, if the weights are raised, if the zones are extended, if the rates are reduced, this $56,000,000 will not be enough to pay——

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will wait until I get through—this $56,000,000 will not be enough to pay the amount called for by the contracts with the railroad companies.

I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, this provision does not say that the Postmaster General shall increase them or decrease them. It says he shall not change them.

The President of the Senate asked what the existing law is. The existing law is that the Postmaster General, with the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, can change these rates and zones when he sees fit. This law repeals that one and says they can not be changed until authorized by Congress. Consequently, this is a direct modification of the general law at present controlling the parcel post.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Virginia, if he will permit me, at this juncture.

The Postmaster General made the recommendation of the additional million dollars, which the Senate committee incorporated here, upon the presumption that the present law would remain, giving him discretionary power, and that the million dollars authorization would be adequate to protect him in testing out and trying the different zones and different rates and different weights, and not presupposing that he would be arbitrarily shut off and the million dollars appropriated, as the matter now stands.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, during the absence of the present occupant of the chair I suggested that the point of order raised by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] was not in order. Under general parliamentary law a point of order can not be raised against an amendment after discussion of it has begun in the Senate and it has been spoken on.

As corroborating that position I beg to read a decision on this very point delivered by Senator Hoar while he was a Member of the Senate, and I state what I believe to be the general conclusion of the Senate, that he was an expert on parliamentary law. Here is what he said:

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Hoar in the chair) decided that a question that an amendment was not in order could not be made after debate had proceeded upon the merits of the amendment.

And he cites here the authorities upon which he makes this decision.

Mr. SWANSON. But we are in Committee of the Whole now. This amendment would come into the Senate again and have to be read and submitted to the Senate. So if it is decided on that point now in Committee of the Whole, when the bill comes into the Senate that point would not be available.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It would be available anywhere.

Mr. SWANSON. No; the action of the Senate can not be controlled by what was done in Committee of the Whole. If that point of order prevails now, when the bill is reported to the Senate and the bill is read again for amendments it will not be conclusive.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We will cross that bridge when we get to it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Rule XX says:

A question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings except when the Senate is dividing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That very point was made right here when this decision was made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Alabama state the page on which that ruling appears?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Page 59 of the Precedents of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask the Senator from Virginia a question about this matter?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The substantive provision of this paragraph is:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, $56,188,000.

Now, as a proviso to that substantive provision, the paragraph goes on:

And provided further, That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

Suppose that proviso should be adopted. The appropriation which has been made is for the current year. It will lapse at the end of the fiscal year 1915. Suppose in the next session of Congress a bill is brought in which makes an appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes of so many million dollars, and that bill does not contain this proviso, would the Senator contend that the proviso to this paragraph would have the effect of suspending the powers of the Postmaster General under the latter bill?

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator mean with this proviso on a deficiency bill which is brought in?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; this is a proviso to this existing appropriation, which expires——

Mr. SWANSON. This is no proviso to this appropriation. It is really not relevant to it. It does not affect it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a proviso, whether the Senator thinks——

Mr. SWANSON. It is a proviso inserted here, hoping that it may attach to this subject.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a proviso to the paragraph in the appropriation bill. There is no question about that.

Mr. SWANSON. It is included in the paragraph.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Whether it is a limitation is another question, but it is a proviso. The question I am submitting to the Senator from Virginia is this: This is a proviso to the paragraph which makes an appropriation for the fiscal year which expires in 1915. What I ask the Senator is, Suppose this proviso shall be adopted, but that in the appropriation bill which is brought in next year we shall make an appropriation for the inland transportation by railroad routes of a given sum of money, and in that bill shall not include this proviso—then I ask the Senator whether or not the effect of the proviso in this bill would be to suspend the power of the Postmaster General to deal with the change of weight and limit of rates of postage and zones for fourth-class mail matter for the year?

Mr. SWANSON. It would, because this is general legislation, and we would construe that it would repeal for all time the power of the Postmaster General to change it, unless authority was given him by Congress to do so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the general rule of law, the well-settled rule of statutory construction, is that a proviso is to be strictly limited to the subject matter of the substantive paragraph of which it is a proviso, and it can not be extended further. There is no rule——

Mr. SWANSON. If it were a proviso attached to an appropriation, that would be true. If you were to make such a proviso to limit a certain appropriation and say that the appropriation should not be used, for example, for the prosecution of violations of law by labor organizations or farmers' unions, that would be a limitation upon that appropriation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, but——

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator himself will admit that the intention was to have the provision apply for all time, and not merely apply to the appropriations contained in this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would make no difference.

Mr. SWANSON. Whether the Senator admits it or not, he is bound to admit the effect of the plain language employed. The language is plain. It is not limited to this appropriation; it does not attach to this appropriation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But what I am saying to the Senator from Virginia is that the rule of statutory construction, which has been settled by the authorities, is that a proviso to a paragraph is always to be construed as a limitation upon that particular paragraph.

Mr. SWANSON. That might have been the case if the language of the proviso was that no part of this appropriation shall be paid for postal rates in excess of the rates prescribed. If you would have that kind of a provision, the Senator's contention would be true. That is not what this amendment says. This amendment says that the law is repealed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, it is a limitation only upon the paragraph of which it is a proviso. It is as though we said "for transportation by railroad routes, $56,108,000; but not withstanding this appropriation, there shall be no change," and so on.

Mr. SWANSON. It does not affect railway mail pay one iota. It does not affect the amount paid; it does not affect the rate; it does not affect anything except to repeal an existing law. Now, if you would have a provision in the bill saying that under even this appropriation it shall not go to pay for the Parcel Post Service, the Senators' contention would be true, but the proviso does not say that. It simply says that if such a condition should exist, the Postmaster General would no longer be given the power to change rates or zones.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is not what it says. It says, in effect, that notwithstanding we have given the Postmaster General $56,000,000, nevertheless there shall be no change, and so on.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not any doubt, if the Senator will permit me further, that it would be construed simply as relating to this single appropriation, and it would lapse with the appropriation itself, and if we wanted to carry it next year we would have to repeat it in the next appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to address a question to the Chair himself before he passes upon this case. Is there any precedent which can be found in the books anywhere that would prevent an appropriation bill defining how the money appropriated may be used, even though it does change a general law? I think you will find that there is no limit of authority as to what shall be done with the particular money, and when we appropriate a given amount we may provide that that amount may be used in a certain way and in no other way, even though that provision may be in conflict with a general existing law. I understand it to be the rule that has always been adopted by the Senate, and by the House also, that we have absolute authority over every dollar that we appropriate and we may direct in the appropriation bill how it shall be used.

In this appropriation bill we have this fact. Under the present system we can not carry in our parcel post a package that weighs more than 50 pounds. That is the present rule. As I understand the law, the weight may be increased to 100 pounds or 200 pounds or 500 pounds, but in this bill, in which we have a right to say how the money shall be expended, we say it shall not be expended in the carrying of packages by parcel post that weigh over 50 pounds, if that is the present rule under existing law.

I insist, Mr. President, that with the general authority to appropriate there is always carried the authority to direct how the particular fund appropriated may be used, notwithstanding its effect upon any previous law, general or special.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Virginia that this language is not in the nature of a proviso. I disagree absolutely with the other Senators who seek to regard it as a limitation. It does not pretend to be a limitation on an appropriation. It is possible to effect general legislation by means of a limitation if the language is properly drawn. If we provided that no part of a certain appropriation shall be spent unless those receiving it have certain qualifications or it is spent in a particular manner, even though that limitation brought about a change in existing law, it would be a valid limitation.

This language does not seek to limit the appropriation in any way. It effects a change in existing law. I understand it is admitted that under the law now the Postmaster General or some other authority may make a change in the existing weight limit, rates of postage, or zones, or the Interstate Commerce Commission may make them upon the application of the Postmaster General. This language proposes to change that. I am not passing upon the merits of the proposition at all.

Now, so far as the argument of the Senator from Utah is concerned, I should like to call his attention to a fact with which I am familiar, the case of a limitation on an appropriation which was carried in a bill of this character. It provided that no part of a certain sum appropriated in the bill should be used for the purpose of the repair of mail bags and other appliances under contracts which permitted the employment of convict labor. That was a pure limitation. Yet the nature of the language was such that from that time on the Postmaster General has regarded it as substantive law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask the Senator was that in the form of a proviso?

Mr. HUGHES. It was a proviso, put in the form of a limitation, attached directly to the money that was appropriated. It said in terms that no part of the appropriation should be spent in a certain way.

I had occasion to follow up the item the next year, just as the Senator from Utah suggested, that this provision would have to be revived. When the next appropriation bill came in, I followed up the matter to find out how the department viewed the limitation and to find out what would be the policy of the department in the coming year. I was informed at the department that, even though it was a limitation upon a specific sum of money, if the language had a certain character of finality about it and showed a disposition on the part of either or both Houses of Congress to bring about certain legislation, the department regarded it as substantive legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, Mr. President, but——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the Chair must intervene at this point. There are now, I believe, two questions pending, two points of order having been made.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Chair will permit me, I suggest that the point of order that my point of order was made too late was not made until debate had proceeded on my point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Rule XX of the rules of the Senate provides that—

> A question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, except when the Senate is dividing, and unless submitted to the Senate shall be decided by the Presiding Officer without debate, subject to an appeal to the Senate.

The Chair would not have permitted the discussion to go so far upon the proviso if the Chair had intended to rule upon the question as to whether it is or is not general legislation to a general appropriation bill. The point of order raised by the Senator from Alabama was decided by the present occupant of the Chair contrary to the opinion of Senator Hoar. The present occupant of the Chair has ruled that a question of order may be raised at any time, and he gave as a reason for it that frequently in the course of a discussion on an amendment a fact might arise which would indicate that a point of order should be made and should be sustained by the Chair which might not be apparent upon the face of the record.

The Chair has taken occasion to examine the original RECORD where Senator Hoar made his ruling, and believes there is nothing in the ruling as made by Senator Hoar, he proposing to submit the question to the Senate if any Senator desired. Finally, he said:

> The Chair rules that a point of order that an amendment is not in order can not be taken after discussion has proceeded upon the merits of the amendment.

And thereupon the Senate adjourned.

The Chair can not recede from his original ruling, that a point of order may be raised at any time of the proceeding.

We now come to the question as to whether this is general legislation or whether it is a mere limitation upon the expenditure of the money, and necessarily, if so, germane to the bill. In view of the opinions that have been expressed by Senators in the discussion of the point of order, that question the Chair will not decide, but submit to the decision of the Senate. The question is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The question is subject to debate, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that when a question of order is submitted to the Senate it is open to debate, but if the Chair decides it, it is not open to debate, unless an appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me it would be a very good test as to whether the proviso is a mere limitation upon the expenditures of the appropriation provided in the bill to ascertain if the adoption or rejection of the proviso would make any difference in the expenditure of the appropriation. If it makes no difference in the manner in which the appropriation is to be expended whether the proviso is adopted or not, then it is perfectly obvious that the proviso is not a limitation on the appropriation. It seems to me there is no escape from that. It is perfectly clear that, whether we retain or reject the proviso, the money appropriated will be expended in the same way. It will be paid to the railroads for carrying the mail whether we reject it or whether we retain it.

Now, Mr. President, as to its being general legislation, the parcel-post act is itself one of the most distinct and prominent pieces of general legislation that Congress has enacted in many long years. It is claimed by some that if the proviso is adopted it will strike a deadly blow at the parcel-post law. It will at least make a most material change in the existing parcel-post law. If that is the case, it certainly is general legislation, and general legislation in regard to a matter which is probably as prominently before the people as any other piece of general legislation. It is proposed to make that great change in the existing law by a rider upon the appropriation bill. It seems to me, Mr. President, that, if we propose to make that change, it should be taken up as a separate piece of legislation and not be attached to a section of the Post Office appropriation bill.

As to the significance of it, we might as well try, it seems to me, to fix railroad rates by legislation; we might as well determine by an act of Congress every application for an increase or for a decrease in the railroad rates of the country as to undertake to decide by an act of Congress every increase in the weight of parcels or decrease in the rates to be charged for them. This is not an administrative body. When we undertake to do it, when we take that power away from the executive and administrative branch of the Government, we so shackle the law that it practically becomes inoperative and impracticable.

I think Representative DAVID J. LEWIS has come to be recognized as somewhat of an authority upon this question on account of having devoted a great deal of special attention to it, and I want to read a short extract from a recent address of his as to the significance of this proposed amendment. He said:

Sir, without impugning any man's motive—for on the average I find people as good as I am—I wish to say that the repeal of this substantive provision of the parcel-post law might well be worth $50,000,000 to the express companies. It will finally take away from the parcel-post service all the power to compete with them, and they will thus be enabled to capture that portion of the postal function which has saved it from a deficit of about $7,000,000 and given it instead a surplus, now indicated as from eight to ten millions, in the first year of its operation. This is a strong declaration I make and has no value except what the truth may give it.

That declaration was made after a most careful investigation. So it seems the operation of the law as it stands now, with the discretion given the Postmaster General, with the permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission to adjust and rearrange weights and rates, has meant a profit to the Post Office Department of $15,000,000 or $16,000,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to state in this connection that there is no way possible by which Mr. LEWIS or any other man can tell what has been the revenue derived from the parcel post. They can approximate the expense, but no man can tell the revenue, and parties who, in my opinion, are just as familiar with this subject as Mr. LEWIS think that the operation of the law has resulted in a loss instead of a revenue.

Mr. POMERENE rose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in just a moment. I want to say in answer to the Senator from Kansas that I have here a very elaborate table of figures from the Post Office Department giving the cost and the receipts of the parcel post.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state to the Senator from Washington that the estimates are mere guesses. Whenever the use of the distinctive stamp was abolished all opportunity of ascertaining the revenue from the parcel post was destroyed. To determine it is utterly impossible. You may inquire of postmasters anywhere throughout the country and they will tell you that these estimates are mere guesses, and nothing else.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, we will accept it as subject to the uncertainties that nearly all transactions of the kind are subject to, and yet it is a careful estimate, made by men who in our common parlance are entitled to be called experts. As such their estimates are entitled to great weight and consideration. It is quite significant, altogether apart from the special figures as to the parcel post, to consider what there is a certainty about, and that is the increase of the postal receipts generally since this parcel post has been in effect.

I hold in my hand a statement showing that for the four quarters ending March 31, 1913, reading only the percentages, there were increases as follows:

In first-class mail, 8.51; in second-class, 2.90; in third-class, 3.43; in all, an increase of 7.19 per cent.

I ask leave to incorporate this statement as a part of my remarks, and then I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Comparison of gross receipts at presidential offices for the years ended Mar. 31, 1912 and 1913.

	First class.	Second class.	Third class.	Total presidential.
Year ended Mar. 31, 1913..	$178,193,061	$31,065,845	$22,969,819	$232,228,725
Year ended Mar. 31, 1912..	$164,212,428	$30,235,815	$22,207,302	$216,655,545
Increase.....	$13,980,633	$830,030	$762,517	$15,573,180
Per cent of increase.....	8.51	2.90	3.43	7.19

The increase last year was 4.97 per cent, as compared with 7.19 per cent this year. Over 89 per cent of the increase was at first-class offices.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, my purpose in rising was to suggest to the Senator from Kansas that certainly there must be some way of ascertaining the revenue which is derivable from the parcel post. If it could not be done in any other way, it could be done by keeping a record of the canceled stamps that are placed on the packages.

Mr. BRISTOW. But such a record is not kept. There is no such record in existence.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, it seems to me it would be well to provide for keeping such a record.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say to the Senator from Ohio we supposed when we enacted the law that we had required the department to put distinct stamps on the parcel-post matter, but the Postmaster General has refused, from our standpoint, to carry out that provision. That would have given us an absolute record as to the amount of money received by the department for parcel-post matter; but when that method was not used, and ordinary stamps were used, all record was obliterated, and no man can tell how much money is received for any of the different classes of mail. I will say that the special stamp was used until, I think, the 24th of March last, and then the Postmaster General declined further to use it.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understand, the reason which was in the mind of the Postmaster General for making the change, he did not see why there should be one postage stamp to carry a piece of first-class mail and another postage stamp to carry a package; and I think he was right in that view. I can see the purpose which evidently the Senator from Kansas had in mind in providing a special stamp for the parcel post, but a record can be kept just as well, in my judgment, by keeping some account of the stamps as they are canceled upon the packages.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to limit somewhat the discussion, but I will yield to the Senator from Kansas if he desires to make a further statement.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Washington will pardon me, I regret to interrupt him so much, but I desire to say to the Senator from Ohio that the most convenient way by far to ascertain the amount of money that would be received for carrying matter by parcel post would be to require a distinct stamp. Then the accounting is easy, because you simply keep an account of the number of stamps of this particular kind with which a postmaster is charged and then receive an account of the number of stamps he has on hand at the end of a month or a quarter. Then you know just what he has used in this service. But to count the number of stamps on every package and then make a record of them is an enormous undertaking. The department never has done it and, of course, it never will.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I would suggest to the Senator likewise, that it is practically of no cost to the Government to have distinct stamps.

Mr. BRISTOW. None whatever.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Mississippi will allow me just one moment, I will conclude, and then I will yield the floor to him.

I wish simply to read a couple of lines from the third paragraph of Rule XVI in order that it may be in the RECORD in connection with my remarks:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

As I have said before, it seems to me so clear that it is scarcely capable of dispute that this proposed amendment comes within that rule, and in view of the fact that it involves a law which I think is one of the most useful, and has been of more general benefit to the country than any statute which has been passed for some years, if our rules mean anything at all, and we are going to give effect to them, the Senate should now enforce the plain provisions of the rule which I have just read.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is not whether the amendment proposed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads should be adopted; the merits of that proposition are not before the Senate at this time; the question is whether the amendment proposed by the committee is violative of Rule XVI, section 3, found on page 17 of the Senate Manual, which says that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

I understand the law to be that the Postmaster General, with the advice and consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, may change the weights of packages, zones, and the rate of postage on articles that may go through parcel post. It is a general law which gives him this power. The proposed amendment reads:

And provided further, That there shall be no change in existing weight limits, rates of postage, or zones for fourth-class mail matter until authorized by law.

Now, until some subsequent statute shall be enacted, such as is proposed by the committee, that remains the law; but if this amendment shall be adopted the discretion with which the Postmaster General is now vested by a general law will be forever taken from him. If that is not general legislation, I must confess that I do not know what "general legislation" is. The proposition is so clear that it does not admit of argument. I do not want this question, however, to go off on the merits of the proposition; it is a question of interpretation of this rule. I merely rose to make the suggestion that the record might be kept straight.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, inasmuch as this question is to be decided by the Senate—and I think it is a very proper ruling of the Chair—it becomes necessary in a way to discuss the merits of the proposition.

It will be recalled, Mr. President, that when the parcel-post system was inaugurated Congress fixed in the bill certain rates, prescribed certain zones, and fixed certain weights. The weight limit originally was 11 pounds and numerous zones of the different districts were established. It was true that a discretion was given the Postmaster General in the law. That discretion was natural and wise perhaps at the time, because the whole system of parcel post was new. We had had no experience with a business of that character operated by the Post Office Department. I agreed at the time that a wise discretion might be exercised by the Post Office Department; and if, after trial, after investigation, the Post Office Department decided that they could safely change the rates, the weights, and the zones, it might be done.

Before the parcel post had been long in operation—I do not exactly recall the time—the only possible means prescribed in the law by which the department could ascertain approximately what were the revenues derived from it was abolished, and that was distinctive stamps. The department immediately, however, changed the weights from 11 to 20 pounds, practically doubling it. It is true that the Post Office Department went through the form of consulting the Interstate Commerce Commission and got their approval. How long did the Interstate Commerce Commission consider the question? Not a day. As they admitted, they accepted the figures and conclusions of the Postmaster General. That may have been wise, but before that plan had been tried out, before the Post Office Department of the country had had an opportunity to determine what the result and effect of these changes would be, another and more radical change was made, from 20 to 50 pounds, without having been investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. As members of the commission said, in a hearing before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, they accepted practically the figures of the Post Office Department.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Alabama agrees with me, then, that the object of this provision is to repeal a general law, which gives to the Postmaster General the power, with the advice and consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to enlarge the zones and increase the weight of the packages?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I do not agree to that, Mr. President.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does it not repeal——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am coming to that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, I ask the Senator if it will not take that power away from the Postmaster General?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; it takes it away from him for the present; but does the Senator from Mississippi mean to say that a discretion given to a departmental officer in the beginning of the operation of a great system like this can not be changed until he has swamped the Post Office Department?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Most assuredly, Mr. President, it can be changed, and it ought to be changed if it is being improperly used, if it is being abused; but the proper way to change it would be by a general law, and not by general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, Mr. President, I do not quite agree with my friend from Mississippi. I usually find great pleasure in agreeing with everything he says, but at this time I am unable to agree with him.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Alabama has stated that the Postmaster General by order changed the limit, first, from 11 pounds to 20 pounds and, secondly, from 20 pounds to 50 pounds. Is the Senator able to state whether the service has suffered by reason of either of those changes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am able to state, Mr. President, that, in my opinion and from the best evidence I can get, there will be a very large deficiency in the Post Office Department if another change is made and the weights again increased, because they do not know——

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator give us the data upon which he bases that conclusion?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I can not give the Senator the figures, because I have not been able to get any. I am not myself supposed to make these figures. The Post Office Department is unable to give anything excepting a mere guess—an estimate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may we not just as well estimate that there will be a surplus as a deficit?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think so. I think that would be a very violent presumption, because we know that the Rural Carrier System has been a losing business for the Government, and we know—at least I think we know—that the parcel post, even under the present weight limit and the zones is going to be a losing institution. I am willing, however, to test that out.

What I was going to say, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, was that when this bill was passed a joint commission, composed of members of the Post Office Committee of the two Houses, was appointed and instructed to investigate the question of the parcel-post rates, zones, and weights. They began an investigation under the 11-pound provision of the law and the rates and zones as the bill passed Congress. Before they had proceeded very far an order from the Post Office Department changed the whole situation, increased or doubled the weights, reduced the rates, changed the zones, and put the weight at 20 pounds, so that this commission had to begin again. They had then to undertake to make the investigation for conditions existing after the change was put into operation. They went to work diligently to acquire information under that state of affairs. Just as they felt that they were making progress and would be able to report to Congress at an early time their conclusions as to the results of these changes and the operation of the system, another change was made by order of the Post Office Department increasing the weight to 50 pounds and changing the general conditions. The commission had to go to work over again. Now, we are told—not perhaps officially, but we have it from the best authority obtainable—that it is the purpose to increase this weight to 100 pounds.

Well, Mr. President, what will happen? This is a practical business proposition. The Senate can not afford to go off and settle this question on sentiment or speculation. We are here charged with legislation that will make the Post Office Department efficient; we are here for the purpose of making appropriations sufficient to enable the Post Office Department to be operated in the most practical, efficient, economical, and serviceable manner; but we are not here, as I understand, to legislate and to make appropriations upon a mere suggestion from somebody that the people of the country will be disappointed if the Postmaster General is not permitted to increase these weights to 100 pounds, and if, under his discretion, that is so sacred that it can not be touched by Congress, he may increase these weights to 150 pounds, he may increase them to 200 pounds, or to any other amount he may desire; and we have no reason to believe that such will not be the result a little later on.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand this proviso recognizes the existing weights, rates, and zones?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; of course.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is, any change which has been made by the Postmaster General up to this time is recognized?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says that there is great danger of the department being swamped by increase in the weight limit?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator if he has any apprehension with reference to any change that the Postmaster

General might make in the rate of postage or in the zones of fourth-class matter; and if the Senator has no apprehension with reference to those, and if the gravamen of the Senator's fears is based upon the weight limit, why not limit the proviso and the restrictions which it imposes to the weight limit and not to the rates of postage or to the zones?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, Mr. President, I frankly confess that the increase in the weight of the parcels to be carried is the main question. What is going to happen? We may just as well face this question and look at it as practical, common-sense men. If the Senate prefers to sacrifice the Rural Delivery Service and increase without limit the Parcel Post Service, they may do so; but I confidently believe, Mr. President, that another increase—and I am not so sure, from observation and the information I have already obtained, that the statement is not true of the present increase—will very materially impair the Rural Delivery Service.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator alludes to the Rural Delivery Service. If the Senator's apprehension is well founded that the weight of the packages will be increased to 100 pounds, will it not more than impair the City Delivery Service?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, in my deliberate judgment, it will swamp the Post Office Department from end to end.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very evident that the carriers in our city post offices can not lug around hundred-pound packages on their routes, unless they have teams furnished them for that purpose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it will probably have an even more disastrous effect on the rural delivery carrier with a one-horse wagon—and that is about as expensive an outfit as he can afford to operate—and a 24-mile route, or any number of miles, if he is compelled to carry 100-pound packages of different kinds of merchandise. We are turning the Post Office Department into a great store; we are turning the Post Office Department into an immense mercantile establishment. Out on a route to-day in the State of my friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], where, I presume, the ground is covered with snow, as it is now in almost every other section of the country, a man at a point 10 miles from where the rural delivery starts may telephone his merchant, "Send me 50 pounds or 100 pounds of bacon to-day; I can not afford to come to town; the roads are too bad, and I can get it by parcel post cheaper," or a rural blacksmith may say, "Send me a keg of horseshoes or a keg of nails and 50 pounds or 100 pounds of flour or sugar," or a groceryman or a liveryman in town telephones out to his friend in the country, "Send me two or three bales of hay by parcel post to-day; send me 50 pounds of potatoes."

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. I want to say to the Senator that one of my constituents in New Mexico notified me a short time ago that he is under bond running a star route 40 or 50 miles out into the mining camps, over mountains, where it is very difficult to transport freight and where the necessities of life are supplied by small merchants. As soon as the 50-pound ruling went into effect there was an enterprising merchant in El Paso who shipped 11,000 pounds of flour in 48-pound sacks, and this contractor wanted to know what he was going to do about it. I investigated the subject and found he had to carry the flour under his old rate, at the rate of pay for which he agreed to carry the mails, and that there was no recourse for him at all. Now, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if there is any provision in this bill increasing the appropriation in proportion to the increased expense in the event the weight of the packages is increased?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there is a provision in this bill that increases the pay of rural carriers.

Mr. FALL. I mean if the weight is still further increased?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No.

Mr. FALL. I am not speaking of rural carriers; I am speaking of star routes. In my State, Mr. President, there are approximately about 300 miles—I have forgotten just exactly the mileage—of rural routes, as against something like 5,000 or 7,000 miles of star routes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there are numerous instances all over the country where merchants are shipping every conceivable kind of merchandise. For instance, bricks are being shipped by parcel post. A man who wants to send out to his customers a thousand or two thousand or five thousand sample bricks bundles them up and ships them by parcel post, because it is perhaps a little cheaper and a little quicker to send them in that way.

Now, it appears that some Senators have not entirely grasped this situation; some Senators express the fear that if this amendment is adopted we are going to destroy the parcel post; that we are going to impair its usefulness; that there is going to come up a great howl from the country that we have prohibited the Government, through its rural carriers and its star-route service, from delivering to the people every conceivable kind of merchandise.

The Parcel Post and the Rural Delivery Services, Mr. President, were inaugurated for what? For the convenience and benefit of the rural dweller, for the man who desired to have his daily mail carried to his home every day. That was the purpose of the rural service; and when the parcel post came along that received its impetus—it had its origin, I might say—with the farmers of this country. They were exceedingly anxious to have the parcel post inaugurated in connection with the Rural Delivery Service; but if they had believed for one moment that the inauguration of the parcel post was going to impair or practically destroy the Rural Delivery Service they would not have hesitated a moment as to their choice between the two.

What is to become of the star-route carrier, of whom there are thousands carrying mail all over the country, on ponies, mules, burros, or any other means of transportation they can find? Are you going to put them all out of business? Are you going to compel all these men to surrender their contracts and forfeit their bonds? They have no remedy; and the Post Office Department holds them severely to their contracts. I warn some of my good friends who have not had the time or the opportunity to investigate this question and look into its merits, who have not had an opportunity to determine what the results are to be, that they must choose, Mr. President, to-day between the Parcel Post and the Rural Delivery Services. That is what we are confronted with; and nobody can escape that conclusion who will take the trouble to investigate this question as the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has investigated it.

It is unfair, it is unjust, it is unkind for any Senator on this floor to intimate, remotely or otherwise, that a single member of the Post Office Committee would, under any circumstances or conditions, consent to the enactment of a law or the adoption of an amendment that would tend to impair the Parcel Post or the Rural Delivery Service. Our only purpose and our only hope, Mr. President, were that we might be able to preserve both. We were not willing to permit the destruction of the one in order to gratify the avarice and the desire for gain of the great commercial houses of this country, the great order houses, and other classes of men who are engaged in selling merchandise and who wish to be able to ship their goods by express to one point and from there by parcel post to another, or to ship by parcel post through two zones to a point and then reship through two others at the same low rate. Is the Senate prepared to sanction that practice? Are we prepared to go on and permit this extension to 100 pounds or 150 pounds or 200 pounds, and swamp the rural service, swamp the city delivery, and, in the end, swamp the Postal Service in this country and transform it into a great house of merchandise? That is what is coming, in my deliberate judgment.

Mr. President, we are gravely told that we must compete with the express companies. I agree to that, and we are competing with the express companies. I would be glad if all the business that is done through the express companies could be done through the parcel post if we could carry it at a rate that would not involve us in great financial loss.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask did we not learn from the Postmaster General that the parcel-post system was self-sustaining under the 50-pound weight limit?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, Mr. President; we have not any such information as that, so far as I know.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. My impression was that the Postmaster General said, regarding the first limit of 20 pounds, that the service was self-sustaining; and then, in answer to the question, Is it self-sustaining under the weight limit of 50 pounds, he said, "Unquestionably, yes." That is my memory of the testimony of the Postmaster General.

The Senator speaks about carrying 40 pounds of bacon. Why not as well carry 40 pounds of bacon as 40 pounds of books?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why not make it 100 or 200 pounds or more?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I would make it 100 pounds. I want to ask the Senator——

Mr. BANKHEAD. What are you going to pay the carriers, and what sort of wagons are you going to furnish them?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want to ask the Senator if he does not know that in Switzerland they will deliver you by parcel post a ton of coal? I do not know that I particularly desire that; but I do want the most liberal facility of transportation through the parcel post to the people. There is no trouble about getting men to deliver the parcels. There is no trouble about getting horses or wagons to deliver them. There are millions of young men who would like to take the job at $50 or $75 a month. We would be benefiting them and at the same time we would be benefiting the people. I want the utmost freedom of intercourse amongst the people.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes; but I thought I had the consent of the Senator to interrupt him. I certainly have made but very few remarks on the subject, and I know I am advocating that which is near and close to the hearts of the people, indeed nearer and closer to the hearts of the people than any recent legislation which has been enacted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey, in his deliberate opinion and judgment, from his knowledge of the people of his State, which do they prefer—the rural delivery or the parcel post?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Great heavens! I believe we are big enough and broad enough and bright and intelligent enough to accomplish them both, and we will do it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; we can do anything, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, we can pretty nearly. With a Democratic majority there is no limit to our hopes and possibilities. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. We are conducting the Rural Delivery Service to-day at a clear loss of $30,000,000 or $35,000,000 or perhaps $40,000,000 to the Treasury. Does anybody dispute that? That is the best estimate the Post Office Department can make. Of course we can go on and spend $50,000,000 more than the receipts; we can go on and spend any amount of money for the parcel post that we desire; but it must come from somewhere. Nobody proposes to interfere with the present arrangement of the parcel post. It may be all right now. They have been trying it, and just as they have concluded that it is self-sustaining they propose to increase the weight limit to 100 pounds.

I want to ask the Senator a question. Why can not the Senate of the United States limit the discretion it has given? That is what this is. We have given the Postmaster General a discretion. He has been using that discretion, and in my judgment he has been abusing that discretion in a certain way. I say that, although I have a very high regard for the Postmaster General. Does the Senator mean to say that if we committed an error in giving this unlimited discretion to an official of the Government we must sit quietly down here and permit that discretion to be used and extended to the great detriment of the public service?

That is the question. I can not believe that this is new legislation in any sense. It is simply an attempt to limit the discretion we have conferred. I do not believe it could be said that it is a change of existing law. The law simply gives discretion; and if we can not change the law and limit that discretion, where in the name of heaven will we stop with respect to this question of discretion?

Now, I have expressed my view. I have no more interest in this matter than any other Senator. I should exceedingly regret to see the Rural Delivery Service practically destroyed, as in my opinion it will be, and the City Delivery Service practically destroyed, as it will be, unless the Senate is willing to appropriate two or three times as much as it is appropriating now for rural delivery and city delivery. If the Senate is willing to do that, and let them get two-horse and four-horse and in some cases six-horse wagons to haul these parcels, then all right; but the Senate ought to understand that that condition is to confront them, and to confront them seriously in the near future. Are you ready to meet it—that is the question—or would you rather yield to popular sentiment or popular clamor from gentlemen who do not understand this situation?

All of this public clamor has been created by a conspiracy concocted here in Washington and sent out to all the papers of the country, a premeditated misrepresentation and misstatement of the facts. The people do not understand the situation. They can not. They have only the misinformation that has gone out, and that is the only information they can get. There is the whole question.

In conclusion, I wish to say this: Senators say, "You have got to compete with the express companies." That is all right. Compete with them; put them out of business, if you want to; but do not spend enough money in competing with the express companies to buy out the express companies before your competition begins. You will have wasted all this money, and, in your competition, millions and millions of dollars, and in the end you may have to take over the express companies; and then you will have lost all the money you have foolishly spent in a nonsensical attempt to compete under existing conditions.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it was the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that presented to the Senate the parcel-post law. It was the same committee that now is supposed to be the enemy of the law it drew.

I have seen much said in the newspapers on this subject, and I express no surprise that the chairman of the committee should feel irritated that newspapers over the country should charge this committee with a deliberate purpose to destroy the parcel post. But, Mr. President, we need not worry ourselves about every irresponsible simpleton who writes in a newspaper. It seems to me we have a duty to perform in the consideration of this bill.

Some months ago, when the Postmaster General first undertook to make the change, I objected upon what to me was a sufficient ground. In order that anybody who wants to understand the facts may have them, I desire to put into the RECORD section 8 of the House bill on the subject of the parcel post, which was embodied in the appropriation bill for 1913.

Section 8 of that bill as it came to the Senate contained nothing more than a provision for the establishment of a parcel post, with a limit of 11 pounds, upon the rural routes. It was this Senate committee, under the leadership of the then chairman of the committee, after an investigation by four other members of the subcommittee, which proposed a broad, general parcel post upon the zone system. That bill went into conference, and it was in conference that the proviso was written in giving to the Postmaster General power to change these rates, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

My friend the Senator from Arizona said he was amazed at the action of the committee in reporting this bill to the Senate, because he said the provision giving to the Postmaster General power to change zones and rates and weight limits was very fully discussed here in the Senate. Mr. President, it was never discussed here one minute. It was written into the bill in conference.

Now, sir, when it was written in there I was opposed to it; and I think if this matter keeps on there will be much injustice done under a system that will allow one individual, not responsible to the people for his action, to extend zones, to eliminate the zones we have, and finally, perhaps, to come to a flat rate all over this country.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question. If the amendment proposed by the committee is adopted, what will be the weight limit of packages that can be carried by parcel post?

Mr. BRYAN. At present the weight limit upon the rural routes and upon the first and second zones established by Congress, which have now been consolidated into one zone by the Postmaster General, is 50 pounds. A parcel of 50 pounds is carried upon the rural routes for 30 cents. It is carried within the combined first and second zones for 54 cents. The Postmaster General has left the other zones as established by Congress.

Mr. GRONNA. The original amount, as I understand, was 11 pounds.

Mr. BRYAN. Eleven pounds.

Mr. GRONNA. What increase in payment to the rural carriers is provided for in this bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Just a minute; perhaps I have not stated it correctly. I will state the weight limits over again: Fifty pounds on the rural routes and in the first and second zones; 20 pounds in zones beyond; and the zones have not otherwise been changed. I am coming to the point about the pay of the carriers in a few minutes.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. BRYAN. I have seen it stated in the newspapers that nobody knew how the parcel-post bill originated. Mr. President, I wish to stop long enough to say that everybody who can read print ought to know that the bill was prepared by the former Senator from Oregon, Mr. Bourne, after he had spent his vacation and almost a year in working upon it; and it was not until after great opposition by him that he finally yielded to a proposal to allow the Postmaster General to change the zones, weight limits, and rates of postage.

Here are Senators living around the great mail-order houses of Chicago, in near-by States. The reason the Senate committee made the first zone 50 miles was because we did not think it was fair to put the merchants of small towns around these mail-order houses and large cities at the mercy of the great business houses. We thought, furthermore, that the people in the small towns were entitled to the natural benefit that distance gave them in the carriage of freight. We thought it would be unfair for the Government, even though it had the power and, of course, could appropriate the money to do it, to put those people in competition with the mail-order houses and enable them to get their goods into the hands of the constituents of the country merchant without the payment of even a freight rate.

I am not a hero-worshiper, Mr. President. I have no doubt Mr. LEWIS of Maryland has given great study to this question. I had the honor to serve upon the subcommittee with Senator Bourne. At that time his proposition was, as I remember, to buy out the express companies, and to pay them $40,000,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. That was the proposition of Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what I say. That was his proposition then. What did we need with the franchises of the express companies? So that went by the board. Now, we, in the Senate committee, are held up as the great enemies of this law.

Several Senators have quoted from what Mr. LEWIS had to say, but none of them have quoted what seems to me to be a demonstration of the inadequacy of these rates that are to be put into effect not by the Postmaster General but by two or three clerks under him, who tell him what he ought to charge for doing the business.

The references to what Mr. LEWIS said on the floor of the House render it permissible for me to call attention to this statement made by him.

But, sir—

Says Mr. LEWIS—

if this rider should prevail, the surplus would be short lived. The express companies, free to readjust their rates, would readjust them to divert all the profitable traffic from the post, leaving us with scarcely any except the rural route and star-route traffic. Two facts justify this assertion:

First. The profitable parcel traffic flows between the cities and on the rails. As to this traffic the express companies are paying the railroads an average of about 4 cents a ton-mile, while the Post Office pays about 8 cents a ton-mile.

Second. The unprofitable traffic is along the rural and star routes. Their maintenance costs the Post Office about four times as much as the revenues derived from the mail and parcels delivered over them.

It would be an unwise provision to make any rates that were not self-sustaining; but, above all, the rates for the carriage of parcels upon the rural routes ought to be self-sustaining, because otherwise, with the express companies having half the transportation expense that the Government has, of course they can carry the parcel to the point where the rural route will take it and deliver it at a loss of 75 per cent to the Government, according to this expert cited by several Senators. In whose interest is that done? In the interest of the express companies.

I take an illustration that he gives:

The 10-pound express rate from New York—

Quoting from Mr. LEWIS—to Lincoln, Nebr., is 57 cents, which, added to the rural postal-route rate of 10 cents, makes 67 cents. The complete parcel-post rate from New York is now 81 cents, or 14 cents above the express and rural-route rates combined. Of course, people will ship by the cheapest means, and so if this Senate rider is adopted we must expect the rural routes to be exploited by the express companies to the limits of the wants of the 20,000,000 of farming population. The express companies will use the nonpaying part of the postal institution to push their traffic to and from the farm at a postal economic loss of 75 per cent—

He changes a little. A while ago it was 4 to 1; now it is 3 to 1—and when it reaches the rails and becomes profitable by a system of rates, they are left free to devise for that purpose—they will appropriate all this traffic substantially to themselves.

A very pertinent question may now be asked. Why did the Postmaster General propose and the Interstate Commerce Commission approve a rate of 81 cents for a 10-pound parcel from New York to Lincoln when they had knowledge that the express rate was 57 cents? The answer is that the Post Office has to pay the railways 60 cents to transport that parcel.

So there is the situation. We actually have to pay to the railroad companies more money than the express rate is. Now, how much are you going to reduce it?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if there is no way of amending that so that the railroads will be required to carry this freight for the Government of the United States as cheaply as for the express companies?

Mr. BRYAN. Whenever that is done that will be the time to reduce these rates; but, as the Senator from Kansas said on a former occasion, when a railroad commission reduces an express rate it reduces what the express companies pay to the railroad companies, but when we fix by statute the payment to the railroad companies that remains fixed. We can reduce the amount we receive, but we can not reduce the expense. The Senator asks a very pertinent question.

Mr. OWEN. I really wanted to know what the truth was about it, why we do not get as low rates from the railroad companies as the express companies do, and why the Government of the United States, through the party now responsible for government, does not take the necessary steps to accomplish it.

Mr. BRYAN. I will say to the Senator, as perhaps he knows, that there is a commission now studying the question of railway mail pay, and this bill carries an extension of time for them to make their report. If we pay twice as much as the express companies for railroad transportation, then it follows absolutely that in the carriage of large packages the Post Office Department can not compete with the express companies without the loss of a tremendous amount of money.

Mr. OWEN. With that premise, I agree with the conclusion; but I am not willing to have that premise remain a fact.

Mr. BRYAN. I will join the Senator as readily as any man in this Chamber to change it, but it is a fact; and yet the express rate from New York to Lincoln, according to Mr. LEWIS, is less than the money the Government pays to the railroad company for the transportation of a 10-pound package. What does that lead up to? That as to that 10-pound package, between those two cities, we can not compete without an absolute loss.

It is stated by the Interstate Commerce Commission in its report—and the comparison will bear it out—that the rates now in effect disclose that the prescribed express rates for packages over 4 pounds, when carried for distances of more than 200 miles and less than 3,000 miles, are generally lower than the parcel-post rates. For distances of more than 3,000 miles the parcel-post rates and the express rates are practically the same.

Another fact which will be ascertained by an examination of that report is that practically country wide the parcel-post rates up to 4 pounds are cheaper than the express rates, and that in shipping small packages it will be to the advantage of the people to use the parcel-post rates. Now, why is that? Because the Government has its equipment, the rural carriers; it has its city delivery carriers; it has a more thorough organization for the handling of small packages than the express companies; but when you come to large packages, especially packages of 20 pounds and more, because of the rates we have to pay in comparison with the rates the express companies are supposed to pay we are eliminated by reason of the vast difference.

Another argument made is that it will not do for Congress to say, "Hold on, Mr. Postmaster General; we do not know whether these rates are self-sustaining or not. Let us wait long enough to find out. Here you abolished the distinctive stamp; in August you cut the rates in two over some of the zones, and raised the weight limit to 20 pounds on the first two zones and on the rural routes and let it remain the same on the others; and then, before an examination and a determination could be made as to the effect of that order, on the 1st of January another order was made raising the weight limit on two of these zones to 50 pounds and on the other zones to 20 pounds, and you appear here and say that a weight limit o 100 pounds has no terrors for you. Let us let the rates that are now in effect, and the weights that are now in effect, and the zones as now established remain long enough for you and for a commission that Congress has had appointed here to find out the truth about this matter."

It is said that by the adoption of this amendment we withhold from the Postmaster General the power to make any change, but that the express companies can make a change any day. Mr. President, that is not so. The express companies are bound to maintain the rates established by the Interstate Commerce Commission. They can not raise them and they can not lower them without permission, upon 30 days' notice. Congress is in session practically all the time; and all this provision requires is that they must come and let Congress, by a joint resolution or in some other manner, approve a further change.

We have taken it for granted for the purposes of this amendment that the rates are self-sustaining as now existing; but, Mr. President, if we examine the method by which that result is arrived at, I doubt very much if any man would concede that they are self-sustaining.

It is claimed by the department, by the Postmaster General and his assistants, that the increase of expense due to the parcel post is about $5,000,000, made up as follows:

First Assistant:
Clerks first and second class offices	$80,000
Watchmen	25,000
Contract stations	65,000
Rent, light, and fuel	150,000
Miscellaneous items first and second class offices	32,000
City delivery carriers	250,000
Substitute carriers	200,000
Horse hire	670,000
Car fare, bicycles, etc	50,000
Second Assistant:
Power boat, natural growth, and parcel post	135,000
Mail messenger, natural growth, and parcel post	90,000
Screen wagon, natural growth, and parcel post	667,000
Post car service, statutory rate on additional space	436,000
Terminal post offices	410,000
Fourth Assistant:
Natural growth, parcel post (office)	20,000
Office supplies, parcel post	40,000
Trucks, laborers, parcel post	10,000
Miscellaneous items, natural growth, parcel post	18,000
Star routes	1,570,000
Total	4,918,000

They overlook the increase of 5 per cent involved in this paragraph of this bill, amounting to two and a half million dollars, put in the appropriation bill of last year. In the report they make they say that there is no cost for 73 per cent of the deliveries made, because those deliveries are made by the rural carriers. Well, now, let us see if there has been any additional cost.

In last year's appropriation bill we added a hundred dollars a year to the pay of each rural carrier, did we not? There were at least 42,000 of them. That is $4,200,000 added to the cost. This year there are 42,805. That is $4,280,500 more, because this bill carries another raise of a hundred dollars a year each. That makes about eight and a half million dollars. Five million dollars more is over thirteen million. Yet they expect to make from eight to ten million dollars a year. Of course you can make it if you credit everything you take in and do not charge any of your expenses.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if the increase in the pay of the Rural Carrier Service last year and this year was on account of the increased service that they rendered on account of the parcel post? Was it not rather because of the extension of the Rural Carrier Service?

Mr. BRYAN. Not at all; it was because of the increased work put upon them.

Mr. President, we might as well face the situation. This committee was fortunate to get off with a raise of $100 a year. Amendments have been introduced to pay the rural-route carriers $1,400 a year. If they are going to have to carry so many of these parcels as to make them go to that expense, I do not know but that we will have to come to that compensation. We are going to have to raise their pay, and it is not very fair figuring to say that we will not take into account any of the raises given directly and absolutely because of the increase in the work put upon the rural carriers and the star-route men.

Mr. President, there is very great contention as between the railroad companies and the Government as to the justice of the railway mail pay. That is a question that is being investigated by a commission of Congress. As was said by the Interstate Commerce Commission, "so far as the rail carriers are concerned, it is of no consequence to them whether they furnish rail transportation for the express respondents herein or for the Post Office Department." Because if we should pay to the railroad companies more than the express companies pay to them they would not be damaged, but, on the contrary, they would be benefited if all of the express were carried by the parcel post.

Of course the express companies will be injured. I do not enjoy the position of appearing even to appeal for them, because in my judgment they have no right to exist in this country. I believe if the State railroad commissions and the Interstate Commerce Commission would simply say to the railroad corporations "You are common carriers; you have to do the transportation business, and if you see fit to farm out a part of your profits to express companies in order to hide away from the railroad commissions a part of your earnings in the fixing of rates, we will ignore the fact that you have done so."

The arrangement between the express companies and the railroad companies to-day is this: The railroad companies furnish the cars. They furnish all the equipment, all the freight, free of charge. The express companies handle it at the terminals, deliver it, and divide with the railroad companies about 50 per cent of the net earnings, amounting, I believe, to about $20,000,000.

So it ought to be perfectly apparent, Mr. President, that we can not compete in large packages with a situation of that kind. If the railroad commissions and the Interstate Commerce Commission would bend their energies toward getting a ruling by a court of final resort upon the question whether they have not the right to ignore the express companies in the fixing of rates, then rates might be reduced, and the Government and the public alike would derive benefits from it.

But the proposition is true that the Government no more than an individual can force a railroad company to carry for less than a reasonable charge. We can not get merchandise carried by parcel post, however large the package we make, for any less than a railroad commission can force a railroad company to carry it.

But, Mr. President, I have found it always dangerous to dispute with an expert. I do not base my opposition to the order of the Postmaster General to change rates and zones and weight limits upon the pure question of whether his rates are self-sustaining.

I was very much interested yesterday in hearing the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] read from Washington's Farewell Address this paragraph:

> It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation, for, though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Mr. Tucker, in his work on the Constitution, quotes from Baron Montesquieu as follows, and it has gone down in our constitutional history as Montesquieu's Maxim:

> In every Government there are three sorts of power: The legislative; the executive, in respect to things dependent on the law of nations; and the executive, in regard to matters that depend on the civil law. By virtue of the first the prince or magistrate enacts temporary or perpetual laws, and amends or abrogates those that have been already enacted. By the second he makes peace or war, sends or receives embassies, establishes the public security, and provides against invasions. By the third he punishes criminals or determines the disputes that arise between individuals. The latter we shall call the judiciary power, and the other simply the executive power of the State. * * * When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person or in the same body of magistrates there can be no liberty, because apprehensions may arise lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws, to execute them in a tyrannical manner. Again there is no liberty if the judiciary power be not separated from the legislative and executive. Were it joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control, for the judge would be then the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power, the judge might behave with violence and oppression. There would be an end of everything were the same man or the same body, whether of the nobles or of the people, to exercise those three powers—that of enacting laws, that of executing the public resolutions, and of trying the causes of individuals.

In the act establishing the Department of State, the Department of Justice, and the Post Office Department provision was made that the heads of those departments should report to the President of the United States; but when Congress constituted the Treasury Department provision was made that the Secretary of the Treasury should report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. So to-day the Secretary of State reports to the President, the Attorney General reports to the President, the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Interior, and all the others report to the President, but even down to the latest report the Secretary of the Treasury directs his reports to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

It is hardly necessary to refer Members of the Senate to the reason for this. It was found in the great proposition fought over and won by the House of Commons against Charles I on the right of the House of Commons to control the purse strings of the nation.

If we give to the Postmaster General or any other head of department unlimited power in the spending of money, we might as well not make any appropriation at all; it becomes a mere sham; the good faith of the Government would be bound to pay whatever deficit might be created either by the ignorance or by the intention of the head of a department.

The truth is that we have been too prone to turn over legislative power to bureaus and individuals, and we are dull students if we do not know the penalty that sooner or later is bound to come from that kind of legislation.

I have no doubt that the Postmaster General is doing his level best to make the Parcel Post Service a success. But, Mr. President, it is giving a great deal of power to him to let him fix the rates that he pleases—the rates and the weight limit—all with the consent of Congress that he shall go ahead and we will pay the bill. If we are going to do that, in order to be consistent we ought to allow him to fix the railway-mail pay on first-class mail matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. The sentiment just read by the Senator from Florida from Washington's Farewell Address is an admirable one. I fear, however, it is rapidly becoming obsolete.

Mr. BRYAN. I am afraid so, too, Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not rise to comment upon our decadence in that respect, but to ask the Senator from Florida a legal question. The United States has now entered the business of a common carrier. It has undertaken to transport freight from one point to another. I do not quarrel with that policy; I voted for the law which established it; but does the Senator from Florida believe that it is within our constitutional competency to delegate to any individual, no matter whether he holds an office or not, the legislative power of fixing the rates of freight?

That question is not new. We have undertaken to fix the rates for the common carriers, and it is perfectly well known the Supreme Court has declared over and over again that the fixing of rates for transportation is a legislative function, and that Congress can not delegate that power to a commission or to an individual without accompanying it with a rule, a standard, a law which the commission must apply to the particular case.

When we attempted two years ago to give to the Postmaster General the right to fix rates for freight carried by the United States without any rule, without any guide, I believed it to be an unconstitutional exercise of power. I believe so still. I rise to ask the opinion of the Senator from Florida upon it. Have we any power, if we regard at all the Constitution and the institutions of our country, to say to the Postmaster General, "You may fix whatever rates you please for the transportation of packages under the parcel-post law"?

Mr. BRYAN. No; I do not think so; but, if we are going to give him that power, we ought to be consistent and give him power to fix the pay. What more reason is there for giving to him the power to fix the rate on fourth-class mail matter than there is on first-class mail matter, and what Senator would ever vote to let the Postmaster General or any individual say how much we should pay on our letters or on second-class mail matter, the carriage of newspapers and magazines?

Now, Mr. President, in the report of the Postmaster General he brought out a situation that I confess I am unable to understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Florida yield for a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business? It is now a quarter after 5.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 25, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 24, 1914.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF PORTO RICO.

Harvey M. Hutchison, of Porto Rico, to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico, vice James H. McLeary, deceased.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 24, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee Almighty God for every great thought which has illumined the minds of men and made clear the way for every earnest and noble endeavor which has accelerated the march of mankind toward the perfected manhood in Christ Jesus; for we realize that in the last analysis whatever else is worthy of attainment it is character alone which will stand the test of time and eternity. Help us, we beseech Thee, to build such a character for ourselves. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and, together with accompany papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. (H. Rept. 300.)

Mr. MANN reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplementary report to the river and harbor bill, setting forth my views on the Mississippi River.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that it be printed with the majority report.

Mr. MANN. I think they had better be printed separately.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think they had better be printed separately, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to file supplementary views on the river and harbor bill and that it be printed separately from the majority report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege, affecting my rights, reputation, and conduct as a Member individually, growing out of an editorial in the Philadelphia Public Ledger of February 13, 1914, in relation to the road bill which passed the House on February 10. That editorial bears the caption, "Let public opinion smash pork-barrel politics." The words in the editorial to which I call especial attention are these: "The danger is imminent. Once this graft has started it can not be stopped. It must be throttled now." The Century Dictionary defines the word "graft" to mean "dishonest gain, acquired by corrupt agreement or connivance, especially in positions of trust, as by promising or accepting bribes, or promising or using, directly or indirectly, one's official influence or power to assist or protect wrongdoing."

It is well known that I took an active part both in the preparation and passage of the bill, and that therefore this editorial refers individually to me as well as others.

Mr. Speaker, there are two things without which civilization, even in its crudest form, could not exist. They are the public road and the public press. Both of these are all the better if they are kept free from mud. Dirt roads should be kept compacted and firm by the frequent use of the split-log drag. Newspaper editorials should be kept free from slime by the constant use of the fair-play drag.

It is not for me to lecture the press on the subject of journalistic ethics, yet I venture to suggest that in dealing with public questions public men might be discussed without resorting to the unwarranted use of language implying official dishonesty.

No newspaper man in this Capitol or out of it has the slightest suspicion that any Member of the House was moved to support the road bill through any motive of graft. Then, with such a splendid vocabulary as the English language affords, why did not the Public Ledger use a milder term?

Of course we all know the efficacy of an ad hominem attack—an attack not on a measure, but on the character and motives of the man who advocates it. Under such an assault the timorous take to cover. They shrink from a personal attack upon themselves and flee when they should stand and fight. Nobody understands better than journalists and operators of editorial canning factories the immense possibilities of this method of guerilla warfare.

A few days ago the road bill passed the House by an almost unanimous vote. Outside of the five States of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, there were only 12 votes against the bill.

Within the last few days the country has been flooded with editorials against it. This long line of opposition has sprung up in a night. We have been taught that nothing happens by accident—that everything comes from design. If that be true, then from whose design has come this endless chain of malevolent editorials. Every can of this editorial stuff has upon it the same label, which conclusively shows that they all came from the same editorial canning factory.

Mr. Speaker, look at these editorials. Here is one headed "Another pork barrel." Here is another which says: "It is distinctly a bad bill, the effect of which would be, first, to plunge the good-road movement head over heels into Federal pork barrel." Here is another: "Think what an entering wedge and scandal that 'pork barrel' road bill would be." Here is another: "Judge Lowe is warning all supporters of the good-road movement throughout the length of the proposed old trails route to help defeat the pork barrel." Here is another, from Kansas City, headed "J. G. Paxton opposes the national road pork barrel." Here is another: "That at least would stimulate State and local road building and would not be a distribution of pork." The distinctive feature of all of these editorials is the words "pork barrel."

If one comes across a quadruped and wants to know to what particular species it belongs, there are certain distinctive features which will point him to a correct solution. If a naturalist should go afield and discover a little animal under a hedge and he looked at it and was in doubt what it was, he would approach it closely. He would notice that it had a nose; so has a horse. He would discover that it had two eyes; so has a cow. He would discover that it had a tail; so has a dog. He would discover that it had teeth; so has a wolf. Approaching nearer still, he would suddenly discover the air filled with a fog which would penetrate his eyes, his mouth, his nose, his ears. From the distinctive odor of that fog he would instinctively discover the particular family to which the animal belonged.

Mr. Speaker, where did the term "pork barrel" get its start? Pork barrel! Who first applied this epithet to this road legislation in behalf of the people of this great country, this legislation whose beneficence extends out and blesses every citizen of the United States? Who, I say, first called it a "pork barrel"? I will trace it for you. There are in this country a number of road associations made up of men of great wealth who have special interests that they want to promote, and they have undertaken to shape all road legislation that is adopted here or in the States. I shall not undertake to enumerate all of these road associations. I can now recall the National Highways Association, the National Road Builders' Association, and a number of others of that character, made up of whom? Big contractors, the engineers who serve big contractors, manufacturers of road machinery, the manufacturers of road material, and the men who expect to purchase in the market the bonds that are to be issued for road construction. They have an immense membership spread out all over the land. First, these associations do not want a road built unless it shall have such magnificent proportions that it calls for the letting of a big contract out of which great profit may be made by the men who make up these associations. Then there is another association organized for the purpose of promoting the pleasure of its members. I refer to the American Automobile Association, an association whose ramifications extend into every nook and corner of the great Republic.

They have a membership to whom they can reach out their hands and get funds for carrying on editorial canning factories out of which come editorials like this in the Public Ledger, every one carrying the expression, "pork barrel." These are scattered broadcast over the land. What does this association want? Some fancy boulevards over which the rich automobile owner can spend a part of his leisure in touring the country. Peacock lanes built at the expense of the taxpayers. They have said that they are opposed to expending any money on roads within a State, because if the money is frittered away on these community roads—these farm roads—there will not be funds enough left with which to build the peacock lanes upon which they have their hearts set.

I want to locate for the newspaper men who have used this term "pork barrel" the factory in which that term was manufactured.

A report of a meeting of the American Automobile Association carries the following:

We contend that it is the duty of the Federal Government to supplement State and county road systems with a plan of national highways connecting all parts of this country.

I read further:

This national assembly of the American Automobile Association, for the third time in its existence, met in Chicago, December 2 and 3, at the Auditorium Hotel.

Before the meeting concluded, following the recommendation of a special committee, it was decided to establish additional headquarters in Washington, D. C., particularly for accelerating the activities of the good-roads board in securing national legislation.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues on this floor are supposed by the American Automobile Association to be incompetent to legislate for the constituencies who have sent them here, and therefore a highly paid executive committee has been sent down here to guide these representatives of the American people out of dirt roads into the peacock lanes over which rich automobile owners hope to strut at the expense of the American public. [Applause.] When the big industries desired to erect a tariff board they organized headquarters in Washington, and until yet the stench of Mulhall rises up to high Heaven; but the money expended by Mulhall and his coadjutors is as dimes to dollars as compared with the money that is being put into this propaganda now for the peacock lanes that extend from New York to San Francisco. I continue to read:

In the meeting of the new board of directors Chairman Diehl put forward resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, emphatically placing the association on record as being opposed to any Federal aid to "pork-barrel" propositions.

Mr. Philadelphia Ledger, where did you get your term "pork barrel"? Was it not from the editorial canning factory of the American Automobile Association? [Applause.]

I read further:

The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted by the American Automobile Association at its tenth annual meeting, held in Chicago, December 2 and 3, 1912:

"Whereas the American Automobile Association is distinctly and definitely opposed to any and all projects for Federal participation in highway construction that do not comprehend a general system of national roads, constructed and maintained under the supervision of the Federal Government and equitably apportioned among the States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this association hereby declares it is in favor of national roads as the specific object upon which Federal appropriations for good roads should be spent; and be it further

"Resolved, That this association, as one national body of automobilists, shall do all in its power to discourage pork-barrel methods in the national road appropriations, and in its local clubs to induce them as organizations and their members as individuals to assist in averting a great harm which the good-roads movement would suffer if Federal appropriations for highways are permitted to become prizes for distribution among congressional districts as a reward for political services."

Read the copyrighted labels—pork barrel. Wherever that legend is borne in an editorial it comes from the editorial canning factory of the American Automobile Association. In the report by the president of that association to its members Mr. Robert Hooper said:

I do not wish to be overoptimistic, but have no hesitancy in saying that inside of two years I believe we will have committed our Federal Government to a system of national roads that will connect all parts of the country.

It would be my recommendation that the annual meeting should in some manner place itself positively on record in regard to what is rather inelegantly referred to as "pork-barrel" legislation in connection with this now country-wide good-roads movement. The duty devolves upon a community to build its own local roads, and the natural sequence is that when the highway becomes of interstate importance it should then demand Federal attention. To distribute national funds in strictly community expenditures is illogical and basically wrong, and I feel that we should not hesitate to say so in an unmistakable manner.

Mr. Hooper further said:

The report which you will receive from the committee in regard to establishing additional headquarters in Washington has had my very careful consideration, and I can not but feel, in view of all the circumstances, that it will be better for you to consider such a movement favorably. Inasmuch as our work is now entirely of a national scope, not only in regard to good roads, but also as to touring and legislation, I feel that the closer we can keep in touch with Congress the greater amount of influence we can wield.

Chairman Diehl, of the executive board, said:

The good-roads board consists of at least one member of each of the 451 clubs belonging to the association. The members of the board have been much more active than ever before, and practically all of the work of the highway improvement and agitation for comprehensive laws and liberal appropriations have, in a measure at least, resulted from the efforts of the individual members of the good-roads board. The appropriations by the several States, counties, and towns have been larger and the work resulting therefrom has been more systematically and carefully done.

The main object of the good-roads board remains the construction of a national system of highways, built and maintained, in whole or in part, by the Federal Government.

The magnitude of the task at times is appalling, but it is a positive fact that from semichaotic conditions a definite method of procedure is being evolved. Of course, help of all sorts is being given to the constituent State bodies, who naturally appeal to the national good-roads board for advice as to the methods of procedure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is the source of all these misguided editorials that come floating into these newspaper offices. I do not believe that the editors of the press generally understood the significance of these articles. Newspaper editorials must be hurried up; there is no time to ponder over what the journalist must write and what the editor inserts in his paper. It is touch and go, and here comes along a can of this stuff. There is no time to stop and consider from whence it comes, so it is pushed into the public press.

Mr. Speaker, the insolence of the American Automobile Association can not be better pointed out than by reference to a letter which I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Before it is read I desire to make this statement: In the last Congress we passed in the House what was called the "Shackleford good roads bill." I sent a copy of it to various parts of the country, among others to the members of the Automobile Club of St. Louis. The Automobile Club of St. Louis passed a resolution indorsing the bill. As time went along that bill was defeated in the Senate, and the letter I have sent to the Clerk's desk will explain how it was defeated in the Senate, as the writer of that letter understands it. When the Sixty-third Congress met I introduced that bill again. The writer of that letter, a member of the committee on resolutions which passed these resolutions of the American Automobile Association and vice president of that association and member of its executive board, wrote that letter to the president of the Automobile Club of St. Louis. I would like to have the Clerk read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

KANSAS CITY, MO., September 3, 1913.

Mr. EDWARD M. FLESH,
President Automobile Club of St. Louis,
Planters' Hotel, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I understand that at one time last year your club, through the influence of Mr. Roy Britton, passed a resolution indorsing what is known as the "Shackleford road bill."

This bill, as you probably know, carries with it an appropriation of $15 per mile for dirt roads through the rural free-delivery districts of the United States. We consider this bill the biggest joke ever introduced into Congress. The American Automobile Association, through its influence, beat this bill once in the Senate after it had been passed by the House.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD has shown throughout his course to be antagonistic to the automobilist and to automobile interests both in this State and in the United States. The probabilities are that he will continue to create trouble as his mental make-up leads him altogether in that direction. I consider Mr. SHACKLEFORD a joke and we look for him to be retired in the district in the coming election.

If this resolution was passed at a regular meeting of your club and not by a few members, or by its directors, I would like to have a resolution, if possible, ordered passed rescinding the former action taken and reported as the action of your club.

The American Automobile Association, of which you are a member, is doing everything in its power to beat this man for the coming term.

Yours, respectfully,

H. D. TRAIN, President.

Mr. Speaker, that is one letter that by accident came to my attention. How many others like it have been sent out over the country no man can tell. Looking at that thing I should say that men who have dared to vote in favor of a community system of roads that will aid in hauling the products of the farm to the nearest town or railroad station are marked. Wherever Mr. Train and others like him can do anything to put some of those members out of commission it will be done. They have not many votes in my district, and I do not know to what method they would resort to defeat me at the coming election, as he says, they have determined to do, except by putting their hands down into their treasury and fill the papers of my district and my State with canned editorials against me. This is an outrage, but they can not defeat me. My people may retire me some time, and surely will, if I do not carry myself circumspectly. I call the attention of this House and the country to the nefarious methods that are being resorted to in order to defeat legislation in which all of the people are interested. [Applause.]

The man who wrote that letter I happen to know, as does my friend from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. He is no weakling. He is a business man. He knew what he was doing. He never intended that letter for my eye. It was his expression of a deliberate purpose. Mr. Harry D. Train, the author of that letter, never wrote it spasmodically or without consultation with his fellows. And now, let me warn some of you country-road advocates, look out! There will be somebody in your district, too. You may not be fortunate enough to get hold of a letter, but all of you "knights of the dirt roads" who attempt to go against the edict of this association, look out! [Applause.] Who leads their forces here in this Capital, where they have established headquarters in order to influence the action of Congress? Not Mulhall. He was discredited long ago. They must get another leader if they would be effective here.

With 451 subordinate associations from whom they are collecting funds, they must every year get hundreds of thousands of dollars, which they are expending in pushing their scheme for national highways. I have never heard of their spending a dollar on a road, but they spend all they collect.

Now, there are a number of other road associations. This is the joy riders' concern. They want to try out the automobiles from New York to San Francisco in order to see which one can win the race. They want a road that is adapted to their purposes, and they want the farmer down on the muddy roads in my district and yours to pay the expenses of this peacock lane over which these peacocks shall strut in luxurious automobiles. [Applause.]

Now, I take up another road association. I do not know its methods. I have not any letters that I can use against it like the one which I have just read, but I am going to call attention to its fundamental organization. I speak now of the National Highways Association. That association is fairly well organized, like this "Three A" association. They have different grades of members—some who are high up and some who are high privates in the rear ranks, with no duty to perform except to pay their dues and do the bidding of those above them.

Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of calling the attention of the Members of this House to the different varieties of membership in that association, and let each one of them look at his own pocketbook and determine to what class of these memberships he will belong. The founder members make a payment of $25,000 each. Those founder members are limited in number to 53, each one of whom puts in $25,000. Fifty-three times $25,000 I have not time now to calculate. Take it home with you, sleep with it, and figure it out yourself. Next, they have a national member. The national member pays $10,000. Next comes the collective member. He pays $2,500 for his membership. And next comes the life member. He pays $1,000 for his membership. Then comes the sustaining member. We are getting down now, Mr. Speaker, into the pond where the suckers swim. [Laughter.] A sustaining member pays $100. Then what? They take his $100 in order to put across national roads in this House and in the Senate, against the wishes of the people that these Members here are sent to represent.

Then, coming on down to smaller suckers, they have contributing members, who pay $10 each, and then they have assisting members, who pay $5 apiece. Lastly, in order that no man, however humble, shall be permitted to escape this dragnet for funds relied upon to prosecute this propaganda for the rich and special interests, they have a subscribing membership for a dollar apiece. And then, in order to get the other fellow who has a little vanity in him, they have what they call an "associate membership," who gets down to 50 cents apiece. [Laughter.] They have spread this net out all over this country, taking in every man, from the fellow willing to pay $25,000 for a founder's membership down to the man who pays 50 cents in order that he may wear upon the lapel of his coat the badge of an apostleship in the peacock-lane propaganda. [Laughter.]

I have not the time to go through all of this, but this National Highway Association to which I have referred has its ramifications throughout the country. That brings me to my own State. There is the Old Trails Association, hibernating up in the district of my brother, the gentleman from Kansas City [Mr. BORLAND]. [Laughter.] It is powerful. If it lived in my district I would be afraid of it. [Renewed laughter.] The head of that institution is one J. M. Lowe.

Now let us get down to him—this Old Trails man. What does he do? When he needs money to carry on his editorial canning factory he takes a United States map and a piece of red chalk and marks an old-trails highway across some State and then goes to the people in the towns along that line and collects dues. His association is a branch of the same association whose organization I read to you a while ago.

I see where he went down into the district of my good friend the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO]. He went into Fort Smith. He was getting hard pressed because this bill had passed the House. He wants to defeat it in the Senate. He wants to bring up public sentiment enough to scare the Senators, so that they will run away from it and avoid being personally attacked as "pork-barrel statesmen." In order to accomplish that he must have more money. He went down into my brother WINGO's district, as I say, and marked off a red line on the map and extended it through a number of those towns, among others Fort Smith. He called the credulous of Fort Smith together [laughter] to organize an old trails association. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no complaint against my friend BORLAND who introduced the bill, whose caption I now read:

A bill to provide a national ocean-to-ocean highway over the pioneer trails of the Nation, thus making a continuous trunk-line macadam road from the site of Jamestown, Va., and from the City of New York, N. Y., to the city of Washington, D. C.; thence by way of St. Louis, Mo., to Gardner, Kans., and there to branch, one branch leading through Santa Fe, N. Mex., the other branch from Gardner, Kans., through Kearney, Nebr., to Olympia, Wash.; also to aid the States through which the highway herein described as the national old trails road shall run in extending, constructing, rebuilding, and repairing same.

That is the bill that Judge Lowe wants. Mr. BORLAND introduced it. Judge Lowe is seeking to build a peacock lane that is going to put out of commission the transcontinental railroads that go between New York and San Francisco, if you believe what he will tell you. [Laughter.] Here is a letter published in multiform, sent to every newspaper throughout the country, from Washington to San Francisco:

THE NATIONAL OLD TRAILS ASSOCIATION,
Kansas City, Mo., February 14, 1914.

Mr. ———, ———, Mo.

MY DEAR MR. ———: I am sending you herewith extracts from the Kansas City Journal (Republican), the Kansas City Star (Progressive), and the Independence (Mo.) Examiner (Democratic), along with the National Highways Association Bulletin, as ideas upon which to base an editorial expression of your own, if you have the time and space.

The National Old Trails Association needs your support at once in the fight, which is to benefit your community, on the floor of the United States Senate. It is needless to add that we beg of you your best effort, for it will be read in the Senate, together with the name of your paper and your own name and politics. What you say now will do more than the rantings of any legislator at Washington to hasten the day when your city will be linked with a rock road to the rest of the United States.

Can you send us a copy of your paper, accompanied by a short personal letter stating your desires in the good-roads movement, your politics, and a little data concerning your public service in your community, length of residence there, etc.? Tell us whether or not you, together with the citizens of your city, would be glad to be a link in the national-highway chain.

Hoping that this is not asking too much, I remain,
Yours, truly,
J. M. LOWE.

The newspapers out in my country, like the Congressmen, are not rich. They have nothing to sell but their space. [Laughter.] If this old trails hero is asking all of these newspapers to put up free hundreds of square feet of space in order to push his propaganda, then all I have got to say for him is that he is a little stingy in his disposition. He has got the money. Why does he not pay these people for the space he uses, if he does not.

Mr. Speaker, I make this final appeal: In passing that bill we were legislating in behalf of the entire country. It was called a "pork-barrel bill." Why? Because everybody had a piece of pork in the barrel, I suppose. It is subject to that criticism. There is not a man, woman, or child in the United States who would not be benefited by the enactment of that law. Civilization would perish if it were not for ways of travel. Civilization can only grow by having ways of travel. Civilization should exist along every roadway and every lane in this country, and not be confined to the few chains of peacock lanes that these people have in mind. There are a million miles of post roads in this country over which the mail is being carried. Why is the mail carried there? Because people live there. It would take $45,000,000,000 to make all of the roads in this country up to the standard of a peacock lane.

Mr. Speaker, nine-tenths of all the commerce of this country is hauled to market over dirt roads. Nine-tenths of all the rural mail is carried over dirt roads. This must continue for a great many decades. The man who raises his hand against improving and keeping up our dirt roads disregards the welfare of the people in whose midst he lives. What we want to do is to reduce the expense of our farmer in getting his stuff from his farm to the table of the man who eats it, and that the consumer may get it at lower cost. These newspapers, coming from these large cities, cry out about pork barrels. When we dropped $14,000,000 into the harbors of the State of New York in one year, paid in part by the farmers of my district, they said not a word about a pork barrel. You have said to the American farmer, "You must compete with the farmer of every other country for the markets of your own land. And, Mr. Missouri Farmer, not only must you do that, but you must pay a tax to dig deep and wide the harbors on our coasts, so that Canada and Mexico and Argentina can bring their farm products to our shores with more facility to capture the markets of your country. After you, Mr. Missouri Farmer, have paid your share of the taxes that give these increased facilities to the foreigner who competes with you for the markets of your own country, then the Federal Government is going to leave you alone in peace, in the mud where you now are, to stay in the mud or dig out for yourselves, as may seem best to you." That is what these people want you to say. They are trying to bluff the Senate. Not only that, but they are trying another scheme that is impossible. They pretend that they have advance information that the President will veto this legislation if it is passed. I am chairman of one of the committees of this House, the committee that reported this bill; and I know that if our President entertained any such notions as that he would have made it known to me before he did to proprietors of the editorial canning factory to which I have referred. Our President is not built that way. He was elected upon the Baltimore platform. The Baltimore platform carried a declaration which was but a repetition of what had been before carried in our national platform adopted at Denver. I quote it:

We favor Federal aid to the States and to local authorities in the construction and maintenance of post roads.

Why was that put in the platform? There is a Republican politician in my district whom I have heard speak. When he was called to book because he had not lived up to the platform of his party, he replied to the questioner in the audience, "You darn fool, sit down. Don't you know that a platform is not made to ride on; it is made to get in on?"

Mr. Speaker, the splendid President whom we have elected to carry out the policies for which his party stands is not built on that principle. He does not believe that the platform was made simply to get in on, but that it was an expression of Democratic thought; and as a great leader, one of the greatest this country has ever seen, we may confidently rely upon him to lead on to victory in behalf of the people for whom I am now speaking. [Applause.]

The farmer of this country is not receiving more than his share of the good things that come from legislation. Building up the roads is not for the farmer alone. If you look into the rural mail box, what would you find? Nine-tenths of the letters that have gone into it are from city men who want to sell goods to the farmer. If you waylaid the carrier as he took the outgoing mail from the box, you would find that nine-tenths was correspondence of the farmers to city men. Now, Mr. Speaker, the big cities of this country are as much interested in the system of good roads among the farmers as are the farmers.

You are holding congresses of college professors and bank presidents to determine what shall be done to keep the boys and girls from leaving the farm. I will tell you how to do it—make farm life tolerable; treat the farmer as though he was an American citizen. [Applause.]

But over and above all that—I may be wrong, God only knows, for it is human to err—this peacock boulevard provided for in Brother BORLAND'S bill may be the best; it may be that it is what we ought to have; it may be that the struggling masses of this country from Texas to Canada should be taxed to make the old trail road through my district and Brother BORLAND'S. That may be; but if it is right, then put it through on its merits; let these big road associations get out of the field; let Congress legislate with freedom; let Judge Lowe stop his canning factory of sinister editorials; let the representatives of the American people legislate upon the merits of the proposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I regret that circumstances have called for just such a speech as I have made. This ought to have been said in behalf of every Member who voted for the bill. It is an outrage that the public press should hold up to the public as grafters every man who votes against special legislation that a lot of these special interests want to put across. Somebody ought to have said it, and I have said it.

Will Harry Train get my scalp for this? What if he does? Many soldiers have died on the battlefield before. [Loud Applause.]

ROCK ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to address the House for half a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I desire to announce that during the consideration of the military bill in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, after the introductory speech, I will address the House with reference to the Rock Island Railway with respect to holding companies and their effect on the public service.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13612) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Commissioners of conciliation: To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor, and to appoint commissioners of conciliation at not exceeding $10 per day while actually employed in any case of labor dispute, and for their traveling expenses and subsistence while so employed, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 3, strike out the figures "5,000" and insert the figures "20,000."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of urgency. The Labor Department has now been crippled for lack of funds to select efficient commissioners for conciliatory purposes. It is probable that if in the extra session of the Sixty-third Congress the Appropriations Committee had not ignored the request of the Secretary of Labor, so that he might have had money to efficiently carry out the efforts of the department, it would not have been necessary for this Congress to go to the expense of appropriating $50,000, it may be, in investigating the coal strikes and the miners' strikes in Colorado and Michigan.

It is, to my mind, Mr. Chairman, especially important that the department should receive this $40,000, because at this time of year, especially in the building industry in the country, there are many industrial troubles threatening, and if the Secretary of Labor had sufficient funds to enable him to select men among the citizenship and pay them for their work and expenses a great many industrial troubles may be averted.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am seeking information. What amount was carried for this item in the last appropriation bill, and how much of it used?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I am not prepared to answer that question. I do not think there was anything carried.

Mr. GOULDEN. No amount set aside for the purpose?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can answer. I think from the fact that the department was a new one they were sort of feeling their way and were modest in asking for funds to operate with. Therefore they did not think of or did not ask for the amount of money that would make this department efficient. I am not aware whether they did or not.

Mr. GOULDEN. From what funds or where did they obtain money to carry on what they have done during the current year?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. What they have done is they have taken officers out of the department that were placed there for other purposes. I believe in the Colorado case Mr. Stewart was sent there, and also to Indianapolis, and I have in mind now one or two places where they are sending the immigration inspectors to undertake to do the work of conciliation, with the result of probable embarrassment to that work.

Mr. GOULDEN. Would it not tend to cripple the department in its work to take men away from their regular duties?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes; I think so. It has resulted in the work being behind in the other departments. There are other amendments that I intend to offer to cover that very thing.

Mr. GOULDEN. There must have been some value in the work done by these commissioners or the Committee on Appropriations would not now be asking for $5,000 as a deficiency. I am in favor of the amendment and will vote for it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. They have asked for $20,000 and the committee has allowed them $5,000; and in the hearings, if the gentleman wishes to refer to them, he will see that there are statements in regard to what has been done. I will also state that that can be found in the report of the Secretary of Labor. The gentleman will see that able work has been done under the trying conditions they have been working under; that in spite of the work they have not been properly equipped, yet a wonderful amount of good has been done in preventing and settling industrial disputes. I think the committee itself ought not to object to this appropriation. It seems to me that it ought to realize the importance of the work. It seems to me also that our acquaintance and the acquaintance of this committee with the Secretary of Labor should assure us and the committee that if this money is not needed to do this work he would not ask it, and it would also assure them that it would result in a great many benefits to the industries and the workingmen in them in the way of settling and preventing industrial disputes. They must know that he would not unnecessarily spend any money, and it seems to me no one should have any objection to an appropriation of this kind.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in behalf of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN]. It appears from the hearings on the urgent deficiency bill, at page 374, when the Secretary of Labor was before the committee, that if $20,000 were provided in the bill, outside men who were competent and qualified and perfectly familiar with information at hand would be able to make a thorough investigation, and that possibly the Colorado strike, as well as the Calumet strike, would have been thoroughly investigated and good results obtained, and the sending of the committees of the House to each place might have been prevented. The statement of the Secretary filed before the committee upon this appropriation is so clear that I am going to ask unanimous consent to insert it in my remarks. I trust the amendment will be agreed to. We all know the Secretary. Many of us were acquainted with him and worked with him, and we know his earnestness and ability and the effort that he has made in these matters, and the little money expended has certainly been worth while. We ought to give such a splendid man, whose heart is in the right place, who is working in the right cause, an opportunity to get results, because I am satisfied he can and will obtain proper results.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks the statement of Secretary of Labor Wilson. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMISSIONERS OF CONCILIATION.

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is for commissioners of conciliation. "To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor and to appoint commissioners of conciliation in labor disputes, whose appointments shall be made without reference to the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883, and for their compensation, traveling expenses, and per diem in lieu of subsistence, $20,000."

Secretary WILSON. In connection with this estimate, I desire to state that we had an appropriation of $5,000 for the current fiscal year. That is limited to expenses only. It can be utilized only for the payment of expenses. If that limitation continues, there will be no need for this additional appropriation we are asking for.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not understand what you mean.

Secretary WILSON. Under the existing appropriation we can utilize it only for the payment of expenses of conciliators.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is not that the law? As I understand, this appropriation of $5,000 was granted in the language of the law.

Secretary WILSON. The law provides for the appointment of conciliators in trade disputes by the Secretary whenever, in his judgment, it is necessary or advisable to do so. Authority has been given to pay the expenses of these conciliators, but no authority has been given to meet the compensation of conciliators. We have been placed in the position of detailing men from the different bureaus of the department to handle this class of work; and, if we are to continue with that limitation, then the $5,000 that has been provided will be sufficient to carry us through the current fiscal year. We believe, however, that that limitation should be removed and that the Secretary should have authority to select from outside of the service men who can be utilized for the purpose of adjusting trade disputes; and, if that authority is given to us, then we can utilize to very good advantage the $20,000 we are asking for here.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Secretary, how many occasions have arisen during the past year during which it might have been possible to have had conciliators appointed in cases coming to the department?

Secretary WILSON. There have been a number where we could have utilized men from the outside to very great advantage. For instance, in the Colorado coal-mine strike, if we had been able to select a coal operator—a man like Howell Davies, of Kentucky, the president of the coal operators' association, who, by virtue of his position, naturally has the confidence of the coal operators—and have sent him, in conjunction with the representative of the department, there would have been greater likelihood of our securing an adjustment of the difficulty than by simply sending a representative of the department who had no such standing in the estimation of the employers. The same was true with regard to the Calumet strike. If we had been able to select a prominent employer of labor and sent him out there in conjunction with a representative of the department, our chance of success in bringing about an adjustment of the difficulty would have been greater than by simply sending a representative of the department who, no matter what his qualications might be, did not have that standing in the public eye or in that of the employers that would be convincing in his approach of the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any suggestion to make as to how much such men should be paid?

Secretary WILSON. I do not think it is necessary that the compensation should be extremely high. In my estimation, $10 per day would be a maximum in cases of that kind; but there is a hesitancy on my part, and I presume other men in the same position would have some hesitancy, in asking these men to undertake this class of work at least without being in a position to offer them compensation. They might not accept it; they might be willing to go into the work without the compensation; but to approach them and to ask them to go into this work without being in a position to offer them compensation is, to me at least, an embarrassing situation.

As to the situation at the present time, we might be able to be of great service if we were in a position to go outside the personnel of the department and select some one to undertake an adjustment of the difficulty. For over two years there has been a strike of the shopmen on the Harriman lines, the Illinois Central, and nearly all of the southwestern lines. That strike is still going on.

The CHAIRMAN. That is being handled, is it not? Is not that a case where the commissioner of arbitration and mediation comes in?

Secretary WILSON. No. They deal only with those who are engaged in transportation. We have dealt with shopmen. We adjusted, for instance, the dispute between the shopmen on the Baltimore & Ohio system, and on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern system, and the employers. We adjusted the dispute of the shopmen on the Chicago & Alton system. We adjusted the dispute of the clerks on the New York, New Haven & Hartford system. We are now working upon a dispute of the clerks on the Pere Marquette system. Those are all in connection with railroad systems, but they are not in the transportation portion.

The CHAIRMAN. They are not considered as coming within that jurisdiction?

Secretary WILSON. They are not considered as coming within the jurisdiction of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation.

As I was proceeding to say, in this case after this strike has gone on somewhere about two years it has reached a stage where, if we could bring into the negotiations some one of prominence, some one who would have from the beginning the respect and confidence of both the employers and employees, we might bring about an adjustment of the matter. It is still dragging out. The employers, these railway systems, do not feel like making a concession, and the employees do not feel like making a concession, because if they make a concession the other side may take it for granted that they are defeated and undertake to impose still worse conditions. If we had a man of standing who had the confidence of both sides to step in about that stage, at the present time, there is a possibility that we might adjust that difficulty. There have been a number of other instances.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the purpose to appoint these commissioners as each dispute arises, or is it the purpose to appoint men in fact permanently as commissioners?

Secretary WILSON. I have in mind this, that we ought to have here a sufficient clerical force to handle the details of the work and then handle each dispute as it comes up with temporary appointments. There are instances where one man might be available for adjusting the dispute, and when another instance arises that man would not be available for adjusting the dispute. Now, I have in mind the creation of a division here with sufficient clerks to handle the details of the work and the selection of the conciliators for the handling of each particular dispute as it arises. In the $20,000 we are asking for here there is no provision for the establishment of such a division, however. There is in the estimates we have submitted for the next fiscal year.

Mr. BARTLETT. You speak of a strike among the shopmen and the railroads in which you thought you could have been of service. Do you not think that such a strike, if it interfered with the companies engaged in transportation, would come within the jurisdiction of the act of July 15, 1913, known as the mediation, conciliation, and arbitration act?

Secretary WILSON. No, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let us see if it does not. It says:

"That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers and their officers, agents, and employees, except masters of vessels and seamen, as defined in section 4612, Revised Statutes of the United States, engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, for a continuous carriage, etc.

"That whenever a controversy concerning wages, hours of labor, or conditions of employment shall arise between an employer or employers and employees subject to this act interrupting or threatening to interrupt the business of said employer or employers to the serious detriment of the public interest, either party to such controversy may apply to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation created by this act and invoke its services for the purpose of bringing about an amicable adjustment of the controversy."

Now, would not a serious strike in a shop of a railroad engaged in interstate commerce, which shop and which employees are engaged in repairing and keeping in repair cars and engines engaged in this business, come within the provisions of this act?

Secretary WILSON. That is the exact language of the Erdman Act under which they have been operating for a number of years and the interpretation which they have placed upon it (not us, but which the Board of Mediation has placed upon that act), is that it deals only with those who are actually engaged in transportation.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the Supreme Court of the United States, in construing the employers' liability act, decided that a man engaged in a shop and a man engaged in building a bridge came within the purview of that act, he being an employee of the personnel engaged in interstate commerce.

Secretary WILSON. That may have been the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is the decision of the Supreme Court.

Secretary WILSON. That may have been the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BARTLETT. I myself think it is wrong and that it is going very far, but they decided it all the same. It seems to me under the decision of the court construing what an employee of a company engaged in interstate commerce is, that those people would come within the purview of the act, because their service, while they may not run the engines, while they may not actually be engaged in transporting or carrying the machinery of interstate commerce from one State to another, their services are as essential almost to the transportation business as the man who runs the train. Is not that true?

Secretary WILSON. Yes, sir; their service is just as essential. That may have been the decision of the Supreme Court in the particular case which came before it, but in the handling of this work the board that handles it has itself determined that it has no jurisdiction in the case of shopmen. It declines to take jurisdiction in the case of clerks. It takes jurisdiction in the case of switchmen, conductors, engineers, firemen, and trainmen, but it declines to take jurisdiction of clerks and shopmen and other men who are not directly engaged in transportation.

There is nothing obligatory upon the department to interfere in any of these trade disputes. When the department interferes at all at the request of either side or both sides to a controversy, it interferes solely for the purpose of offering its good offices. It does not undertake to impose its own suggestions upon either of the contending parties. It simply offers its good offices for the purpose of bringing about an adjustment, if it possibly can.

Mr. BARTLETT. Even section 8, which you referred to, does not limit the power of the Secretary of Labor to engage in conciliation.

Secretary WILSON. That is true; we are not confined to interstate commerce, nor are we restricted to any particular line of industry. We may go in after having been invited by either of the parties.

Mr. BARTLETT. You do not have to be invited?

Secretary WILSON. No; not necessarily. We may go in after being invited or without being invited. The purpose, as I understand it, of giving that authority to the Secretary is this: That there might arise a condition where a trade dispute would be so great that it would affect a large portion of our people, and yet the bitterness on the part of both the employer and employees would be so great in their contest that they would not want the good offices of the department or the good offices of anyone, and in a controversy of that kind the Secretary would have the authority to step in and offer his good offices and endeavor to find a common basis upon which the dispute might be adjusted. The board of mediation not assuming jurisdiction in those cases and that jurisdiction being given to us, we have handled those cases, and we have handled those cases which we have gone into successfully, we believe, to the advantage of both the employer and employee and the public at large. We believe that we should be authorized to select not only from the personnel of the different bureaus of the department or the department itself, but from any of our citizenship the necessary parties to bring about an adjustment of a trade dispute if we can find them.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Secretary, may I cite a concrete case there?

Secretary WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. In the case of the Colorado coal strike the Secretary of Labor sent me out there, I being in the Bureau of Labor Statistics, to effect a settlement. Our first conference with the operators was before Gov. Ammons. The operators took the position that no coal operators could operate their mines under an agreement with the United Mine Workers. I cited a number of cases, particularly in my own State, where the mines had been operated since 1897. The operators replied that the coal operators of Illinois were on the verge of ruin and were simply waiting for a chance to get out from under that agreement; that they were simply biding their time to get into and fight and smash the union. I said that I had very different information from that, and, of course, there simply came a clash of opinions as to the attitude of the Illinois operators. I had to admit that I had not been in Illinois or in touch with the situation in that State for three our four years. They replied that I ought to get on earth; that I ought to be up to date, etc. On my way back I stopped in Illinois and called upon Mr. Taylor, the man who had been president for years of the association there, and I asked him about the situation, and he said that it was not true that the Illinois coal operators were trying to get away from their contract or trying to smash the union or wanted to, and he said to me: "If you had wired me, I would have come to Denver on the first train and have placed the Illinois situation squarely and fairly before the governor up to date."

The CHAIRMAN. What was he the president of?

Mr. STEWART. He was the president until last year of the Illinois Coal Operators' Association. He is now president of the National Association of Coal Operators' Associations; in other words, a grouping of all the State coal operators' associations into a national association. I knew Mr. Taylor very well, but I did not have the nerve to ask a man who had no authority to pay to even telegraph me a reply to that question.

The CHAIRMAN. Have there been any other disputes in which the department was requested to intervene?

Secretary WILSON. Yes, sir; a number of them, which are cited in the annual report of the department. I mentioned that we intervened in the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad clerks' pay dispute at the request of the clerks. That we adjusted. Mr. G. W. Hauger, who was at that time chief clerk in the Bureau of Labor Statistics, handled the cast on the part of the department. He is now the assistant commissioner in the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation. We settled a dispute of the Erie forge employees at the request of both parties. We brought a dispute of the car workers of the Reading Railroad to the point of adjustment and secured what was accepted by both parties as an adjustment, but which afterwards fell through as a result of misunderstanding. We brought about an adjustment of a dispute of the Reading Hardware Co. with its employees. We entered it at the request of the employees. We brought about an adjustment of a dispute of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad shopmen.

That dispute was within three days of a strike stage when we engaged in it, and we brought it to a satisfactory adjustment, an adjustment satisfactory to both parties. We adjusted satisfactorily a trade dispute of the shopmen of the Western Maryland Railroad, which had about reached the strike stage. I have already mentioned the adjustment of the Chicago & Alton Railroad shopmen's trade dispute. We assisted in securing an adjustment of the strike of the street car men at Indianapolis, and also of the teamsters' strike at Indianapolis. We have had a number of instances in which mediation was requested on the part of the employees and rejected on the part of the employers, in which the good offices of the department were of no avail. We have pending a number of negotiations. We attempted mediation in the Colorado coal strike situation, but did not succeed in adjusting the dispute. We also attempted mediation in the Calumet copper strike situation, but failed to adjust the dispute. In both of those instances the request for mediation came from the employees. As I have said, we have a number of cases pending at the present time which we are endeavoring to bring to a satisfactory adjustment.

Mr. BARTLETT. How much would it take to organize a clerical force in Washington in order to be ready when the occasion arises?

Secretary WILSON. That is not included in these estimates, because we do not contemplate organizing that division from this deficiency, but as I have it in mind, a chief clerk of that work—I do not care anything about the title—at $3,000, an assistant chief clerk at $1,800, as I recall the figures, one at $1,400, and one at $1,200. I believe they would be sufficient to handle the details of the work here in Washington.

Mr. BARTLETT. This $20,000 is to pay for the men actively engaged in the work of conciliation, the commissioners?

Secretary WILSON. Yes, sir; the commissioners of conciliation. We can utilize it to very good advantage if we are permitted to use it for the temporary employment of conciliators, going out of the department to secure the conciliators. If, however, we are tied down to the use of that appropriation solely for the meeting of expenses and consequently have to detail men from the bureaus and the department to handle the work, it will not be necessary to give us the $20,000. If you untie our hands so we can utilize the appropriation for the selection of men anywhere that we can find them who can accomplish the purpose in view, then we should have the $20,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Have you an appointment clerk now?

Secretary WILSON. We have an $1,800 clerk who is doing the appointment work at the present time, who is designated as our appointment clerk. We have him under the current appropriation and we are asking for a continuance of that position in the legislative bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. $1,800; is that the salary originally asked for?

Secretary WILSON. We asked for a clerk at $1,800. In organizing the department we felt that we should go slow and not create any more positions than were absolutely necessary for the handling of the work of the department. So we combined the divisions of publications and supplies, which had been two separate divisions in the department from which we came, and then we put our appointment clerk under the jurisdiction of the chief clerk instead of creating a separate division of appointments, and we have an $1,800 clerk handling that work now. That is what we asked for originally, as I recall it.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] to be a good one. In the Sixty-second Congress we created a Department of Labor, and among the duties imposed upon the Department of Labor was the conciliation of and mediation in labor disputes, and the amendment is to give a sufficient amount of money to the Department of Labor to meet a deficiency and to take up this work as it should properly be taken up by that particular department. The United States Conciliation and Mediation Board have been allowed $40.000 in this urgent deficiency bill. Their duties are to take up disputes among the railroad men—the transportation workers of the country. We have a big Department of Labor here that takes up general cases of labor disputes and tries to conciliate and mediate between the employer and the employee. They were allowed $5,000 to carry on that work, but they were restricted in the carrying on of the work, because the money was to be used only for the expenses of those employed in connection with the department. It did not give them the opportunity the Secretary would have liked when the question in Calumet and the question in Colorado came up. He had in mind sending to Colorado to take up with the coal operators there Mr. Davis, of Kentucky, a coal operator, whom he thought would have sufficient influence with the coal operators in Colorado to get them to agree to a meeting with their men, with a view of conciliation and settlement of that dispute. On account of restrictions placed upon that $5,000 appropriation the Secretary of Labor was prohibited from going outside of his department and paying anybody not on the pay roll any portion of the money.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is incorrect in that statement. There is nothing to prohibit him from going outside of the department.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. That $5,000 was for expenses. I do not believe I am incorrect, and I have the word of the Secretary of Labor himself.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman define what expenses means?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Traveling expenses and hotel expenses.

Mr. MADDEN. Would not that be the only thing that he would have to expend?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I will say this. We will take those two big situations, the Calumet and the Colorado strikes: If a man was to be paid for services and paid for expenses incurred in conciliation and mediation, $5,000 would not be sufficient money for carrying on the work of that department. The Department of Labor has taken up and settled the disputes of the Indianapolis street car men, the case of the Erie Forge Co., the case of the Baltimore & Ohio shopmen, the case of the Chicago & Alton shopmen, and the New York, New Haven & Hartford clerks, and a number of other instances in this country where they have offered their services, and they have had $5.000 to pay all of the expenses of that conciliation and mediation.

Now, I think this is very important work. If it is important that the commissioners appointed under the terms of the Erdman Act and the Newlands amendment to that act are to receive a big appropriation like $40,000 in this urgent deficiency bill, if their work is important, I think it is important that the general strikes throughout the country that are not concerned with the transportation workers on public utilities ought to receive more attention. I think that they might have stopped the strike in Colorado and possibly stopped the strike in Calumet.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Just let me get through with this sentence. And if the department could have stopped one of those strikes, we would not have had to appoint the special committees which are now sitting in Colorado and Michigan investigating the strikes in those States; the two investigations are going to eat up thousands and thousands of dollars. If I read the papers correctly, they have taken already in Colorado almost 10,000 pages of typewritten testimony, and that investigation is going to cost the Nation some money. I think it is a good and wise policy to give this department a sufficient amount of money so it can step in and mediate and conciliate in these labor disputes. Now, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. What are the labor departments in the various States for except to deal with the question which the gentleman is trying to get power delegated to the Secretary of Labor to do?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. If that was the intention of Congress when they created the Department of Labor, we ought to have taken it out of the hands of the Secretary of Labor when we legislated creating that department, and divorced it from the Department of Commerce.

Mr. MADDEN. Every State has its department of labor.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Every State has its department of labor, but it is not possible to get the various State departments to act.

Mr. MADDEN. It is purely a State matter, and why not leave it to the States?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. It is not a State matter in Colorado. These companies are engaged in interstate commerce; so are the Calumet copper companies. It was within the province of the Secretary of Labor to settle the Erie Forge trouble in Erie, Pa. The State of Pennsylvania did not do it, but he stepped in and settled it. He settled the Baltimore & Ohio shop strike which had been going on for several years, and it is his intention to try to settle the Harriman strikes going on over two years, and if he had the money he would go ahead——

Mr. MADDEN. That may be true in interstate matters, but in many of the cases referred to by the gentleman they are strictly State matters.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I am referring to the Erie Forge Co., where several hundred men were involved.

Mr. MADDEN. That was a State matter and it was the duty of the State to settle that, and they could do it.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. If the Department of Labor can settle these strikes in interstate matters and in purely State matters, I think it is good policy for them to do it throughout the country. That is what that department is created for. A few dollars more or less will not make much difference to this National Legislature. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that $20,000 is a small amount of money, considering the great importance that might accrue from its expenditure along this line by the Secretary of Labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word on this. When the deficiency bill was before the House in August last an amendment was offered increasing the amount of this appropriation from $5,000 to $25,000 and voted for by this side of the House. A motion was made to recommit the bill by the gentleman from Wyoming, including that proposition to increase the amount of this appropriation from $5,000 to $25,000, and all the Members on this side who were here voted for the proposition and all the Democrats voted against it. I am glad that my colleague, after additional experience, has offered this amendment, although he voted against the proposition which we made in August last.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield? I know the gentleman does not want to make an erroneous statement.

Mr. MANN. I am not making one.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman mean I voted against it?

Mr. MANN. I mean that the gentleman voted against it on a roll call.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I just looked at the roll call and I am not mistaken. [Laughter.] The gentleman had better look at it, and all the other gentlemen on that side of the House voted against it, and now I am very glad indeed that the gentleman, my colleague, offers the amendment, because I think that the amount ought to be increased. I think that the Department of Labor ought to have this money; they ought to have had the money last August, when we wanted to give it to them, so they could endeavor to prevent and settle these strikes.

Possibly there would have been no strike at Calumet or in Colorado if the Democrats of the House had had confidence enough in their own Secretary of Labor to have given the money for this purpose. We tried to get it. Now, I hope that enough gentlemen on that side of the House will support the amendment, so that at this belated hour we can give them some additional money for the balance of this fiscal year. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants to appropriate all the money that can possibly be appropriated at this session of Congress. That seems to be the last desperate resort of the Republican Party for the coming campaign, and therefore they are very anxious to have the appropriations made by this House just as large as they can possibly be made. Under the organic act creating the Department of Labor the Secretary of Labor was empowered to act as a mediator in certain labor disputes, and, when in his judgment it was desirable to do it, to appoint conciliators in such disputes. At the last session of Congress he requested an appropriation of $50,000 to enable him to perform the functions imposed upon him by that law. He can not delegate his power to act as a mediator to anyone. After the mediation has reached a certain point, where it is possible to have conciliators appointed to adjust differences, he can then appoint conciliators. They can do nothing until the time is reached when there is opportunity to adjust the differences. Fifty thousand dollars was requested, and the statement was made that it was desired to create in the Department of Labor a division of mediation and conciliation, with a chief and an assistant chief and certain other officials. The attention of the Secretary was called to the fact that there was no authority to create such a division and that he could not expend any of the money requested for the purpose that he had indicated.

The question was also argued whether it had been in the contemplation of the Congress when the organic act was passed that the persons selected as conciliators should be such men as should be taking these temporary assignments in an effort to adjust these labor disputes merely for the compensation involved or whether it had not been the purpose of Congress to provide for the selection, through the Secretary of Labor, of men of such standing in the community that they would have the confidence of both sides of these controversies and who would gladly volunteer their services, provided their expenses were paid.

And so Congress made an appropriation of $5,000, limited to the payment of expenses of conciliators in labor disputes. It was at the beginning of this work, and a desire was expressed to have the department ascertain just what the probabilities would be of necessity for such an appropriation and in just what respects it could be useful. It was recognized, Mr. Chairman, that in conferring this power upon the Secretary of Labor an advanced step had been taken, and unless it was exercised at the outset with the utmost care, instead of ever proving of any value in the adjustment of labor disputes, and unless progress was made slowly, the inevitable result would be that the whole system would fall into disrepute and the services of such men would be of no value whatever.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In just a moment. Most of the States have commissioners and boards of arbitration, but for one reason or another they have never been of much value in the adjustment of difficulties between employers and employees. The chief reason, from my observation, is that there has been such a lack of confidence on the part of one or the other of the parties that they could not reach an agreement.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Does not the chairman of the committee believe that after pretty near one year's experience by the Secretary of Labor in running that department he ought to be willing——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman let me complete my statement? I will come up to the present situation in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I can say to the gentleman from New York that the reason why the boards of arbitration appointed in various State governments have never had any influence between employer and employee is that they do not represent anything or anybody. They are generally a lot of cheap politicians that nobody will trust—either labor or capital.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that be true, and not ever having had enough experience in that respect to express an opinion, at any rate it was recognized, Mr. Chairman, that great work could not be accomplished by running pell-mell into labor troubles throughout the country, but that the Secretary of Labor, slowly finding his way, could perhaps bring about a situation where those involved in labor controversies might be willing to acquiesce in the result or in any determination made by men appointed by him.

The Secretary of Labor made a further request at this session of Congress for $20,000. He said that unless he was to be authorized to pay persons appointed for their services there was no necessity for additional funds to those already appropriated. If they were to be permitted to pay persons for their services, $20,000, in his opinion, could be utilized. That would mean 18 men permanently employed during the balance of the year under the appropriation he requested.

So far as the Calumet and Colorado situations are concerned, in my opinion, they would have been developed to their present condition whether this appropriation had been made or not. The Secretary of Labor said that had he been in a position to offer compensation he would have requested the gentleman mentioned by the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN], a large coal operator in Kentucky, to go to Colorado in an attempt to adjust the differences there. The inquiry developed that the man was of such a standing in the community that, it seems to me, had he been willing to go at all, the question of actual compensation for his services would not have entered into his decision. The department was in a position to pay his expenses. A representative of the department was sent to Colorado and attempted to bring about an adjustment of the situation there, but neither party could agree upon what the situation was outside of Colorado in the mines, and he could make no progress.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is wise to proceed slowly. So far as the two strikes are concerned, the Industrial Commission was created to investigate such situations. It is in existence. It has three members representing organized labor, three members representing capital, and three other men supposed to represent the people of the country at large. They had ample funds at their disposal. They were specifically charged with the duty of ascertaining the causes of the conflict between capital and labor, and if they had performed the duties devolved on them they would have been in the Colorado and Michigan fields some time ago. If they had been worth anything, perhaps there would have been no necessity for any action by this House.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I would like to ask the gentleman, if it is a fact that the Industrial Commission had neglected their duties, is it a wise proposition to deprive the Department of Labor of the opportunity of accomplishing some good in that direction?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I have not argued that way. The gentleman can not put that argument into my mouth.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. The gentleman will not answer, then?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said that I did not make that argument, and I do not propose that the gentleman shall put that in my mouth.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. You said if the Industrial Commission had performed their duty there would not have been any necessity——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the gentleman's argument, not mine. The gentleman was arguing on certain lines.

The committee believed, Mr. Chairman, that this bill will not become a law before the 1st of March, and——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Wait until I have finished this statement. The committee believed that with $5,000 additional to the money now available, with the authority to compensate conciliators, the Secretary would have an opportunity during the four months that are to elapse to ascertain what could be done; and for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st of July next provision must be made for this service in another bill. I am anxious, if this service can be made valuable, to have it made valuable, but I know from my experience, and I believe other Members of this House know from their experience, that the most delicate and difficult thing to do is to have men engaged in controversies, labor controversies, agree to accept the decisions of men appointed by outside parties.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from New York be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York how long the appropriation made in this bill will be available?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will be available until the 30th of June.

Mr. MADDEN. So that if an appropriation of $20,000 be made, it would have to be all expended before the 1st day of July if it is to be available?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Probably. The appropriation carried in this bill——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman does not mean that it has to be expended. It is only available.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is available.

Mr. MADDEN. It can not be spent after the 1st of July?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it can not.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the question I would like to ask is, Is there an emergency to-day, or is there likely to be an emergency between now and the 1st of July next, that calls for the expenditure of this $20,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe so. There are some situations, some cases, the Secretary of Labor has said, where if he were in a position to compensate men for their services, he would like to act. The committee believes that with $5,000 he would be able to take care of those cases, and next year, which commences on the 1st of July, provision must be made for this service in another appropriation bill. The committee believe that if the work is to be done in this way, it should be done in such a way that confidence will be established in the men appointed by the Secretary of Labor in these matters, so that when he exercises his authority it will result in benefit to those affected. For that reason I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. What is the difference between the conciliators to be appointed under this paragraph and the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, for which provision has already been made?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Commission of Mediation and Conciliation has jurisdiction over men engaged in interstate transportation.

Mr. MOORE. Only?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. That power is limited. Of course the Secretary of Labor can not force himself upon any person, but it was hoped and believed that it might be possible for a member of the Cabinet, the head of a department of this character, if the confidence of those engaged in the controversy were established in him, to bring about in many instances an adjustment of the troubles.

Mr. MOORE. In any other troubles other than railroad troubles?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes. It covers everything except railroad troubles.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. COOPER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to speak to the merits of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], but to reply briefly to some of the criticisms—I think very unjust criticisms—of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] concerning the Commission on Industrial Relations. The gentleman has imputed to that commission neglect of duty, and has asserted that if they had done their duty there would have been no necessity for such boards as the Board of Conciliation nor for efforts under the direction of the Secretary of Labor to bring about settlements of labor disputes.

A few days ago the gentleman from New York himself said that 14 months elapsed after the enactment of the law for the appointment of the commission before the commission was appointed and confirmed. I take that statement to be true, Mr. Chairman. And I recall distinctly that it was in August, 1912—it was about that time—before that bill passed and went to the President. Fourteen months from August, 1912, was October, 1913, before the commission was appointed. Then they had to arrange their personal affairs, come together, get acquainted, study the problems before them, and map out and adopt a working program for their solution. I remember that by the terms of the act itself there must be among the membership of the commission three employers of labor, three representatives of labor, and three others. In other words, three of each, representing as distinctly disagreeing interests as could well be conceived, and all in one commission, to take up some of the most important questions that have confronted the United States of America since the Civil War.

Now, what were they called upon to do? Here is the law. Under it they must—

Inquire into the general condition of labor in the principal industries of the United States, including agriculture, and especially in those which are carried on in corporate forms; into existing relations between employers and employees; into the effect of industrial conditions on public welfare and into the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith; into the conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting the life, limb, and health of the employees; into the growth of associations of employers and of wage earners, and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employees; into the extent and results of methods of collective bargaining; into any methods which have been tried in any State or in foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employees and employers; into methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations; into the scope, methods, and resources of existing bureaus of labor, and into possible ways of increasing their usefulness; into the question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions, and of the methods by which such Asiatics have gained and are gaining such admission, and shall report to Congress as speedily as possible with such recommendation as said commission may think proper to prevent such smuggling and illegal entry. The commission shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation and report its conclusions thereon.

Multifarious duties are imposed upon the commission, duties that in the aggregate make its task one of supreme importance to every man, woman, and child in the Nation. And yet the gentleman alleges that they have neglected their duty. I am personally acquainted with certain members of that commission, and I know of no individuals in all my acquaintance who are of higher moral character nor who have a greater desire to do their whole duty and nothing but their duty under all circumstances, and to impute to them a neglect of duty is a pretty hard criticism, especially when it falls from the lips of a gentleman so prominent in the councils of his party and in the Congress of the United States as is the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. In one moment. If the gentleman has any question, he can ask it just as soon as I have finished this statement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will not try to inject his comments into the auditory organs of listening Members while I am trying to engage their attention it will oblige me very much. [Laughter.] I have talked with one of the members of the commission very recently. He told me that he had rarely been confronted with a duty more difficult than that of assisting in the preparation of a satisfactory program to be followed by the commission. It may well be believed that the views of its various members were not only diverse but in some respects hostile, and that it has taken much time and hard work to devise a program which would enable them to discharge the great burden of duties imposed by this statute with promptness, regularity, and a due regard for scientific thoroughness and accuracy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is criticizing me for saying that the commission neglected its duty. He has just stated that one of the members of that commission has given him certain information. Did the member of the commission with whom the gentleman from Wisconsin spoke tell him that certain appointments had been made by which their pay roll was padded, and that they had to put those people out?

Mr. COOPER. I did not say that, because I knew nothing about it; and I can not believe——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was in the RECORD, and was stated by the chairman of the commission that appointments were made on this pay roll, and when he ascertained what the facts were he dismissed the people because they should not have been appointed. I do not think I am harsh when I say that commission was neglecting its duty.

Mr. COOPER. That does not meet the criticism I made. It is very possible that in the preparation of a force to act under the commission there may have been certain appointments more or less improvident; but I do not understand how the gentleman can impute a neglect of duty from that fact. On the contrary, they did their duty when, finding that the appointments ought not to have been made, they discharged the appointees. It is not necessarily wrong to make a mistake, and for correcting their mistake immediately upon its being ascertained the commission should be complimented, not criticized. The gentleman is hoist by his own petard, so to speak.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER. He is criticizing them for doing exactly what he would have done. He would have done the same thing if he had found out his mistake.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think they would have gotten on in the first place.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to enter into any great length of argument concerning the duties of the industrial commission, because really I believe that the duties which are committed to the hands of that commission ought to be placed with the Department of Labor. This department was organized because of necessity. It represents one of the greatest forces in the world. There is nothing which ought to attract the American people more than the question of labor. Through it all other arts and professions live. Without it they would all die. Being such a mighty force in the world, labor ought to have the greatest consideration. The information which I can obtain leads me to believe that the Department of Labor, which has been established so recently, is handicapped and crippled because of a want of sufficient means to carry out the ends for which it has been established. In fact, Mr. Chairman, the clerical force in that office is not properly provided for, either in funds or in the number of the clerical force. If we handicap this great organization in its office and then handicap it by refusing to appropriate money enough to enable it to investigate the great questions which are arising between capital and labor, we have then tied its hands and destroyed the object for which it was created. Give to this department all the means that are necessary to carry out the ends for which it was established. Do it readily and without stint, because in my opinion, through the efforts of the Department of Labor, a reconciliation will be brought about and a better understanding will be had between labor and capital. In my opinion, money can not be expended in any better way, to settle these disputes, than by properly arming the Department of Labor with all the necessary means and instrumentalities to transact the business of that department.

Mr. Chairman, I am not only in favor of voting for the amendment of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], but I am in favor of extending the appropriation for this department in the future and putting it upon a solid basis of activity, so that it can become a living force in the industrial relations of this country. And if properly armed in that way, I look forward to the time when the Department of Labor will be recognized not only by labor, but by capital, as the great emancipator of labor and a common peacemaker of all disputes between labor and capital. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. LOGUE. I should like five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, Mr. Chairman, make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, it was not the purpose, aim, or intention of the subcommittee that reported this bill to cripple in any way the Department of Labor in the performance of its proper functions and duties; but the Members of the Committee of the Whole will realize that this bill can not possibly become a law until about the first or the middle of April, so at the outside there could not be more than about two and one-half or three months within which this appropriation could be used.

I would like for gentlemen of the committee to understand that the amount of money appropriated in the current law has not yet been exhausted.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman says it is two and a half months. It is three and a half months to the 30th of June.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; but it is not likely that this bill will pass before the first of April. It will be a month or six weeks before it will finally become a law. It will have to go to the Senate and then to conference, be agreed upon, and then voted upon in both Houses before it reaches the President, and, I say, it is likely to be a month or more.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman does not think the Secretary will expend the money if he does not have to?

Mr. KEATING. In case the Secretary does not find an opportunity to spend the money it will be turned back into the Treasury.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, that is not the way to appropriate money. If that were true, you might pass a general appropriation bill that these departments should have the use of all the money which they saw fit and proper to use. It is not right to appropriate money in that way. We ought, and our constituents ought, to demand that we keep an absolute restraint on the expenditures which we are responsible for.

Your subcommittee in reporting the bill took into consideration the fact that the $5,000 has not been exhausted. The Secretary, who is a warm friend of mine, and in whom I have a great deal of confidence, was unable to specify or determine any particular case in which he would need more money. The subcommittee heard the testimony, and in view of the fact that the only thing that can be done except in international matters, which is under the control of the other commission, the Secretary of Labor can only go and, in a friendly way, invite them to permit him, through an agent, to settle the differences.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it fair to give $40,000 to the commission for mediation and conciliation——

Mr. SISSON. Oh, the gentleman is entirely wrong, because the board of mediation covers an entirely different field of labor. The gentleman does not appreciate the situation; he does not know what he is talking about. The purposes of the two are so entirely different. They are endeavoring to bring back to Congress a plan of action which will give the Secretary of Labor——

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. The gentleman misunderstands me; I did not say the industrial commission, I meant the board of conciliation under the Erdman Act.

Mr. SISSON. Well, that is an entirely different proposition. The money that we are giving to the Secretary of Labor is to enable him to go and see the parties or send a man to see the parties who are having the trouble with labor, and see if they can appoint a commission, of which labor may select one and capital the other. Now, in the nature of things, within the next two and a half months the Secretary can not use more than $5,000, with the money that he has from the last appropriation unused.

In answer to the gentleman from Colorado, that the Secretary will not spend the money if he does not need it, why, my friend has not been here long, but he has been here long enough to know that when you give money to a department they will usually find a way to spend it.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, a word or two in connection with this amendment. The section under consideration, providing for $5,000 is appropriated under certain conditions, providing for the appointment of commissioners of conciliation at compensation not exceeding a certain sum per day in time of labor disputes. Therefore the very $5,000 is being appropriated conditionally and only to be used in disputes arising in which the Secretary may deem it right to act. The advantage of the Secretary's acting has been manifested on many occasions. I have had a visit from a member to the city of Philadelphia to have an introduction to gentlemen who, while located in Philadelphia, were interested in the affairs of a western corporation that was involved at that time in labor troubles. The visit of the commissioner did much to settle the existing dispute.

I am advised, and the hearings manifest it, that the Secretary is of the opinion that he should have a larger sum of money at his disposal. According to recent statements made here this bill will not be effective for some time, and there is the thought that it will not be expended. No harm can be done, because it does not take money out of the Treasury; it temporarily assigns it over. No one can say when a labor dispute is going to arise. The Secretary believes that he should be better equipped, and I am firmly of the opinion that he should. I do not know of any better work in which we can be engaged than to equip the Department of Labor so that it can put into active work forces at the time of the commencement of labor troubles and thereby end trouble in the beginning.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOGUE. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want to say for the gentleman's information that the Secretary of Labor did say that there were existing troubles at this time, and that if he had the funds he could bring about an adjustment. He spoke of one on the Marquette Line in Michigan. He referred not only to what might occur but what now existed.

Mr. LOGUE. Carrying out the information given by the gentleman from Illinois, it only shows that it is important to have these funds. It is not for the purpose of looking around for trouble, but handling those troubles that become manifest by active hostilities.

Mr. SHARP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOGUE. Yes.

Mr. SHARP. The gentleman referred to the hearings a moment ago. Did the Secretary of Labor state how much additional funds he wanted?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The amendment that I have offered provides for $20,000, what the Secretary asked for.

Mr. LOGUE. I did not know whether the gentleman's amendment covered the exact figures or not. We have the Secretary's request—a request that is not asking that money be taken out of the Treasury to make an investigation, but only to take the money when it is to be used and actually expended under actual hostile conditions. The gentleman says the bill will not be in force for six weeks from now. Let us all hope it will not be expended at all until the regular appropriations have been made for the department, but in the meanwhile let us be equipped through the Department of Labor so that if labor troubles do come this conciliatory work can be carried on, and take advantage of being able to act at the commencement of trouble and turmoil, so that it can be ended at the commencement.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has suggested that if my congressional knowledge were a little more extensive, I would not want to make appropriations in a loose fashion. Mr. Chairman, we are not endeavoring to make this appropriation in a loose fashion. As a matter of fact, we are throwing all the necessary safeguards about it; and while my congressional experience may be limited, it is sufficient to teach me that neither the gentleman from Mississippi, nor the Secretary of Labor, nor any man on this floor or outside of this building can foresee labor troubles in this country. It has been sufficient to convince me also that we have as Secretary of Labor a man who may be trusted with the expenditure of $20,000 or any other sum of money. It is inconceivable that the gentleman from Mississippi or any other man who served in this House with the present distinguished Secretary of Labor would feel that he would misuse this fund if it were placed at his disposal, and I feel that the vote of this House will in a measure be a vote of confidence in the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Because we decline to give to a department the amount of money that it demands, is it expressing a lack of confidence in the head of the department?

Mr. KEATING. Not at all; that is not the proposition. But this is giving $20,000 for a specific purpose. It is for the purpose of employing conciliators to adjust labor disputes, and the Secretary must expend it for that purpose or he must pad his pay rolls with employees who are not needed, and I submit he will not do that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman just stated that the vote in favor of this amendment would be a vote of confidence in the Secretary of Labor. Does the gentleman think that the 176 Democrats who voted against this proposition in September last were voting a lack of confidence in the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. KEATING. I hope not.

Mr. MANN. I made the same remark then which the gentleman has now made.

Mr. KEATING. I want to say to the gentleman that possibly he will find my name in that list.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman was not here last summer.

Mr. KEATING. He was here a large part of last summer, and he was here some days last summer when I think the gentleman from Illinois was not.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman was not here last summer.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. What date in September would that be?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 53, noes 20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 4, after the word "necessary," insert the following paragraph:

"For additional employees in the office of the Secretary of Labor, as follows: Four clerks of class 4, $2,400; four clerks of class 3, $2,133.33; three clerks of class 2, $1,400; four clerks of class 1, $1,600; two clerks, at $1,000 each, $666.67; one clerk, at $900, $300; one telegrapher, at $900, $300; four assistant messengers, at $720 each, $960; one messenger boy, at $480, $160; one engineer, at $1,200, $400; three skilled laborers, at $840 each, $840; four laborers, at $660 each, $880; one cabinetmaker, at $1,000, $333.33; one chief watchman, at $960, $300; five charwomen, at $240 each, $400; two conductors of elevators, at $720 each, $480; in all, $13,753.33."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the positions enumerated in the amendment are not authorized by law and it is legislation.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to state why this is legislation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is required to show the authority for these positions under the rulings. They are not authorized by law.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I differ with the gentleman. The department ought to be equipped to properly do its work.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I contend the matter is in order. It is for the purpose of the continuation of the work of the Department of Labor, and I do not understand how it is new legislation. The Department of Labor ought to be able to operate as the law intended it should, and it must have sufficient force.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is the gentleman's duty to show that these positions are authorized by law. The statute provides the character and qualification and compensation of employees that may be provided for in appropriation bills, and this amendment contains employees not authorized by law. It is not my duty to show the gentleman how to prepare his amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman seems to think it is his duty to chloroform the Department of Labor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. By not giving a sufficient sum of money.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order. He can not characterize my action in trying to prevent indefensible appropriations, simply because he happens to be interested in particular services.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman is very keen in making points of order, but not so keen in assisting the Department of Labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to hold that this is new legislation and, therefore, subject to the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 4, after the amendment, insert:

"For contingent and miscellaneous expenses for the offices and bureaus of the Department of Labor to be available for the objects named in the appropriation for contingent expense for the Department of Commerce and Labor, contained in the act approved March 4, 1913 (Public, No. 427), and for all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included therein (acts Mar. 4, 1913, vol. 37, p. 736, secs. 1–11; Mar. 4, 1913, vol. 37, p. 738, sec. 1; Oct. 22, 1913, vol. 38, p. 225, sec. 1), $17,950."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, following the appropriation just made for the Department of Labor to operate with any degree of efficiency it is stated here by the chief clerk of the department that it has been necessary for them to borrow typewriters and other material necessary for them to operate the office, and the amount that was requested by the Department of Labor, in my judgment, is a very modest request and should be allowed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation can not be justified. When the Department of Commerce and Labor was divided and the Department of Labor created, Congress passed an act requiring the segregation of the appropriations that had been made for the conduct of the Department of Commerce and Labor between the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor. At the last session of Congress it appeared that out of the appropriation of $60,000 for the contingent expenses of the Department of Commerce and Labor $26,100 was transferred to the Department of Labor. In addition to that, Congress at the last session appropriated $5,000 additional for the contingent expenses of the Department of Labor. At that time a request was made by the Department of Labor to authorize the Secretary of Labor to purchase three automobiles—a seven-passenger touring car for himself, at $4,500; an electric runabout for the use of himself and others, for $2,500; and an automobile truck.

The committee declined to include that authority in the bill, based upon the fact that authority had never been given to any of the departments to purchase automobiles for the Secretary or others connected with the department. In some way or other the information got noised abroad that such a request had been made, and innumerable Members of this House served notice upon the committee that they would not tolerate such a situation. The authority was not given, and yet it appears that during this session of Congress an automobile has been purchased for the personal use of the Secretary of Labor. A construction was placed upon the provision by the comptroller never contemplated by Congress and inconsistent with its action. There is a difference of opinion between those conducting that department and many Members of Congress who have for long years been charged with the responsibility for the determination as to how much should be appropriated for the conduct of the various services, as to how rapidly that department should be built up. A statement was submitted during the last session of Congress requesting additional employees. If this committee had brought in the recommendation made by the department and based its action upon the request given by that department, it would have been laughed off the floor of this House. They had a number of men assigned to the discharge of different duties, and the duties they were to perform were of such a character that it would have been impossible to have kept them busy more than an hour or two a day in the discharge of the work.

Mr. Chairman, in appropriating for this service it makes no difference who is at the head of a department. I have served in this House with three members of the present Cabinet. I have served in other Congresses with Members of the House who afterwards were members of the Cabinet. When a man is in this House and when he is at the head of a department of the Government he is occupying two entirely different positions. Our duty is to conserve expenditures of public money. Whatever is needed to carry on the public service economically and efficiently ought to be appropriated, regardless of the amount that eventually will be carried in the appropriation bills, but not another penny should be appropriated to gratify anybody because of our high opinion of the personal integrity or efficiency of the man at the head of the service. I have a great many personal friends in charge of various services of this Government with whom I am compelled to differ radically. It does not affect me in the discharge of my duty and should not affect Members of this House that because they know men——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). That whatever they ask should be given. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Would it not be fair for the gentleman to state that the Secretary of Labor explained that automobiles would be cheaper in operation and to purchase than it would be to purchase teams and rigs as the other departments had?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose he did; Congress did not authorize it and that is the point. No man in any department of the Government can do as he pleases because he thinks it is desirable. All he can do is to obey the law.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. What I wanted the gentleman to make clear was if he was not asking for an expenditure that was not made by every other Cabinet officer of the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe it was the same in some respects.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is it not fair to explain——

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, Mr. Chairman; I am not complaining about the request for the conveniences enjoyed by other departments. The Secretary of Labor was given authority to get horses and carriages the same as the other departments. This appropriation should not be made, and I hope the committee will not adopt the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question in my time, if I may. Has any investigation been made of which the gentleman knows that shows it is cheaper to own and operate automobiles than it is a pair of horses and one of these little carriages, one of these dinky carriages the Secretaries have?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There have been investigations made which apparently demonstrate that it is cheaper to operate certain automobile trucks than a given number of horses.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am not talking about automobile trucks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It depends on the character of the automobile, the use to which it is to be put, and the number of horses and carriages which it is to supplant.

Mr. MANN. I wondered if anybody could be made to believe it is cheaper to own, operate, and repair an automobile than it is to take care of horses and a carriage, because if it is I may think of buying an automobile.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman that it depends on how much he uses it. A horse has got to eat all the time.

Mr. MANN. My observation in Washington, which has been considerable, is that an automobile or a team and a carriage, owned by a Cabinet officer, do not lie idle. They are busy practically all the time, and I think properly. I have no objection to them.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will say that I have an automobile which I purchased from my income as a Representative. I paid about $900 for that automobile, and I operate it myself and pretty generally look after it, and if anyone can keep one horse as cheaply as I am taking care of my automobile he is a better financier than I am.

Mr. MANN. I have a horse in Chicago that I never ride that costs less to feed in six months than gasoline that can be used in an automobile in that time. I just wanted to express an opinion on the automobile question. I think the Cabinet officers ought to be given automobiles, not on the ground of economy, which is absurd, but on the ground of dignity.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What ought to be done is one thing——

Mr. MANN. And I am not saying the Secretary had the authority. I do not know. I suppose that these purchases were made out of the contingent fund of the departments without any authority.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say to my colleagues that the average cost of keeping a team and shoeing it and feeding it and repairing the harnesses and doing everything connected with its maintenance will be about $300 a year, and that the cost of maintaining an ordinary automobile is about $100 a month.

Mr. MANN. And that is not to mention repairs.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment ought to be approached on its merits, and I do not believe this issue ought to be clouded with a statement that it is for the purchase of automobiles. I am reading from the statement of the Chief Clerk of the Department of Labor before the committee. On page 371 he states:

> To enable us to maintain that building and operate it and buy necessary supplies we had to make a 25 per cent deduction from each of the various bureaus at the beginning of the year. So that to-day those bureaus have, respectively, Naturalization, $76.11; Labor Statistics, $291.10; Immigration, $319.03; and the Children's Bureau, $2,270.85, from which their (Children's Bureau) travel expenses for field agents must be paid. Those are the balances on the 1st of this month. Now, we wish to restore to them the amounts we have deducted from their allotments in order that they may meet their contingent expenses for the balance of the year, and in addition to that we will need some of this to provide for the executive office of the department. In addition to borrowing clerks from the various bureaus, we have had to borrow machines, etc., from other governmental offices and from outside people. We have 5 borrowed typewriters and 16 borrowed adding machines.

I do not believe that this $17,000 has been asked for the purpose of furnishing automobiles for the Secretary of Labor or for anybody in connection with his department. It has been asked for the contingent expenses, on account of having to draw from other departments at the beginning of the year 25 per cent of their allotment. Now, there are pages of testimony here by the chief clerk and those connected with the Department of Labor. I do not know whether $17,000 is too high or not, but I believe that they ought to have further allowance, so far as their contingent expenses are concerned. I think that department has been doing a great deal of good work; that they have but about one year of experience, and ought to be encouraged. The statement has been made that they have got to use other clerks to do the messengers' work; that they have got to use their messengers to do the janitors' work; and they have got to use the messengers to do the cleaning up around. Now, they have only one elevator running out of the two which they have there. They have to use a messenger, I believe, to run that elevator. They are seriously crippled, as far as an engineer is concerned, in the fireroom, and I believe if the same condition prevailed in any other building in the city of Washington to-day that your commissioners, or the bureau of safety in connection with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, would jerk the owners of that building up with a round turn. There is not any service in that building that houses the Department of Labor. All you have got to do to understand this is to make a visit there. They have to draw from their other force in order to get service in that building for elevator work, and they are seriously handicapped. I believe more consideration should be shown the Department of Labor than is shown in this deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 34.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 30, after line 4, amend by inserting a new paragraph, as follows:
> "For miscellaneous expenses in the Bureau of Labor Statistics: For per diem, in lieu of subsistence, of special agents and employees while traveling on duty away from their homes and outside of the District of Columbia, at a rate not to exceed $3 per day, and for their transportation, and for employment of experts and temporary assistance, to be paid at the rate of not exceeding $8 per day, and for traveling expenses of officers and employees, and for the purchase of reports and materials for the reports and bulletins of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, for the subvention to "International Association for Labor Legislation," and necessary expenses connected with representation of the United States Government therein, $29,015."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order it is not authorized by the law.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I contend that this is only a continuation of the work that has been done previous to this time, or is being done, under authorization of the law. This appropriation is necessary for the continuation of this work, such research work, for instance, as making investigations in regard to accidents and in regard to diseases in industry. It is not new legislation, because it is a continuation of the work that has been done in the past or I believe is being done now. Unless this appropriation is made it will be necessary to stop this work, which is of great importance, because it relates to the investigation of accidents, the cause of accidents, and the prevention of them which are among the most important things confronting the people of this country to-day in the industries of the country. We are all ready to do what we can to bring about the minimum of accidents. This work has not yet been completed, as I understand, and it is necessary to have this appropriation for the continuation of it. I contend it is not subject to the point of order for that reason.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The services mentioned in there, Mr. Chairman, are not authorized by law. The gentleman is mistaken when he says they are.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] if it is not a continuation of the work that is being done now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not. Some of it is not being done at all. There are some features of that which not only are not authorized but are prohibited by law.

The CHAIRMAN. What features are prohibited?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Payment for subventions and expenses of the United States Government in participating in certain matters.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, that is certainly an erroneous position to take, because the purpose of this Bureau of Labor Statistics is to secure information in regard to the conditions in the industries of the country of woman employment, and so forth, and other conditions that make it necessary and more economical to cooperate with other commissions and organizations of the same character and the same nature.

To say that it is not authorized by law is certainly, in my opinion, begging the question, because the very purpose of the bureau itself is the purpose of seeking and securing information that may be of benefit to the people in passing legislation in regard to this matter. The gentleman says it is not authorized by law, because this particular effort that is to be made is not mentioned in the law. Such a statement is to me ridiculous, and if the gentleman has no better ground than that upon which to base his point of order I am certain it can not be sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman must produce his authority to justify his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not informed at this time as to the existing law on this question, and the Chair would suggest that the burden is upon the proponent of the amendment [Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois] to show that it does conform to the existing law.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have not the information at hand. I would like to ask some of our parliamentarians here who have been discussing these subjects to explain the situation. I would like to ask my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] whether this is not authorized by law or permissible by law?

Mr. MANN. I did not even hear the amendment read, I will say to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment. [Laughter.]

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman is not interested.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I did not make the point of order or argue it. I do not remember, in reference to the international conference or subvention, or whatever it is, whether that has been authorized by law or not. Of course all the other amendments are authorized by law, but I do not recall this.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. My information and understanding is that this work has heretofore been done. If it is not done at the present time, it is due to the lack of funds.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation for the international congress, of course, properly comes through the Committee on Foreign Affairs, although this would be a deficiency appropriation. But the authority would come through the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I do not remember whether such authority has been granted or not.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a little more time on this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want the question of order decided. These matters are not authorized, and the gentleman from Illinois can not produce his statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] will address himself to the point of order, and for that purpose the Chair has refrained from ruling.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, of course, is taking advantage of me. I have not time to properly look up this law. Probably I would have in a very few minutes.

The position that the gentleman takes, that the Bureau of Labor Statistics has not authority to do work in a certain way, is to me ridiculous. I do not think there would be a law that would direct just how it was to be done, and certainly it would be an unwise law that would prevent any bureau that has been established for the purpose from seeking information in regard to industrial conditions in this country, or that would prevent cooperation with all other like bureaus or commissions. The understanding that I have is that the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics is a sort of counselor for the State commissions and bureaus of labor, and that they cooperate so as to have some kind of uniformity.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that there is any question about the gentleman's amendment being in order, so far as it relates to real efficiency for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, as to printing and collecting information, or anything of that sort. That is all authorized by law. The same kind of an item appears every year in all the appropriations relating to every department, and it has repeatedly been held that those items are in order, so far as that is concerned. But the gentleman has a provision in the amendment that he has not yet explained.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I feel quite sure that the organic law creating the Department of Labor is broad enough to give to the Secretary of Labor the authority to collect statistics with reference to labor in whatever way and by whatever means he may deem proper. I hold in my hand a copy of that law, from which I read the following:

SEC. 4. That the Bureau of Labor Statistics, under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, shall collect, collate, and report at least once each year, or oftener if necessary, full and complete statistics of the conditions of labor and the products and the distribution of the products of the same, and to this end said Secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the bureaus provided for his department, and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same as may be deemed desirable in the public interests; and said Secretary shall also have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them; and said Secretary of Labor may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under this paragraph of the organic law creating the Department of Labor the duty is imposed upon the Secretary to collect statistics regarding the condition of labor in this country. And it is not confined to labor in this country alone, but it is broad enough, in my opinion, to enable him to collect statistics with reference to labor wherever the Secretary may deem proper and wise, and I think the special objection to this amendment made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is not in harmony with the provisions of this section of the organic law. I feel quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment falls within this provision and that it ought to be submitted to the House for its consideration and vote.

The CHAIRMAN. From the discussion of this question it appears that there is at least one item in the amendment which is unauthorized by existing law and which should have been reported by a committee other than the Committee on Appropriations, namely, the provision for the subvention to the International Association for Labor Legislation and the necessary expenses connected with the representation of the United States Government therein. As to other items in the amendment, it appears—at least the Chair gathers from the discussion—that they are covered by existing legislation. But as the Chair has no power to discriminate between the various items in the amendment and must treat it as a whole, and on account of the unauthorized provision in it the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by inserting on page 30, after line 4, a new paragraph, as follows:

"Miscellaneous expenses of Bureau of Labor Statistics: For per diem in lieu of subsistence of special agents and employees while traveling on duty away from their homes and outside of the District of Columbia, at a rate not to exceed $3 per day, and for their transportation, and for employment of experts and temporary assistance, to be paid at the rate of not exceeding $8 per day, and for traveling expenses of officers and employees, and for the purchase of reports and materials for the reports and bulletins of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, $29,015."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] with that portion eliminated which was subject to the point of order.

The object of this amendment is to place the Bureau of Labor Statistics on its legs. At the present time the bureau is behind with its work. It would be a long story to tell why it is behind with its work; but the fact is that it is in a condition where its efficiency is very seriously affected, and the object of this appropriation is to enable the men in charge of that bureau to bring their work up to date by the 1st of July.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. This amendment carries the same amount as the other amendment?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How much was it intended to spend for the delegate to the international convention?

Mr. KEATING. There are no delegates.

Mr. MADDEN. There must be some expense connected with that feature of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] that was stricken out, because it was in violation of existing law.

Mr. KEATING. I will tell the gentleman very frankly that in all probability there is a charge in connection with that.

Mr. MADDEN. How much?

Mr. KEATING. My understanding is that it is a very small charge, and therefore I did not reduce the amount. I want to be very frank with the gentleman, though, and state that there is a charge.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it not look right for the gentleman from Colorado in introducing his amendment to make such deduction as in his judgment is indicated on account of the expense for that item?

Mr. KEATING. It may be that the gentleman is right on that point. I could not find the exact sum stated in the hearings and had to depend upon the advice given to me by gentlemen near me, who have no definite information on that particular subject.

The object of this amendment is to place this bureau on its feet. We want to make it an efficient bureau, and later on I expect to offer another amendment to permit the printing of the bureau to be brought up to date. The fact is that Congress ought either to make it an efficient bureau and give it sufficient funds to carry on its work in an efficient fashion or it ought to abolish the Bureau of Labor Statistics. This amendment should be adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the first thing this bureau ought to do is to obey the law and stop violating it, as it has been doing. For the current year it has had $64,090 for its work. It has had the same appropriation every year since 1907. In 1905–6 it had $65,140. In 1912 $20,000 was given to it additional to the regular appropriation, because Congress had put upon it certain investigations which took its force away from its ordinary work and necessitated this expenditure for work not contemplated in the regular appropriation. So that with that exception it has not asked for a deficiency since 1905. If the committee will notice the language of the amendment, they will see that this appropriation is for a field force. It is for special agents and employees while traveling on duty away from their homes and outside of the District of Columbia, at a rate not to exceed $3 per day, and for their transportation, and for the employment of experts and temporary assistants paid at the rate of not exceeding $8 a day, and for the traveling expenses of officers and employees.

In 1882, as the result of the gross abuses that had grown up in the Government through the habit of obtaining lump appropriations for field services and then padding the departmental rolls with permanent employees out of appropriations obtained for field service, Congress passed this law:

That no civil officer, clerk, draftsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employee shall, after the 1st day of October next, be employed in any of the executive departments, or subordinate bureaus or offices thereof, at the seat of Government, except only at such rates and in such numbers, respectively, as may be specifically appropriated for by Congress for such clerical and other personal services for each fiscal year; and no civil officer, clerk, draftsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employee shall hereafter be employed at the seat of Government in any executive department or subordinate bureau or office thereof or be paid from any appropriation made for contingent expenses, or for any specific or general purpose, unless such employment is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided in the law granting the appropriation, and then only for services actually rendered in connection with and for the purposes of the appropriation from which payment is made, and at the rate of compensation usual and proper for such services.

It developed in the investigation before the Committee on Appropriations that this appropriation, made for a field service, has charged to it 19 permanent employees, 8 of whom are employed in Washington all the time and the balance of them part of the time. That is in express violation of the law, and it takes up between $11,000 and $20,000 of the appropriation made for this field service. If these employees were not employed in violation of the law, there would be ample funds here to do the work in the field, and until that bureau adjusts its force and obeys the law Congress should not encourage or indorse its action in continuing the employment of these employees in violation of law. In 1912, in order to prevent a repetition of the abuses that had grown up prior to 1882, and to make impossible the violations which from time to time were shown, Congress amended that law by putting in the following provision:

That any person violating section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved August 5, 1882, shall be summarily removed from office, and may also, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year.

If this committee desires to ratify the violation of law and to indorse the conduct of officials contrary to this law, then it might just as well determine that it will not attempt to control or to regulate the expenditures made in any department of the Government.

Because if it is to be published that the laws need not be observed, that those in the executive departments can violate the law, and that no penal statute will be enforced, our efforts at economy will be futile.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Perhaps I am the only one who does not understand, but does the amendment here proposed provide funds for debts that have been consummated, or is it for prospective transactions in the future?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They could not incur liability if they did not have the money. They have a permanent force employed here; they are paying them now out of this appropriation, and it is in violation of law.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York, in my opinion, is stretching his imagination greatly when he says that the Bureau of Labor Statistics or the officials are violating the law. The reason that there are so many employees in the headquarters in the city of Washington is due to the fact that this Congress, with its economical Appropriations Committee, especially when it comes to these things that will give labor relief, has not given it sufficient funds to take care of the office properly, and therefore when this information that they have collected in the field in research work comes to be compiled it becomes necessary that they be called in to work in the office instead of continuing their field work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is a woman who is assistant librarian in Washington one of the field employees?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am reading from the testimony.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that this Department of Labor and its bureaus has been sort of chloroformed by Congress, due to a lack of appropriations and consideration for the interests of labor. Due to great doses of chloroform, this bureau may have been in a dazed condition and hardly knew how to operate their crippled-up force and get results, and in trying to comply with the law perhaps they have done certain things with the meager and insufficient funds they had to expend; they may not have hewed exactly to the line altogether. I deny, however, that they have violated the law. It has not been shown by the gentleman from New York, who is one of the ablest lawyers in the House, that they have violated the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They admitted it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Well, for the sake of argument, I will agree that they have violated the law, which they have not. [Laughter.] But if they have, what are we going to do? Are you going to let this Bureau of Labor Statistics, one of the most important to the people of the country and to this Congress, go without sufficient funds to accomplish their work? You are going to have matters come up here upon which you will want information—the wage scale, the number of men out of employment, and so forth. That information will be very important for us to have, and perhaps would clear away some of these confused statements that we have heard made on the floor.

I say to you that it is no argument to me for the gentleman from New York to say that they have in some way or other stepped over the line of the law. If it has been the practice in past years, it is very strange that the gentleman from New York has not called attention to it until they ask for funds to do this work placed upon them.

Now, I have requests from labor unions throughout the country for information that the bureau has almost completed. They have it almost completed, but they have not the force to complete it and have not the money to have it printed if they had it completed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Who furnished the labor unions information upon which they sent a letter to the gentleman? Was not that a propaganda sent out from this very bureau to these people, and they wrote back to you?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman is under a misapprehension. I said I had requests from labor unions for information that the bureau had compiled but not completed. They were not requests for the passage of this amendment. There is no labor union that has said anything to me in regard to this appropriation bill. None, so far as I know, know anything about it. What I said was that I had requests from labor unions over the country to secure information prepared by the bureau, which they desired for their own use—one in particular, the hygiene of the painting trade.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If an appropriation of this kind were made, they could not pay for the printing of it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I know; we have another amendment for that. This appropriation would permit them to complete the investigations that have been under way in securing information that I have been asked for. I myself desire some of that information. They have under way an investigation as to what Governments in foreign countries have done for home builders and farmers. That is information I would like very much to have. This work can not be completed under the present force and the funds they have to expend. If the information is compiled they will not be able to print it, because they have not the money to pay for the printing. I have already asked for the printing of the information on the hygiene of the painters' trade, because they lack the funds to print it.

DRAINAGE OF SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a document by Dr. William H. Deaderick, of Hot Springs, Ark.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address by the gentleman whom he names. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I think I can state in a very few words the condition of this appropriation. This appropriation is carried in the legislative bill and is to enable the Bureau of Labor to gather certain information in the field. The appropriation for the current year is just exactly, as I now recollect, what the department estimated it would need. It is the exact amount that has been carried in the previous appropriation bills for that purpose. The fact is that, although the law provides that no personal service shall be secured in the District of Columbia out of lump-sum appropriations, the Department of Labor has kept on its pay roll here in the District of Columbia, in violation of the law, a large number of people. And instead of using this money for the purpose for which it was appropriated, to wit, to gather the information in the field, they have used it to pay clerks here in the office, and that is the reason why they have not money enough to keep their force in the field until the end of the fiscal year. There is not any doubt about their having violated the law.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Has the gentleman information as to whether the infractions referred to have occurred since the organization of the department as such, or whether that is a hold-over condition from the time when it was a bureau?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not say when it began. I am telling you what the trouble is now. Gentlemen, those are the facts. This appropriation was made in the legislative appropriation bill. We gave them just what they have had every year before. We gave them just what they asked for, and they have expended it in a way that the law did not authorize.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman think that that justifies Congress in not continuing this work, simply because somebody happened to violate the law or not to comply strictly with it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think that is a matter for the Committee of the Whole to decide. We have made the appropriation for this work. They seemed to think that other work was more important, and they have used the money for other work. It is the intention of the Department of Labor to keep every man now on the pay roll until the 1st day of July, but they say that they can not keep them on the pay roll and, in addition to their monthly pay, pay their traveling expenses in the field.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. They say they can not continue the work they have started.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are going to work them here just as they have been doing.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, your committee, in its investigation of this matter found the conditions just as stated by the chairman of the committee and as stated by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON]. The money that was intended to be used by the employees in gathering statistics and paying the expenses of these people has been diverted to the payment of a certain number of employees in the District of Columbia, as stated by the gentleman from South Carolina, in violation of the law. I do not believe that any department ought to be permitted to expend money for a purpose other than that for which Congress had already made provisions. It is true that many people throughout the country who keep up with this important work might not have known that condition of affairs in the Department of Labor. The legislative bill could have taken care of it and could have made the corrections and adjustments and it would not have been necessary to say these things on the floor of the House; but will Members of Congress, who pass the law and who are responsible to their constituents for the manner in which this money is expended, justify and excuse and give the right in the future to these departments to expend money as they please? If this department shall suffer, it suffers in this instance by reason of the fact that it misused the funds, diverted them from the channel intended by Congress.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, is it the gentleman's contention that the Department of Labor did not need these employees, that they have been paying them unlawfully out of this money?

Mr. SISSON. I say they had no right to use this money. Congress ought to authorize the employees before they obtain them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the gentleman not think that if they really needed those employees in order to continue the business of the country that we should overlook a technical thing of that kind?

Mr. SISSON. No, I do not; and I am surprised to hear the gentleman say that Congress should overlook the fact that the law of the land has been violated, and when you do you say to every member of the Cabinet, to every bureau chief, "Use the money as you see fit and proper, not as we see fit and proper"; and when that time comes, then the House of Representatives and the Senate ought to quit business, because to do business longer would be a farce and a fraud.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Have not these same employees been employed by the bureau which has done this work in the past, before the formation of this new department?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is entirely ignorant, I presume, of the method of segregation between the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor, when the Department of Labor was created. There were certain employees, sometimes irrespective of exactly where they worked, under the act which created the Department of Labor, and the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Labor were enabled to divide their forces, which had theretofore been under the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. The truth of the matter is that if this Appropriation Committee can do what these gentlemen want them to do in a deficiency bill, then we could, if we saw fit and proper, load down these deficiency bills and create innumerable offices, but the moment we did we would be accused of arrogating to ourselves power that we ought not to have, and every member of every other committee would rise up in arms against it; but here is the Labor Committee now urging us to do those things not authorized by law, because this money which has been expended for these employees in the District of Columbia is money which has been appropriated for other purposes. We are not responsible for the condition in which the Secretary of Labor finds his department. Congress did not place him in that position, and if he thought, in his wisdom—let us be that charitable with him—that it was better to use it for the benefit of the department by employing men in violation of the law than to do this other work, then this work can certainly wait for two or three months until the legislative bill can take it up and straighten the entire matter. I do not believe that anyone is more friendly to the man who toils and labors with his hands than I am.

But when the demands of labor come we should look at them as we would the demands of bankers, lawyers, doctors, merchants, and everybody else. I do not believe in giving labor any special privilege. I do not believe in giving the farmer any special privilege. I do not believe in giving anyone any special privilege, and these men who are now urging this be done, if it were done by the Secretary of the Treasury, would perhaps be the first men to raise their voices in protest against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I object.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman objects, he is going to have a little more trouble about getting his own time extended in the future. We have been more than indulgent with him. I am a member of the subcommittee and have taken but little time on this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman would not yield for a question.

Mr. SISSON. I told the gentleman that I would yield in a minute. I never decline to yield to anybody when I have time, if the gentleman asking me to yield is courteous.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. I will now yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who has asked me a question, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The thing I want to get at and get a better idea of is whether or not these employees were superfluous, whether they were not needed. I can easily see in forming a new bureau there might be conflict between two bureaus as to the number of employees which should go to one bureau or the other, but the thing I wish to know is whether these employees were needed.

Mr. SISSON. Every employee not authorized by law is superfluous, every one of them, because Congress is responsible and controls the departments. The departments do not control Congress. As a matter of fact, Congress is now assuming such a miserable position in the eyes of the country and bureaucracy has increased so rapidly in this country that we are beginning to make Russia look like a piker in bureaucracy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will agree with the gentleman there is something in that contention.

Mr. SISSON. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman states that they were employed in violation of the law. I want to have an explanation about this.

Mr. SISSON. In other words, the money that has been paid these 19 employees who were in the service for the purpose of gathering the very statistics the gentleman asked for have been placed at something else.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. They did not gather statistics.

Mr. SISSON. They were employed for that purpose and were being paid $3 per diem and traveling expenses, and have been retained here in the city of Washington in violation of law. Now, is that plain?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I understand they have been doing——

Mr. SISSON. It does not matter what they have been doing. They were on the pay rolls to do certain specified work which the law required them to do, and if they do other work and are paid out of an appropriation made for another purpose, it is a violation of law; in this case of a specific statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. I want to call the attention of the committee——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SISSON. Let me finish this, because I have it jotted down here. I want to call the attention——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman want to finish telling what a friend to labor he is, when he is trying to keep——

Mr. SISSON. Oh, the gentleman is not the only pebble on the beach or the only lawn mower on the grass. He is not the only friend of labor in the entire world. [Applause.] The gentleman from Illinois has no brief to speak for me; I have not authorized him to speak.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will not yield right now, and I do not want these interruptions taken out of my time either. I want to call the attention of the House to the various departments that are engaged in gathering statistics. The Census Department, they are gathering statistics; in the Child's Labor Bureau they are gathering statistics; the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce are gathering statistics, and in other departments they are gathering statistics. The Department of Labor is gathering statistics, and nearly all the other departments have some sort of statistical attachment for gathering statistics. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to this condition, so that it may go into the RECORD that these legislative committees that have jurisdiction of these matters may bring in legislation to remedy this condition. The Appropriations Committee can not do it. The proper committee should report a bill covering this entire matter of gathering statistics and charge one bureau with the duty to gather all statistics, thus using the same machinery, and not have a multifarious number of duplications of the same work, costing many millions of dollars more than if all these facts were gathered in one department. If one department did all this work, we would not have this useless expenditure of the people's money and useless duplication of work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that they close in five minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Make it seven.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes in my own right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to close debate on the pending amendment in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to close the debate on the pending amendment in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I should not claim the attention of the committee now were it not for the declaration made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. I do not at this moment know how I shall vote upon this amendment, because I must admit that the statements made by the committee in charge of the bill have produced grave doubts in my mind, and perhaps would have produced a state of certainty with regard to the amendment had it not been for the declaration of which I complain. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] saw fit to drag in and characterize the Committee on Labor——

Mr. SISSON. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, if that was done in any sense of the word with any idea in the gentleman's mind that it was intended as a reflection upon that distinguished committee, I will say that I did not intend any such impression to get out.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. It is very well to withdraw it now, but the statement was made.

Mr. SISSON. It was made here in the heat of debate, and I do not recollect now just exactly the language used; but if the gentleman wants to force me to rely absolutely on what I said, I will stand by it.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I care not whether the gentleman stands by it or withdraws from it. I do care as to the fact, sir, and perhaps the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will care. The fact is that the Committee on Labor, as such, has never had anything to do with these amendments, has never discussed them, has never had before it the subject of appropriations to the Department of Labor. I want to say, so far as I personally am concerned, although it may not be my portion to be charged with the particular responsibility on these matters, as the gentleman from Mississippi is now, that I give way to no man in this House in my purpose to enforce strictly administrative laws or to economize the resources of the people. And the Labor Department presents no exception to that rule, in my mind. If the Labor Department or a preceding bureau has violated the law and has expended money in a manner unwarranted by the law, it of course can not ask for special privilege, and I am not here to defend it. But I am here, sir, to defend the Committee on Labor in this matter. The characterization it has received is absolutely unfounded and unjustified.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and the Chairman announced there were—ayes 33, noes 33.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk and the Chair differ as to the result. Therefore it will be necessary to put the Members to the trouble of being counted again.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 39.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois and Mr. J. I. NOLAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. KEATING took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMMIGRATION SERVICE.

Ellis Island Immigrant Station, New York Harbor: For completion of additional story on baggage and dormitory building and metal and masonry projection on northern side of said building, $200,000.

During the reading,

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has not completed the reading of the paragraph. I make the point of order the amendment is not in order yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read to the completion of the paragraph.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is entitled to recognition if he desires.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 12, insert as a separate paragraph the following:

"To meet a deficiency in the appropriation 'Expenses of regulating immigration' for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to wit: For all expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; for the costs of the reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; for salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws; for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,' and acts amendatory thereof; for expenses of necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations, and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; also for preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, and the expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation; and for the refunding of head tax upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers, all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor (act June 23, 1913, vol. 38, sec. 1, p. 65), $95,000."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the paragraph to which he offers an amendment has been passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman withhold that amendment until this paragraph is disposed of.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman offers an amendment in line 5, as I understand it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I tried to get the floor to offer it before.

Mr. MANN. The amendment is in order after line 9. Make it to read after line 9.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he withhold it until any action may be taken on the pending paragraph, and then offer it. It is in order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. All right.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I was not making any point of order, except the gentleman wanted to put it in after line 5, and that line was passed.

Mr. MANN. He wanted to put it in the right place.

Mr. SISSON. But the place had been passed.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I desire to offer it after the paragraph is finished.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I want to strike out a word at the end of the paragraph, line 9, at the proper time. I do not want to be taken off the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] withholds his amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois, as the Chair understands it, has yielded the floor at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I withhold the amendment for the present.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman explain the urgency for this $200,000 appropriation at this time for building an additional story on the baggage and dormitory building at Ellis Island?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under authority of law a contract was entered into to construct an additional story upon this building, at a cost of $350,000. When the authority was given it was stated $150,000 would be required during the present fiscal year. The contract was made, the work commenced, and the contractor during the month of January reached the point where the entire $150,000 was exhausted. This is to enable the work to be carried on, else he must stop work, as he is not able to advance his operation.

Mr. MOORE. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of work has been done?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; $150,000 worth of work has been done, and this is to complete the contract.

Mr. MOORE. And the $200,000 was authorized in a previous appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. The second paragraph, providing for $30,000 for equipment, is to equip this addition when completed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; to furnish double-tiered beds—I believe 1,200 double-tiered beds—and ordinary park benches to go around the outside of the building.

Mr. MOORE. Is there any urgency about the equipment when the building is not completed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They must be ordered and contracted for and ready to be installed when the building is completed.

Mr. MOORE. How many additional immigrants will this new building take care of?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Twelve hundred beds.

Mr. MOORE. Twelve hundred additional?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; twelve hundred beds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let the Clerk read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furnishings and equipment for additional story on baggage and dormitory building, including beds, benches, and miscellaneous furniture, $30,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to change my amendment and offer it to line 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 30, by inserting after line 12 as a separate paragraph the following:

"To meet a deficiency in the appropriation 'Expenses of regulating immigration' for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to wit: For all expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; for the costs of the reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; for salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said law; for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,' and acts amendatory thereof; for expenses and necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations, and repairs, and for other expenses authorized by said acts; also for preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, and the expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, and for the refunding of head tax upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor (act June 23, 1913, vol. 38, p. 65, sec. 1), $95,000."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this amendment is so fair and so just that it ought to appeal even to the members of this Committee on Appropriations.

I probably made a mistake in talking about the committee a while ago, saying that they were permitting the Labor Department to be chloroformed, crippled, hamstrung, bucked, and gagged for want of funds. I do not believe they know any better, to tell the truth. Most of them are lawyers and do not know much about the labor question. I do not believe they intend to be so unjust, but I do believe that whether they intend it or not the result is just the same. If they can sustain their position upon this amendment before this committee, then it is not necessary for anyone, with the small ability that I have, anyway, to try to get anything through Congress or through a committee like this for the benefit of labor on the ground of justice and fairness.

The Bureau of Immigration, as I remember it, has $2,550,000. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if that is correct?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two million five hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes. It has $2,550,000 appropriated. The receipts from the immigrants for head tax and other things—and I do not know what else—amounted during the first six months of this fiscal year to $3,009,000, or about that. If I could calculate rapidly I could tell you how much more they have taken in in six months than they have had appropriated for the whole fiscal year. I think it amounts to something like $450,000 more.

But that is not a reason why we should make this appropriation, I agree; but the need for this appropriation arises on account of the fact that there has been a large increase in the number of immigrants coming to this country and the fact that new immigration stations have been built and are now being put into operation at New Orleans, Chicago, Philadelphia, and other places, and on account of the fact that there has been an increased amount of work, which makes it necessary to have an increased force or else the work will go undone.

Now, the fact is, as I get it, that the Naturalization Bureau is at this time clogged up, and if this appropriation is not made they will not be able to take care of the naturalization of those who are qualified to be naturalized in this country. And there are many other things that ought to be done to catch up with the work, so that they can do this work efficiently and properly, and it is essential that they have this appropriation. That is what makes it an urgent and important matter.

Now, another thing that is rather an abnormal condition which is due to the war in Mexico. There have been many Chinese brought into Mexico as laborers, and after having gone there as laborers they have drifted to California. This is of especial interest to the western people, who know the need of keeping out undesirable immigrants, such as the Chinese; because if this appropriation is not made it is simply going to chloroform even the Immigration Bureau of this department.

Some of the amendments have been turned down here on the flimsy argument that somebody has done something that was not strictly in accordance with the law. Nobody has said that they did not need this money. Nobody can say that. It is a fact that they do need it, and it is urgent that they should have it. But because somebody said that somebody did not comply strictly with the law, these other urgent matters will have to wait—these matters for the safety and the health of the working people of this country—this information that might be brought forth so that we might at an earlier date legislate in the States, as well as in the Nation, to give relief to the existing situation and find a preventive of these diseases and these accidents that are killing the working masses of this country in large percentages all the time. What will they say now? In their opposition there is only one position left for them to take; they have no ground for opposition otherwise. Will they say that somebody, somewhere, at some time or other, has not strictly complied with the law, and therefore this appropriation should not be allowed, and thereby permit this bureau to be hamstrung, buckled, and gagged the same as the whole department has been?

I want to apologize for anything I said that might cast any reflection on the splendid Committee on Appropriations of this House. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it has occurred to me, from reading the hearings in this matter, that this appropriation proposed in the amendment of my colleague is not needed. The hearings read as follows. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said:

> The next item is "Immigration Service: For expenses of regulating immigration, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, $95,000." The appropriation is $2,550,000. How much was actually expended in 1913?
> Mr. O'DONNELL. That has been reported in the form of a printed document. I have not a copy with me, but the amount, I think, expended was $25,000 less than the total appropriation.
> The CHAIRMAN. For this year you have $75,000 more than you expended last year?
> Mr. O'DONNELL. No. We received an increase of $25,000 over the appropriation for last year. Last year the appropriation was $2,525,000, and this year it is $2,550,000.
> The CHAIRMAN. But you only spent $2,500,000?
> Mr. O'DONNELL. That was the total of the expenditures.
> The CHAIRMAN. So you have $75,000 more?
> Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.
> The CHAIRMAN. How can you have a deficiency?
> Mr. O'DONNELL. We have a potential deficiency this year, which I can give you the particulars of.
> The CHAIRMAN. A potential deficiency?
> Mr. O'DONNELL. We are obligated, in other words, for more than our appropriation.
> The CHAIRMAN. You can not, under the law. You have to apportion your appropriation and you can not create a deficiency.
> Mr. O'DONNELL. The department is at the present time obligated for more than the appropriation.
> The CHAIRMAN. You can not do that. You have no authority.
> Mr. O'DONNELL. Well, for example, if you want to create a position and appoint a man at $1,200, effective on the 1st of July, you are obligated for $1,200 in that case.

And Mr. O'Donnell goes on with his statement, and from start to finish admits that they have a surplus of $75,000, that they do not legitimately need a dollar of this $95,000, and this amount is in strict contradiction of the statement made by the man in charge of the service for which this appropriation of $95,000 is sought to be made.

Now, I submit to the committee that with a statement coming from the bureau itself to the effect that they have $75,000 more than they need, there is no deficiency, and that it is not within the power of the bureau to create a deficiency in anticipation of what might happen a year from now. Mr. O'Donnell says they have created place after place, evidently without authority of law, and because they have created those places without getting the authority of Congress, in anticipation of the work to be performed by the men who are to fill the places they are looking forward to a deficiency, and they want $95,000 to meet that deficiency.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like to ask for information who is this gentleman Mr. O'Donnell? What is his position in the department?

Mr. MADDEN. I assume that he is the Immigration Commissioner, or whatever his title may be; and, by the way, that is a title that has not been created by law. There is no such position created by law. But nevertheless the position is in existence. It has been created by the edict of the Department of Labor. There is no reason why the Department of Labor, because it happens to be the Department of Labor, should have privileges that are not accorded to any other department. The work of Congress should be conducted along lines calculated to conserve the Treasury of the United States, to do ample justice to every interest involved, and to see that no man is placed anywhere by anybody in authority unless that man has the power to do so under the law.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, any one reading the statement of Mr. O'Donnell, who appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, and the record of whose statement begins at page 379 and ends on page 388, can not help but come to the conclusion that this $95,000 is money that will be actually needed by the Department of Labor to enforce the laws up to the 30th of June, 1914. The additional immigration stations create new offices, new liabilities, and new expenses that the department must encounter and provide for, and they show that in certain cases they will even be compelled to shut down and cease work if the money is not provided.

In regard to the unlawful entering of persons from Canada, it appears from the statement before the committee that there are many unlawfully entering the United States from the Dominion of Canada at the present time, and the department says that if the money is not provided it will be compelled to withdraw its men and thereby permit the undesirables and those who are prohibited by law from entering to come into the United States, and they can not be deported.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not just at present. I will in a moment. Now, in regard to the southern border of the State of California, it appears that last year alone there were 3,461 Chinese who unlawfully entered the United States who were deported; and if the truth were known there were practically five who unlawfully entered and who were not arrested and deported for every one who was legally deported. For the last six months there have already been 2,359 deported who unlawfully entered the United States from Lower California, and this work will have to cease between now and the end of the fiscal year if this Congress does not provide the necessary means for the department to carry out its work. On account of the unpleasantness in Mexico these men are landed by the steamship companies in Mexico and in Lower California, and it is easy to see how they can cross the border, and as an additional inducement the price per head for smuggling a Chinaman across the border is from $500 to $1,000. It well becomes Congress to provide the necessary sinews of war, so that this department can carry out the mandatory provisions of the law which require the Secretary of Labor and the Commissioner of Immigration to enforce this law and to arrest and return those who unlawfully arrive in this country.

There are a great many more who unlawfully enter and are smuggled into the country along the seaboard. The department also states that from the Canadian border there are many Hindus who come across, and that if a sufficient fund is not provided there will be no means to arrest them and enforce the law, and deport those who have unlawfully entered. The official figures show that more than $2,000,000 was collected from immigrants last year over and above the expenses of this department, and now the Department of Labor, for the purpose of properly equipping itself, of properly enforcing the law, asks Congress to return the small pittance of $95,000 in order that the department may be properly maintained. In view of the fact that the Immigration Department has collected over $2,000,000 in excess of the money expended for all its operations, I insist that this appropriation is reasonable.

There is no more important duty to be performed by the Secretary of Labor and Commissioner General of Immigration than enforcing the immigration law, excluding the Asiatics, as far as the law now goes, and all others, and deporting those who have entered the United States in violation of the law. This money will be most properly used and for a good cause. We should keep from this country those who are prohibited from entering this country. If they are smuggled in or otherwise enter they should be deported. Better conditions should be provided by those who come to this country. They should have every humane care and treatment that it is possible to give them. The department needs money to provide the necessary accommodations and officials to give such care. I shall vote for this amendment and urge the members of the committee to support this amendment.

The statement made by the department officials who appeared before the committee shows the necessity of this appropriation.

EXPENSES OF REGULATING IMMIGRATION.

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is "Immigration Service. For expenses of regulating immigration, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, $95,000." The appropriation is $2,550,000. How much was actually expended in 1913?

Mr. O'DONNELL. That has been reported in the form of a printed document. I have not a copy with me, but the amount, I think, expended was $25,000 less than the total appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. For this year you have $75,000 more than you expended last year?

Mr. O'DONNELL. No. We received an increase of $25,000 over the appropriation for last year. Last year the appropriation was $2,525,000, and this year it is $2,550,000.

The CHAIRMAN. But you only spent $2,500,000?

Mr. O'DONNELL. That was the total of the expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. So you have $75,000 more?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How can you have a deficiency?

Mr. O'DONNELL. We have a potential deficiency this year which I can give you the particulars of.

The CHAIRMAN. A potential deficiency?

Mr. O'DONNELL. We are obligated, in other words, for more than our appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. You can not, under the law. You have to apportion your appropriation and you can not create a deficiency.

Mr. O'DONNELL. The department is at the present time obligated for more than the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. You can not do that. You have no authority.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Well, for example, if you want to create a position and appoint a man at $1,200, effective on the 1st of July, you are obligated for $1,200 in that case.

The CHAIRMAN. But you have no authority to do that if you have not the money. How do you get the so-called potential deficiency?

Mr. O'DONNELL. For the fiscal year 1914 there have been obligations assumed by the creation of new positions in the manner which I will indicate. The New Orleans immigration station, which was a new station, ordered erected by Congress, was not turned over by the contractors until March, 1913, and we avoided the necessity of manning the station, so far as we could, until the beginning of the next fiscal year, because we were not prepared to incur any obligation at the latter end of the fiscal year. The increased force required at New Orleans and which was authorized during the fiscal year is costing $9,480, which is an entirely new obligation.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you have there last year?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I have not the figures with me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this in addition to what you had last year?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir; new positions created for this fiscal year. At Philadelphia that station was opened in August of 1912, but this fiscal year we have had to create two positions on account of the new station at a total cost of $1,560 for salaries—additional positions. At Galveston, Tex., there was a new station erected by direction of Congress, and there we had no force at all to man the station; it was simply an office force—an inspection force—but the entire operative force of the station went into effect in the month of June of the last fiscal year and really became an annual obligation on the 1st of July, of $14,460. At Charleston, S. C., where we have a station which is unfurnished and not operated as a station, that was finished during the last fiscal year—I am not certain about the date, but I think it was January or February—and we put temporarily two watchmen there, and we finally secured permanent men during the present fiscal year at $1,440.

The CHAIRMAN. You had them there during the last fiscal year?

Mr. O'DONNELL. A part of the time; yes, sir.

Now, at the last regular session of Congress there was a bill passed authorizing a station at Chicago, Ill. Later on there was an appropriation of $20,000 made for furnishing that station and for rent for this fiscal year. That station has been rented, but we are even now postponing the manning of it until we get some additional money. We do not care to go any further in the hole than we are. That will cost for the remaining four months of this fiscal year, figuring from March 1, $5,520 for employees. That makes a total, on account of new stations (salaries only), of $32,460.

For the general immigration Service we have put into force in this fiscal year on the Canadian border alone additional employees drawing $14,720. That has been made necessary because of the fact that immigration from Europe to Canada has been the largest in the history of the Dominion, and as against that industrial conditions there have not been of the best. The result was that in the early summer of last year those immigrants who found that conditions in Canada were not to their liking came streaming over the border and it became necessary for the department to tighten up the lines in order to keep them out, and the result was the creation of these positions which the Secretary did with the idea that if Congress could not see its way clear to allow us the money to meet the deficiency thereby created, we would have to cut down the force before the end of the year by furloughing men or letting them out as best we might.

The situation as to the interpreters at New York has already been called to the attention of this committee. It was brought up last year. The Secretary responded to the pressure for additional interpreters, in order to handle the immigration and enforce the laws, by allowing an increase of four men, which was about the 1st of July of this fiscal year, and also three additional inspectors, making a total of $8,940.

At the port of Boston the increase in the number of steamship lines coming there made it necessary to increase their force by two inspectors and one clerk, entailing an expenditure of $3,780.

The CHAIRMAN. What additional steamship lines come to Boston?

Mr. O'DONNELL. The Hamburg-American and the North German Lloyd.

The CHAIRMAN. How many vessels a week?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I am not able to speak offhand. I should say that the Hamburg-American Line has been running about two vessels a month and the North German Lloyd Line about two vessels a month; in all, say one ship a week additional. I understand that they are going to double the number.

The CHAIRMAN. How many inspectors did you have at Boston?

Mr. O'DONNELL. We had in Boston, I think, about 15 inspectors and perhaps 6 or 8 clerks.

The CHAIRMAN. How many immigrants did you have in 1913?

Mr. O'DONNELL. The total immigration through the port of Boston during the fiscal year 1913 was 54,740. That is the total for the year. For the first six months of this fiscal year the number of immigrants has been 42,154 at Boston, which for the year would make it over 84,000.

The CHAIRMAN. How many immigrants did you have in New York last year?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Eight hundred and ninety-two thousand six hundred and fifty-three.

The CHAIRMAN. And how many inspectors there?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I should say that we have about 80.

The CHAIRMAN. Please place the number accurately in the record.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.

(NOTE.—The statement referred to is as follows:)

"At Ellis Island there are 80 inspectors and 117 clerks, each of whom performs duty as indicated by title, and there is no overlapping of duties. At Boston there are 21 inspectors and 7 clerks; most of the inspectors at Boston are stenographers and typewriters and take their own notes, thus avoiding the need for many clerks; the inspectors at Boston also do all the statistical work between steamer arrivals. When ships are in port the entire force of inspectors is required to dispatch the business in that line, as there are three separate inspection stations widely remote from each other, and it frequently happens that forces are working at two of these stations at once."

Mr. O'DONNELL. There was a necessity for opening an office at Des Moines, Iowa. We had no office in the State of Iowa. We attempted to do the work by sending men from Chicago and St. Louis as occasion demanded, but it was not satisfactory. The number of cases that were being reported requiring investigation necessitated the opening of an office there.

The CHAIRMAN. An office for what purpose?

Mr. O'DONNELL. For immigration cases, including warrant cases, and there was an inspector in charge appointed at $2,250. He is in charge and does all of the work himself.

The CHAIRMAN. What do they do?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Assume the case of an alien coming to New York destined to Davenport, Iowa, and claiming to have an aunt or uncle residing there, whose address, perhaps, he is uncertain about, and he is not an immigrant who would be likely to get along at the start without some assistance from his relatives; he is rather hazy in his ideas as to the financial circumstances of those relatives, i. e., how they are situated. In many of those cases it is necessary to send an officer to make an investigation of the case. In thousands of other cases we get reports from municipal, State, and Federal agencies, but there are many other classes of cases which must be investigated. The State insane asylums in Iowa report many cases through the course of the year of inmates of those institutions whom they believe to be subject to deportation, and an investigation must be conducted in each and every one of those cases. There are several thousand Chinese in the State of Iowa who are constantly going and coming. Each one of those Chinese, when he applies for a return certificate, must be investigated, and when he applies for permission to reenter a further investigation is necessary in order to determine that the conditions which existed when he went out have not changed in the interval elapsing since then. That is a mere outline of the character of investigative work which must be done.

The CHAIRMAN. How many such stations have you in the United States.

Mr. O'DONNELL. We have offices all over the country, almost in every State, except the Western States—where one office will cover several States.

The CHAIRMAN. Please put in the record a statement showing the location of the offices.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.

NOTE.—The statement referred to is as follows:

Mr. O'DONNELL (continuing). There was one new position created from the first of the fiscal year, a special officer, who reports directly to the department, for investigative work, more particularly a specialist in investigating smuggling and other criminal or quasi-criminal doings on the part of interests which are undertaking to introduce Chinese aliens in violation of the law. He was formerly in the service; his services had been discontinued as a measure of economy, but it was deemed advisable and necessary to have him back.

The CHAIRMAN. What does he do?

Mr. O'DONNELL. He travels all over the United States in making investigations of the matters I have indicated, more particularly criminal matters, large smuggling enterprises, and things of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Smuggling what?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Chinese and other undesirable aliens; Chinese principally.

Secretary WILSON. If I may be permitted to supplement here; the information comes to us that a Chinaman imported into this country is worth from $500 to $1,000, and that there is a considerable trade carried on in smuggling Chinamen into this country. His duties are principally to run down those smuggling cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not have special Chinese inspectors?

Secretary WILSON. They do not engage exclusively in running down these smuggling cases. The Chinese inspectors handle legitimate business coming into the country. They are not detailed into strange places and out-of-the-way places for the purpose of running down smuggling cases.

The CHAIRMAN. A man who is not familiar with the Chinese business would never know whether a Chinaman was there or not.

Mr. O'DONNELL. The smuggling of Chinese in southern California is carried on not by dozens, but by the wholesale. They bring them in by boatloads or automobile loads. The officers in that section of the country are perhaps just as capable as they are in any other section, but they are not detectives, they are not experts in criminology, they have never been engaged or employed for the reason that they are detectives; it is a little bit out of their line. This man goes around in the capacity of an instructor in how to run down depredations of that kind. He is a former secret-service officer. He travels about the country and reports, as I said, directly to the department.

The CHAIRMAN. How much does he receive?

Mr. O'DONNELL. $3,000. That makes the total increase in the force authorized for this fiscal year $32,690.

Now, these new stations I have mentioned have naturally increased their expenses for upkeep. It has been necessary to increase the allotment of money to these districts to maintain these new buildings. At the New Orleans station that allotment has been increased for this year $1,550. The station cost $120,000. At Galveston the allotment has been increased $5,150.

The CHAIRMAN. How much altogether?

Mr. O'DONNELL. $9,585 for those four new stations.

The CHAIRMAN. It only costs $75,000?

Mr. O'DONNELL. That is a wooden building.

The CHAIRMAN. It is altogether very expensive; it is out on an island, and is submerged at high tide.

Mr. O'DONNELL. It is at least four times the size of the New Orleans station, which is built of reinforced concrete, and as a consequence you have four times the roof area, and you have a wooden building to keep up, which is more expensive than a concrete and brick building. I think I explained to you last year why they built it where they did, so in the event of another Galveston flood the building would float instead of drowning the immigrants like a lot of rats in a trap. That was the real reason.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a house-boat; it is not a building to float?

Secretary WILSON. My judgment is that it never should have been built there.

The CHAIRMAN. The information we have is that it is built on a sand bar, 15 or 20 feet above the surface of the sand, which is covered when they have a high tide.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I am only telling you what the report from the architect shows.

At the Philadelphia station we have taken care of practically all of that in the last year. We have increased the allotment this year $785. We estimate that to pay the miscellaneous expenses of the Chicago station during the four months of this fiscal year will cost $2,100. That makes a total of $9,985 increase on account of the new stations.

Section 24 of the immigration act gave the Secretary of Labor authority to employ certain men for the enforcement of the alien contract labor law. The total outlay for that object during the last fiscal year was $41,778.42. The obligations for the present fiscal year aggregate the whole amount authorized by section 24 of the act, to wit, $50,000. That is a difference of $8,281.58.

We have cut the allotments in some of these districts. For example, at the Ellis Island station we took their estimate for this fiscal year for ordinary upkeep and expenses and reduced it $100,000. The result has been that during this present fiscal year we have had no money to keep the station up—to keep up the buildings and to repair them.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do with the $100,000?

Mr. O'DONNELL. It has been scattered among the rest of the service. Part of it goes to make up the increase we are carrying right now. The Canadian border is about $7,000 behind in their allotment for traveling expenses and other items. Boston about $4,000. St. Louis, Mo., which has done a very large deporting business in the last year (that section of the country has seemed to have a great many undesirable immigrants—I can not tell you the number of deported cases we have had there), is $5,000 behind what they should have. Seattle, $4,000. There has been an influx of Hindus from the Philippines. Those Hindus have been arrested on departmental warrants, and we have one bill for maintaining one lot of them, the first lot which came, that ran over $3,000 for their maintenance until the warrant procedure can be concluded and they are returned.

The CHAIRMAN. Will not they be carried back?

Mr. O'DONNELL. No, sir. They were arrested under departmental warrants. They were not from a foreign country, but from the Philippine Islands. It is coastwise business. El Paso, Tex., $5,500. That may be explained in very large part in this way: The steamship companies have been bringing a large number of Chinese, thousands of them, into Lower California, Mexican territory, to work on certain plantations that are down there, particularly around a place called Mexicali. Those people, on account of the military operations down there, have been simply pouring over the border of southern California, and we have been kept very busy rounding them up and deporting them. We have spent in that way about $5,000 already this year, and they are still coming. Our transportation account is about $8,000 short for the year.

We have a deficiency therein of about $8,000. That, of course, is scattered. A large part of it will go, for example, in connection with the transportation and deportation of Chinese from southern California, and the large increase in deportation on departmental warrants means additional transportation, because even though the steamship companies take them from the seaboard, we must transport them and guard them from the interior points to the seaboard. The deportations for the entire fiscal year last year on warrants were 3,461, and for the first six months of this fiscal year they have been 2,359, or an increase of 28 per cent. It will be seen where that money has gone. I might say that it represents increased efficiency in ridding the country of undesirables. The grand total of the amounts which I have given you in detail is more than $95,000.

The CHAIRMAN. How much more?

Mr. O'DONNELL. $141,456.58. As against that, you gave us an increase of $25,000. Taking that off would make the difference about $116,000, but if you will give us the $95,000 we can get along.

The CHAIRMAN. You have $50,000 more than you used last year, $29,000 unexpended balance, plus $25,000 additional which we gave you, making $54,000. You have no right to employ persons and create deficiencies in this way. This appropriation must be apportioned under the antideficiency act. You can not take a lump appropriation like this and add a lot of services at the beginning of the year and create a deficiency.

Mr. O'DONNELL. But the Secretary was of the opinion, and I think he was right, that the act of Congress which directed the exclusion and deportation of such aliens was also to be observed, and he deemed it advisable, in his wisdom, to take the measures I have indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. For instance, you have 15 inspectors at Boston for 54,740 immigrants as against 80 at New York for 892,653 immigrants?

Mr. O'DONNELL. The service at Boston also handles the entire New England States in respect to the arrest and deportation of aliens.

The CHAIRMAN. What does that amount to?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I have not the figures with me. They do all this investigative work. The service at Ellis Island attends to itself: it does not do any outside investigative work. There is the Chinese business, which in the State of New York is under a separate jurisdiction.

The Ellis Island situation must be said to be self-contained, while Boston is the headquarters of a large district, and so the comparison is not an apt one.

The CHAIRMAN. How many inspectors are used in the purely inspection work at Boston?

Mr. O'DONNELL. The entire force is turned on the inspection work when the steamers are in.

The CHAIRMAN. They have nothing else to do when they are not handling this other work; otherwise there would not be any work?

Mr. O'DONNELL. They have this investigative work between steamers.

Mr. WATSON. The inspectors at Boston have to do their own typewriting and clerical work, whereas at Ellis Island they do not.

Secretary WILSON. Taking the existing conditions as compared with the conditions which existed when the estimate was submitted——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). we made an exhaustive investigation into the situation in regard to these two stations and the other work, and we found that the Immigration Service, for instance, is fixed to take care of the maximum number of immigrants that come in, and also that there was a tremendous falling off in immigration.

Secretary WILSON. There has been a tremendous increase in immigration, a larger number by far than there was during the preceding fiscal year. There has been a larger number over the Canadian border; there has been a larger number over the Mexican border; there have been unusual conditions on both sides of us; and in order to meet the situation we have increased this force, with this understanding and this in mind: That if Congress does not see fit to meet the deficiency we will have to cut down the force in accordance with the existing appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Please put in the record a statement showing the immigration for the last two or three years, the immigration up to the 1st of February of this year, and the receipts.

Mr. O'DONNELL. The receipts from the head tax in the last fiscal year were $2,000,000 more than the aggregate expenditures for the maintenance of the service. I can insert the table if you would like to have it:

Immigration to the United States.

During fiscal year:
1911	878,587
1912	838,172
1913	1,197,892
During 6 months ended Dec. 31, 1913	734,869

Moneys collected by Immigration Service.

During fiscal year:
1911	$3,759,174.97
1912	3,457,010.91
1913	4,818,805.28
During 6 months ended Dec. 31, 1913	3,009,033.33

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I carry no brief for the Department of Labor, and I know nothing as to the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York that money has been expended without authority of law; but I do know that I have been informed by those in authority, and who ought to know, that unless this additional appropriation is made the work along the border and at the immigration stations from now on, during the next four months, will be very much handicapped, indeed.

There is a reason why there has been a demand for excessive expenditures. Already more than 400,000 immigrants came in during the last 12 months more than did during the 12 months preceding. Now is the busy season of the year for the arrival of immigrants. From now on this will increase very greatly until the 1st of July.

I am informed by immigration officials that they are now seriously crippled in regard to careful and sufficient investigation of arrivals at Ellis Island. Of course, there are medical inspections the same as before, but there are many whom the inspectors themselves could detect and turn over to the medical inspectors for more careful medical inspection that to-day are coming in and landing finally in the insane asylums in New York and other States because of inadequate inspection.

I am informed that unless this appropriation is made some inspectors will have to be laid off; inspectors along the Canadian and Mexican borders will have to be discontinued.

As has been stated, the Mexican troubles have brought about a surreptitious immigration from that country more than has prevailed before. Gentlemen ought not to desire to punish the country, to punish the efficiency of the service, simply because they contend that some officials have not done right. It is not right for gentlemen to undertake to handicap the service, to prevent the proper inspection of these people that ought to be kept out, as far as they can be, although many escape, even with the best of service.

The head tax, Mr. Chairman, has netted more than $8,000,000 in excess of what it has cost to run the bureau since its creation. During the last two years more than $2,000,000 in excess of expenditures have been turned into the General Treasury. During the last six months more than a million dollars in excess of the expense of running the bureau have been turned into the general fund. The time was, up to a few years ago, when all the money that was derived from head tax and fines of steamship companies, and so forth, went into what was known as the immigration fund. That was repealed by a rider on an appropriation bill, which would no doubt have been subject to a point of order if it had been made.

When a service is giving such great returns to the country, when millions and millions of dollars accrue from it in excess of what it takes to run the service, certainly there ought not to be a curtailment of the necessary expenses to carry out the requirements of the law excluding inadmissible aliens.

A new immigration station was created last year at Chicago. That, I am informed, will entail an expenditure of $5,000 to $10,000 more than the amount provided for under the last appropriation. Other stations are coming on and the entries are increasing in numbers, and hence it is necessary that the bureau should be provided with necessary funds or else the service will suffer.

Under the poor restriction laws that we have, let not this committee curtail the work of turning back those who ought to be turned back and cripple the inspectors' work along the Canadian and Mexican borders. If officials of the bureau have erred—and I will not say one way or the other—do not visit punishment on the country, whose interests are at stake in this appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe for one moment that the Federal Government should look upon immigration as a source of revenue. It seems to me we can do no better act than to expend all this head-tax money on two propositions—first, to keep out the unfit, and second, in looking after those whom we welcome to our shores as being fit.

It is the pettiest policy imaginable to cut off support and supply in a matter which so vitally affects our welfare and our citizenship. It is easy to criticize officials here and there. They may or may not do their duty, but that performance or neglect should not lead to the denial of funds adequate to perform the designated functions of each bureau and department. If officials are unfit they should be fired. At the same time, we ought not to cripple any service by denying it adequate support. We should expend the receipts from the head tax and as much more as is needed in inspecting and caring for our immigrants. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. In connection with the proposed appropriation for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the gentleman from New York stated that certain money which had been appropriated for field service was used for service here in Washington, did he not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Is any such statement true in the present instance? Was any of the money appropriated originally for the Immigration Service used for any other service?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that there was none. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for the current year for all of the purposes specified in the pending amendment was $2,550,000. Last year the appropriation was $2,525,000, and there was an unexpended balance of $25,000. In 1912 the appropriation was $2,525,000, and there was an unexpended balance of $50,000. Although there was an unexpended appropriation of $50,000 in 1912, for 1913 $2,575,000, an increase of $50,000 was requested of Congress. The same amount was appropriated for 1913 as for 1912, and still there was an unexpended balance of $25,000. For the current year the estimate was $2,626,000, and there was appropriated $2,250,000.

If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] should be adopted, there would be appropriated not only the original estimate made by the department, but $19,000 in excess of what was originally asked. The gentleman from Illinois on a number of amendments offered by him has spoken of the attempts made to chloroform the Department of Labor, to gag and bind and hinder it in its work. I am not accustomed either to dealing or communicating with those who have had any experience in chloroforming methods, and if that is common to the gentleman from Illinois, it is not common to me. I know, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois does not represent either the Department of Labor or organized labor or men who have the interest of organized labor at heart when he speaks in a slighting and trivial manner of the violation of law by anybody. One of the things that has brought the labor movement in this country into contempt and under suspicion in the minds of a great many men has been a tendency to lawlessness upon the part of a few men, who took advantage of the power which they obtained in labor organizations.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will be gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment. For the gentleman from Illinois to treat as a trivial matter the violation of law by representatives of the Department of Labor, or to accuse Members of this House who are attempting to perform their duty, regardless of the effect their conduct may have upon themselves, as an attempt to chloroform a great department, is to set himself up as a censor which can not be justified. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield for an argument.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. And I have not said anything to justify the gentleman in saying that I acquiesce in any violation of law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. I yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. But the gentleman charged me with being in accord with a violation of law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will discuss that in a minute. If the gentleman wishes to ask a question, I will yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want to know why he takes the position that I favor a violation of law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I was referring to the gentleman's statement that it made little difference if the law had been violated by the officials of the department. The gentleman asked whether that was so, and for his benefit I desire to point out that Congress, because of the great abuse that existed in the executive departments a few years ago, was compelled to pass what are known as the antideficiency laws, which require appropriations such as this one to be apportioned so as to prevent the expenditure in one portion of the year of a greater sum than in another and to prevent a deficiency. This is one of the appropriations that come within the provisions of that law. The gentleman in charge of the administration stated that the appropriation had not been apportioned, and such apportionment had not been waived, as required by law. Not only must it be waived in writing by the head of the department, but the reasons for so doing must be transmitted to Congress. That has not been done. The gentleman is speaking of the efficiency of the present Department of Labor. I hope it is more efficient than it has ever been in its past history, but last year, with an appropriation of $25,000 less than for the current year, there was a surplus of $25,000, and in 1912, with an appropriation of $25,000 less than for the current year, there was a surplus of $50,000. It is expected that these services will be more efficient under Democratic officials than they have been under Republican officials.

Mr. MANN. By whom is it so expected?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not also true that in previous fiscal years immigration of all kinds to the United States was less than 1,000,000 and that this year it is 1,400,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but in the year of the greatest immigration the expenditure was not as large as it now is.

Mr. GARDNER. This is the year of greatest immigration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In 1907.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman confuses the fact that there is a new system of differentiating between immigrant aliens and nonimmigrant aliens. A number of aliens coming to the country this last year is greater than at any time in our history.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It makes no difference what the number of aliens coming to the country is. The force as established was never reduced because of a great falling off in immigration. The same force of inspectors, the same force of interpreters, the same force of physicians, and the same force of clerks were retained in the service, and there is now no excuse for increasing the force of inspectors. It might be that if some of the employees who are now being scattered through the country in the interior of the country as immigration inspectors——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a few minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If those employees were put on the border, there might be sufficient service.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman does not think that the Immigration Service has been overmanned, does he?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think, considering the immigration that came into the country, it was.

Mr. GARDNER. I should question that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman can explain in any other way the fact that when the immigration runs up to a million a certain force is retained, and when it falls off to 700,000 the same force is still retained, his contention may be sound, but I should say that it has been either overmanned or undermanned. The truth of the matter is that the number of immigrants does not of itself regulate the number of employees required. They require employees at certain places, and unless the number of immigrants coming to that place is so great that they have to work more than the required number of hours, it would be immaterial what the immigration is, because the employee is stationed in that position, and he either works or does not, as the number coming in may require.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that this money is required. So far as the exclusion of the Chinese referred to are concerned, up to two or three years ago there was carried a separate appropriation of $500,000 for the enforcement of the Chinese exclusion act. That appropriation was consolidated with the general appropriation and the appropriation for the enforcement of the contract-labor law. The purpose of consolidating them, as pointed out at the time, was because when the Chinese violations would be large the men could be diverted to that work from other places where they would not otherwise be required. There has never been a situation where there has been such a greatly increased volume of work along every line that would require this increase. This simply means that if this appropriation is made that Congress shall not determine what the service shall cost, but that it shall be determined by the particular individual in charge of the service itself, and there is no limit to the extent to which this appropriation will grow. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, while it may be true that the Immigration Department has received larger appropriations over the present fiscal year than it did during 1913, there is not any question in my mind as to the increase in the work through a number of causes. In 1912 the total number of immigrants that entered this country was 838,172. In 1913 it was 1,097,869, and in the 6 months ending December 31, 1913, we have admitted 734,869. If that ratio keeps up during the 6 months of this current fiscal year, the total number of immigrants will amount to 1,469,738, or 271,869 more than during the year 1913. Now, that brings in additional revenue to this country through the Immigration Service. The $1,359,340 of revenue that is brought into the country does not cut any figure in connection with this appropriation, but it seems strange to me with two hundred and seventy-odd thousand immigrants coming into this country that we expend the same amount of money during 1913 and 1914 as compared with the number admitted during 1912 and 1913. There is no doubt in my mind but what they must have an additional force to carry on the work of the department. We have provided by law for additional stations. We have provided for new immigration stations at New Orleans, at Galveston, at Charleston, S. C., and at Chicago. Twenty thousand dollars was appropriated for rent and furnishing of the Chicago station, and on account of a shortage of money in the Department of Immigration the station at Chicago has not been manned up to date. It has been absolutely valueless.

Now, there is another feature in connection with the work of this department in the past year. The Immigration Service has been cooperating with the State Department and the War Department along the Mexican border, and the officials of the Immigration Service have been of considerable value to this Government in patrolling the Mexican border. I have that statement from the Commissioner General of Immigration, that they have done considerable work there which necessitated the expenditure of a good deal of money. The man who has charge of the Immigration Service on the border has had to go from one point to another at the command of his superiors; the railway fare has been considerable, and he has had to take his inspectors and guards along the Mexican line, and it caused the Immigration Service considerable trouble. Recently the Commissioner General of Immigration in his annual report has called attention to the fact that a good deal of money has been spent not alone on the Mexican border but on the Canadian line to keep out Hindus, Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens we have legislated against. Chinese that have been brought to this country in transit sent through California and Arizona into Mexico have come over the line in droves, and the Immigration Service of this country has had to spend considerable money in keeping them out. Now, there is no question but that the expenses of the Immigration Service have been increased from time to time on account of the connection that service has with other services where they have had increased work. This $75,000 has not been urged over and above what they had last year. According to the way I read the testimony of Mr. O'Donnell, they have had $25,000 surplus in 1912–13, but they have had so much additional work to take care of during the years 1913–14, and this $95,000 is estimated by the Department of Labor as needed for the Immigration Service. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. GARDNER and Mr. TOWNER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is recognized.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the law attempts to prevent the heads of the departments from creating deficiencies, and it was a good motive which inspired Congress to pass that law. Generally, when it is necessary to incur a deficiency, it is true that the heads of departments, as I understand it, usually comply with the provision of the law which requires them to give their reasons in writing when they permit their subordinates to exceed the appropriation. Am I correct in that? They generally give their reasons in writing, do they not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think the law is generally violated under any circumstances.

Mr. GARDNER. There are a great many exceptions to the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law provides a way by which apportionment can be waived.

Mr. GARDNER. That is what I said. I said usually the law has been complied with. In other words, the head of the department has given the requisite waiver, and has reported his reasons in writing. It is true on this occasion that the Secretary of Labor did not do so, and to that extent he is at fault.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not seem to remember that in former days the Bureau of Immigration did not have its money appropriated to it by Congress as other bureaus had their money appropriated. The head of that service took the money received from head taxes and expended it exceedingly liberally, and, to my mind, exceedingly efficiently. With some misgivings, I myself, three or four years ago, consented to a change in the law under which I am continually told by the immigration officials that the bureau is cramped. Nowadays that bureau gets its appropriations annually in the same way that other bureaus get their appropriations. Yet so peculiar is the rising and falling of the flood of immigration, and so ever changing are the requirements of the immigration stations that the bureau is continually hampered in adjusting its expenses to its appropriation. Sometimes the appropriation is too great. Now, the gentleman thinks that the cost of enforcing the immigration law does not diminish when immigration falls off. I assure him that he is mistaken.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. GARDNER. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. In 1912 the immigration was 838,172 and in 1913 the immigration was 1,197,892, or something more than 300,000 greater, and yet the expenditure was about $25,000 greater only. Now, the same ratio of increase would be taken care of by the increased appropriation which was given last year.

Mr. GARDNER. The ratio of increase in the country would be about taken care of by the $95,000 which it is intended to appropriate.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, but the gentleman forgets we gave them $50,000 over what they spent last year.

Mr. GARDNER. I do not forget it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I supposed you did, because that is the only way your mathematics could tally.

Mr. GARDNER. I am not sure about that. Possibly the gentleman is making the same mistake the chairman of the committee made a few minutes ago in confusing immigrant aliens with the immigration of aliens. Immigrant aliens, to be sure, in the fiscal year ending 1913 amounted only to 1,197,892. The total number of aliens who came to this country during that year and were taken care of at our immigration stations was 1,427,227. The gentleman shakes his head, but I am sure he is mistaken.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not shake my head at the gentleman's statement.

Mr. GARDNER. I did not refer to the gentleman from Kentucky. I referred to the gentleman behind him, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think the gentleman could tell which way my head was wagging. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is entirely different——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GARDNER. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman and myself wish to have all of these services maintained efficiently. I do not know if the gentleman is aware of the fact that the estimates for the next fiscal year for this service is $2,910,000, an increase of $300,000 over what is asked for the current year. Having some knowledge of the way these things go, it is very apparent that if the department is to be permitted to determine for itself how much it will spend, the appropriations will grow more rapidly than even its friends are anxious to have them grow.

Mr. GARDNER. I quite agree with the gentleman as to that. I also predict, if the pending immigration bill becomes a law, the requirements are such that there will be a deficiency over what the gentleman may decide to allow for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the so-called Burnett bill becomes the law, my recollection is it is estimated it will take $1,000,000 to enforce it.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman may or may not be correct. But what I wished to bring to his attention was this: I think he is entirely mistaken in supposing that this service is overmanned. I think it is undermanned. I think that during the hours in which they work those inspectors work harder than almost any other employees of the United States Government. I feel that they could do a great deal more than they do if there were more of them. I think in the interest of the immigrant a great deal could be found out about him that is not found out, a great deal could be found out about his relations that is not found out. I think when it comes to a question of deportation, if the bureau had more money it could deport those who ought to be deported and abstain from deporting those who ought not to be deported.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is recognized.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I can hardly understand the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], if I heard him correctly, when he said he did not think that the increase of immigration would result in increased expenditures. It occurs to me that such a result is almost necessarily true, in view of the provisions already in existence in our law. Under existing law we have to determine as to whether the insane are coming in, which is prohibited under the law; as to whether or not those mentally or physically defective are coming in. We have to determine a great many matters of that kind, which require special and particular investigation by experts, and it seems to me almost self-evident that the larger the number the greater help and the longer the time of service that would be required for this service. Again, the bill which has already passed this House will strengthen those requirements along all of the lines that I have mentioned.

Besides, it will require, in addition, the imposition of the literacy test, which the department estimates will add $1,000,000 to the annual cost of enforcing the immigration law. I do not know whether I speak correctly or not, but as I understand it, if this were passed—that is, if the new immigration law were in a short time to become effective—during the remainder of this fiscal year it would be in operation, and large additional requirements would be certainly brought upon the department in order to meet and effectively enforce the new provisions of the law.

It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that we must give some credit to these heads of departments and heads of bureaus in regard to these things as we have heard them discussed here, these matters that have been referred to. As one without special knowledge of the workings of this department, it has seemed to me that the bureau was entirely justified in asking for this additional deficiency appropriation, and therefore I shall favor this amendment that is offered to the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, performs an unpleasant and sometimes a very disagreeable duty in endeavoring to protect the Treasury, and sometimes, possibly, he unduly endeavors to protect the Treasury. There is one thing which the gentleman from New York, I think, does not fully appreciate, and that is that under a Democratic administration it will cost more to operate the Government than under a Republican administration. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from New York expresses great surprise that, although we have a large increase in immigration from 1912 to 1913, it took only $25,000 to perform the duties of the service; but now there is asked more than $100,000 additional for the current fiscal year. I am not surprised at all at the size, except at its smallness.

It is undoubtedly true in all the branches of the Government that it takes more to run the Government under a Democratic administration than it did under Republican administrations. In every branch of the service, in every department of the Government, they are asking for increased appropriations to perform the same service. And while we were told during the campaign and in advance of the campaign how the Democrats, coming into power, would reduce the expenditures of the Government, yet we all know, as a matter of fact, that the expenditures have been constantly increasing. And these deficiency items that have been presented here to-day by my colleague from Chicago [Mr. BUCHANAN] are ample evidence of the inability of the Democratic administration to perform the service in the same satisfactory manner without a great increase in cost.

But after all, Mr. Chairman, a man is not to be blamed for being a Democrat if he does not know any better. [Laughter on the Republican side.] The Democratic administration is in power. Here is a service that needs to be performed. Even when they perform it in an extravagant manner we can not stop the service. Although it is said the Secretary of Labor inadvertently, inadvisedly, has violated the law, still the service must be performed. The immigrants must receive attention, and the people of the country will appreciate the fact that if they prefer a Democratic administration, as they did at the last election, they must pay the expenses. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I remarked earlier in the day, in the course of some remarks, that it would cost much more to conduct the Government under a Democratic administration if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] continued to deliver the votes on that side of the House to aid some gentlemen on this side of the House who, regardless of the pledges that have been made by the Democratic Party, looking only in a narrow and selfish way at the things they were interested in, are endeavoring to override the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations in these matters. Later in the session a different song will be sung. I hope it will not be one that will disappoint the country and disappoint the party; but I do know that if we are to accept the statements of the heads of departments, regardless of their politics, as to their needs and the amount that should be expended in the conduct of every branch of the public service, then all promises of economy will be broken and the record that will be made by this House will not be to the credit but will be to the everlasting damnation of the Democratic Party.

Mr. MANN. That is sure. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 42.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois and Mr. FITZGERALD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 42.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 12, on page 30, add as a new paragraph the following: "For supplying and furnishing a temporary quarantine station at Providence, R. I., the sum of $25,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. It is not germane. The Public Health Service is carried on pages 9 and 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Rhode Island desire to be heard?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that this amendment is not in order. It is not germane. The Public Health Service is carried in a different part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Rhode Island wish to be heard?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do. I merely wish to ask unanimous consent that we may return to the page indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in order that I may offer my amendment. I would not make this application if it were not for the urgency of the matter, which I will be pleased to explain to the committee if opportunity is afforded.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall have to object to that. No estimates have come from the department for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] asks unanimous consent to return to page 9 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE.

MONUMENT TO COMMEMORATE THE WOMEN OF THE CIVIL WAR.

The commission under whose direction the expenditures are to be made for the site and memorial authorized by the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved October 22, 1913, to commemorate the service and sacrifices of the women of the United States, North and South, for the sick and wounded in war, shall consist of the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, and the president of the American Red Cross.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this provision follows the statute law and provides that one member of the commission shall consist of "the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress," and then inserts the words "the chairman of the House Committee on the Library." The language "the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress" is the language in the existing law, but there is no such committee and no such title. There is recognized in the law, though not provided for by the rules, a joint committee of Congress upon the library; and while this may be highly technical, I see no reason why by amending it we could not put in the proper description if we put in anything at all. The custom is, however, in these bills to say, "the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library and the chairman of the House Committee on the Library." That is the proper language.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman understands the purpose of this.

Mr. MANN. I understand that it is to add the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, which I think is proper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to offering an amendment to strike out the word "joint" and substitute the word "Senate."

Mr. MANN. And leave out the words "of Congress."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. I move to strike out the word "joint," in line 23, page 30, and the words "of Congress" and to insert in lieu of the word "joint" the word "Senate."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 23, strike out the word "joint," at the beginning of the line, and also strike out the words "of Congress," after the word "Library," and insert in lieu of the word "joint" the word "Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

To pay the widow of William H. Wilder, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, $7,500.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, after line 3, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"To pay the father of I. S. Pepper, late a Representative from the State of Iowa, $7,500."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves a point of order.

Mr. SISSON. I want to state, for the benefit of the gentleman from Iowa, my purpose in reserving the point of order. These are gratuities which Congress has heretofore paid to the widows and children of deceased Congressmen. This amendment proposes a departure. My information—and it is what others say and not what I know—is that the father of Mr. Pepper is not in any sense of the word dependent upon him; that he is a man of some means, and I do not believe we ought to make a departure now. I reserve the point of order, however, for the present.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, these two items in the bill are, as the gentleman from Mississippi well states, merely gratuities. I recognize the fact that the item I have offered is subject to a point of order; but I want to submit that if it is to be the policy of Congress to indulge in these gratuities we should not scrutinize too closely the pocketbook of the person to whom they are granted. The facts are that the father of I. S. Pepper is not a well-to-do man by any means. I was asked some time ago by a member of the committee, or by one of the clerks, with regard to the matter, and I told him I did not know; but I immediately instituted an investigation to find out the condition of the finances of the father of the late Representative from the second Iowa district. The facts are that he has a small home in the outskirts of the city of Ottumwa, and that our late colleague, Mr. Pepper, and his brother, who is a physician, have for a number of years been giving to their father and their mother, until her death, something for their support; how much I have been unable to ascertain. Other members of the family may have contributed. Mr. Pepper is a man of very limited means, and it seems to me that when we appropriate, as we do year after year, money to the widows of deceased Members of Congress, oftentimes giving it to widows who have been left very large fortunes, never raising any question about it, we ought not to investigate the question whether the dependency of Mr. Pepper's father goes to the extent that he would have to mortgage his home in order to buy the necessities of life.

His little home is not worth more than $2,000 or $3,000, and for a number of years his children contributed to the support of their father and mother. A short time ago I saw an item in the newspapers giving what purported to be the last will and testament of the late Mr. Bremner, in which half of his estate was given to a brother or a sister. In view of the fact that we propose to pay to Mr. Bremner's widow $7,500, I think we ought not to raise any question about the amendment which I have offered. Mr. Bremner left a portion of his estate to a brother or sister, not dependent in any sense.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the age of Mr. Pepper, sr.?

Mr. GOOD. He must be upward of 70 years of age.

Mr. TOWNER. He is 76 years old.

Mr. GOOD. He is an old man, broken in health, without any other property, and I do hope that my friend from Mississippi will not make the point of order. He well knows that the item that follows is also subject to a point of order. This is a worthy amendment, and I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order against it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Pepper, the father of our late colleague and friend, is a man well up in years; they say about 70 years old.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is stated that he is 76 years old.

Mr. SISSON. He is a man who has nobody dependent upon him. His wife is dead. My information from a gentleman sitting on this floor, who knows the facts, is that he is a man in easy circumstances, not in any sense of the word dependent upon his son. This is a departure. These other gratuities have been given to members of deceased Congressmen's families dependent upon them for support.

These painful duties devolve upon somebody. I do not know that Congress is doing altogether the proper thing in granting these other gratuities; I am unwilling that they shall be enlarged upon.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. MANN. I take it the gentleman has looked up the matter. What has been the practice of Congress? Has it been to pay only the widow or children, or those dependent?

Mr. SISSON. The widow or children, or those absolutely dependent upon the Congressman.

Mr. MANN. I was under the impression that we had paid the personal representatives of a deceased Member, and that we always paid the money, on account of the death of each Member.

Mr. SISSON. The clerk of the committee, who is more familiar with the history of these things than any of us, having been here so long, informs me that in a few rare cases where the sisters of a Congressman have lived with him and have been dependent upon him for support, as members of his household, have been paid the year's salary, but in no case have we ever departed from that rule, and I am unwilling that the precedent shall be set now.

I do not think that men are always understood. I performed what I thought to be a duty the other day. It was painful to me, but I thought I was right and did it. I do not like to do these things, because we all have great sympathy with people in distress or bereavement. But the money of the people in the Treasury ought to be cared for and guarded. I appreciate the efforts of my good friend from Iowa and I sympathize with him.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman's attention was attracted in another direction when I made the statement that Mr. Pepper had supported, or contributed to the support, together with his brother, of his father. I would like to know the source of the gentleman's information.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is sitting on the floor, and if he does not care to have his name mentioned I shall not mention it myself. In order to end the matter, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman withhold it for a moment?

Mr. SISSON. I will withhold it.

Mr. TOWNER. I am quite sure that the gentleman from Mississippi is mistaken about what really is the point of his objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the widow of R. G. Bremner, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey, $7,500.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to inquire if the widow of our late Member from New Jersey is dependent. If we are to establish a rule here, let it be an equitable rule. I do not know whether the information I received from Iowa in response to the letter I wrote to Ottumwa to find out the financial standing of Mr. Pepper was correct or not. But when the gentleman states that the Member of Congress is sitting on the floor who knows positively the circumstances of Mr. Pepper and that they are at variance with the statements I have made I think, in all fairness, that that Member ought to stand up and state what his financial circumstances are. If I have been misinformed, I do not wish to do an injustice to any person who might be the recipient of other provisions in this bill. But I do say, Mr. Chairman, that I understand that Mr. Bremner's estate amounted to a considerable sum of money, a part of which was left to his brother. Now, if this old gentleman out in the State of Iowa, who has had the support of his son for years, can not receive something of the gratuity granted by Congress time after time, if he must be singled out and not given this sum, then I want to know why we should continue this gratuity.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the gentleman that it was not altogether on account of the condition of the father that caused me to make the point of order. It is solely because it is a departure from what has been the universal rule and custom in Congress. The question of the amount of money which the widow and children of a Member may have has never cut one particle of a figure. We ought to do it I expect, but the inquiry has never been made so far as I know. It has been given as a matter of course, as a matter of gratuity to the widow and children. That far Congress has been going, and I do not see that it was fit and proper to break that precedent. I do not want to engraft any new precedents on that rule.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Now, just a word about what has taken place. To my mind it seems strange, when the $7,500 would have been paid to a Member if he does not come here at all—even for a single day. [Laughter.] And now for a gentleman to raise the question that on account of his passing away he can not be paid this amount of money, I can not appreciate it.

The gentleman from Mississippi the other day stated on the floor of the House that a law could not be suspended. We have a law here prohibiting the paying of a salary to an absent Member. That was suspended for many, many years, by consent of the gentleman from Mississippi, by consent of every Member here present.

The gentleman from Illinois offered a resolution yesterday expelling a Member on account of his holding two positions, when the law, if enforced by Congress, would have settled the matter, because the minute you take away the salary there is nothing to the position. [Laughter.]

Now, for the gentleman from Mississippi to rise here at the death of a Member and raise the question of pay, to my mind, is far-fetched when he will not rise in his seat and object to the paying of a Member that is never here. And that Member stated here publicly, addressing the Chair, that he received the largest salary of anyone in the United States, except the Speaker and the Secretary of State, in the lecturing business outside the Halls of Congress. He does that without the objection of the gentleman from Mississippi or the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. There are some here who would be willing to contribute to the payment of the $7,500.

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowance to the following contestants and contestees for expenses incurred by them in contested-election cases, audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections No. 1, namely:
H. Olin Young, $2,000;
William J. MacDonald, $2,000;
John M. C. Smith, $2,000;
Claude S. Carney, $2,000;
Walter M. Chandler, $500;
In all, $8,500.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I could not find anything in relation to these items in the hearings. Was this money actually expended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statute provides for the payment up to $2,000 to the contestee and the contestant provided it is certified by the chairman of one of the election committees. All these sums were certified by the chairman of one of the committees on election whose duty it is to audit the claims.

Mr. COX. They have been certified in all these cases, have they?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have certified to these sums and the committee included them in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the Department of Labor, $3,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 18, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$8,000."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this is very necessary for the Labor Department to print the publications it has now prepared. The Secretary of Labor could not print a sufficient number of his own reports, on account of a lack of funds, to supply the Members of Congress even. It is important that this money should be appropriated for general printing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the Department of Labor had $84,000 for printing the current year, transferred from the Department of Commerce under the provisions of the last deficiency appropriation act. It requested $8,000 additional in this bill. The committee recommended it be given $3,000, and in addition inserted a provision in this bill permitting the use of large quantities of special paper which is on hand in the Bureau of Naturalization in connection with the printing of its forms. Heretofore it had been the practice of this bureau to purchase its own paper and to send it to the Printing Office and have it printed. By a decision of the Attorney General all paper must be purchased by the Printing Office. This paper which would otherwise have been sold as condemned stores by the provision which has already been passed can now be used, and it will not be necessary to draw on the printing fund for that purpose. When the question of the segregation of the two funds between the Departments of Commerce and Labor was under discussion, the Secretary of Commerce stated that when the adjustment was made he and the Secretary of Labor were present, and the adjustment was satisfactory to all concerned. His attention was called to the fact that the Department of Labor complained that it had not received the proper proportion in certain cases, whereupon he stated that in any instances in which that department showed that it had not received the funds to which it was entitled, he would upon their pointing that out direct the transfer of the sums they believed they were entitled to. With this appropriation the Department of Labor will have for printing this year $87,000, in addition the use of the paper already appropriated.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What do they print with all that money?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have a number of bulletins and publications of various kinds; but the committee believed that for the current year $87,000 is ample.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if they do not have to print a large number of blanks for the Immigration Service?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and for the Naturalization Service; and they print a number of various kinds of bulletins; but $87,000 worth of blanks and bulletins seems quite a large quantity, and the committee believes the amount ample for the work of the department at this time.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I notice in the hearings, on page 397, a statement that there is a deficit of $5,000 at the present time in the office of the Secretary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, they say they have a deficit, but I do not know how they can create a deficit.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. What is the balance of $22,000 to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what they said they had on hand; and the amount of money that is given them for printing will regulate the amount of printing they do. Depending upon whether they get three, eight, or ten thousand dollars, the more that is given to them the more they will print. The committee wanted to be fair with the department and gave them, in addition to the $84,000 which is already available this year, $3,000, which is for the balance of the fiscal year, and also inserted the provision which enables the use of the paper now on hand. It seems to me that $87,000 for printing and binding in a new department of the Government should certainly be enough.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The allotment of $84,000 for printing in this department is used also by the Commissioner General of Immigration as well as by the Department of Labor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is used by the Department of Labor for all of its bureaus.

Mr. RAKER. I was down to the Department of Labor about a week ago and I found the Commissioner General of Immigration with a brief in an important case, unable to print the brief because they had not enough money to print it with.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But briefs in important cases are not to be printed out of a fund supplied to the Department of Labor. We furnish printing appropriations for the Department of Justice. Briefs are not printed out of this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. In the case to which I refer the Commissioner General under the law may appear personally, and the brief was prepared by him personally, and he expected to appear before the court.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What kind of a case was it?

Mr. RAKER. An immigration case. I have a copy of the brief in my papers, and I was going to try and have it printed as a public document in the RECORD so we can have it used.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am glad the gentleman has stated that, because I shall try to prevent its being printed at the expense of Congress. We have a great Department of Justice, which costs many millions of dollars a year, to attend to our law work.

Mr. RAKER. I have been waiting my opportunity and have not seen it open yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The idea of having briefs to be presented to courts printed out of this printing allotment in a department, if it were allowed, would bring about a condition where every department would want to print things that belonged to other departments out of its own appropriation. Why not send the brief to the Department of Justice?

Mr. RAKER. The Department of Justice has its own matters to attend to. The Department of Labor has its matters, and it has a right to represent the case with its own counsel and to appear in court. I simply make this suggestion to show the necessity for money in order that these matters might be cleared up and printed, in order that it might be properly presented in court, with the records properly printed, as well as documents that they have down there now which one can not get because they have no money with which to print them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was a balance of $22,000 on hand when the gentleman was down there, and if this were of such imperative importance there was ample money there to print that brief.

Mr. RAKER. Let us give them enough to do the work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are giving them enough. Perhaps we have made a mistake in recommending $3,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to reconcile the statement in the hearings and the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to the balance of $22,000. The statement is explicitly made in the hearings that there is a deficit of $5,000 in the Labor Department. I have had some opportunity to test that, having endeavored to secure a supply of bulletins of a certain kind for the use of constituents. I was unable to get them, the explanation being that the funds provided were not sufficient to pay for the publication of the required quantity. I notice that there are a number of bulletins which should be printed, bulletins of the utmost importance, especially in industrial districts, bulletins with reference to the question of accident prevention and other kindred topics. If we are to know the truth regarding conditions industrially, it seems to me we should have a department properly equipped to give the knowledge desired. I have introduced a bill in this House for the appointment of a commission on social insurance, which would use the very facts which should be provided and published in these bulletins. For instance, there is no accurate statement in any governmental publication as to the number of fatal accidents in the industrial establishments of this country. You can not state within 100,000 of how many cases of nonfatal accidents there have been in the mines, mills, and factories during the past year. Some estimate that there are 500,000 a year; others, 2,000,000 a year. It seems to me we ought to have definite information on such an important question and that it should be presented to the public.

Mr. Chairman, I stand for the most widespread knowledge possible in the realm of industrial affairs. We need it here, and every citizen needs it, for the industrial life of this Nation is tangled and clouded by ignorance and misunderstanding. Most of our notions of what public policy should be are heritages from days when the gigantic industrial establishments of to-day were unknown. We have tried to solve new problems in the old ways, forgetting that new occasions teach new duties and that the blood-rusted key of the past will not open the portals of a new era.

Out of this ignorance has come a kind of helplessness, which is evidenced by the multitudinous measures introduced into this Congress to correct various maladjustments. We recognize that there is something wrong; that conditions are unjust; that life and limb and health are being sacrificed in reckless carelessness, and each man has a measure which he hopes will solve the particular phase of the problem in which he is most interested.

Still, if we pause to consider, we will be forced to realize that no piecemeal treatment will solve the problems of America's industrial system. No party or sect or organization can solve it single handed. It is a question too big for President or Congress or court. No solution is possible until the country understands the question thoroughly, for it must be settled by the American people.

For that reason I believe that the facts should be put within the reach of every citizen, and I know of no more important duty resting on Congress than that. The best intentions in the world and all the courage needed will not take the place of an intelligent understanding of the situation. The light must be turned on, for we need a flashlight far more than a muckrake at this time. Not only is it necessary to realize that something is wrong, but it is necessary to know just what is wrong and the reason for the condition.

Careful diagnosis is the first step toward the intelligent application of any remedial agency and diagnosis presupposes exact knowledge. No matter what the remedy is, the facts must come first, for any solid foundation must be that of the facts.

Therefore it seems to me that every encouragement should be given the publication of these bulletins of the Department of Labor, which give the facts collected by careful and accurate work. The list of bulletins given in the hearings is a comprehensive one and shows the vital value of the work being done. The titles include Woman and Child Labor in the United States; Wages and Hours of Labor; Retail and Wholesale Prices, 1890 to 1913; Minimum Wage Legislation; Labor Laws of the United States; Employers' Welfare Work; Hygiene of the Painters' Trade; Workmen's Compensation Laws; Accidents and Accident Prevention; and many others of equal importance.

I contend that no effort is too great in order to secure the facts and almost any expenditure of money is justified to put those facts before the American people. Such action will help to answer the question of why in this land of ours, with its wonderful resources and possibilities and hopes, there exists such widespread unrest and dissatisfaction. If the Labor Department can do this, and I believe it can with proper help from Congress, it will help to clear up the confusion that exists and will perform an incalculable service to the Nation. It will furnish the basis of knowledge upon which constructive action must rest, and it is within the realm of possibility that it may, by studying and defining and publishing the facts, direct the solution of the problems arising out of our industrial relations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Division!

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, nobody rose to call for a division.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I asked for a division, but I withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 18, after the figures "3,000," insert "for printing for the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor, $28,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the item, that under the law all printing for the department must be made out of its allotment, and this is a specific appropriation, which is in violation of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 33, line 18, strike out the figures "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 18, strike out the figures "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have not consulted my attorney, and I have some fear I may make some remarks that would leave my friend from New York under the impression that I am encouraging a violation of the law. I feel quite courageous this afternoon, however, and I will take the chances by again asking for what I consider is very important for the Department of Labor. I have offered an amendment here to enable the Department of Labor to secure the printing of some important publications, the titles of some of which I desire to read. These are about ready for printing and can not be printed on account of a lack of money. I desire to mention the titles of some of these publications, and Members will understand what they mean by their titles.

Bulletins now ready for printing or which will be ready and ought to be printed before June 30, 1914

The labor laws have not been compiled since 1907, and it is important information for the labor people of the country. The financial condition is such, understand, gentlemen, that after going to the work to compile these, and everything is practically done but the printing, they lie there and can not be used because there are not sufficient funds for printing them. Are you going to let a condition of that kind obtain, or are you going to appropriate money sufficient for this department to print these publications that are of such great value and importance to the people of the country?

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The persistent request of the Department of Labor and its bureau heads for money necessary to bring up its arrearages and provide for the additional work made necessary by the increased number of immigrants, abnormal conditions in Mexico, and other emergencies has been completely ignored by the Committee on Appropriations, and all this is covered up by an item giving $230,000 to a building contract for Ellis Island, N. Y. Thus, while the department seems to be getting much it gets little or nothing—a bare $5,000 as a department, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics gets nothing. The Bureau of Labor Statistics under the present administration has inherited a trail of arrearages, not only in its work but in its funds to print the reports as prepared. Those at present in charge of that bureau have a right to a chance to start even.

I here desire to insert the following statement from Mr. Ethelbert Stewart, the able chief clerk of the Bureau of Labor Statistics:

STATEMENT OF REASONS FOR REQUEST FOR URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION FOR BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS, DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

JANUARY 29, 1914.

The miscellaneous expense fund of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, for which this deficiency appropriation is asked, constitutes the working capital of the bureau. From this fund all the expenses of our investigations, such as railroad fares, per diem to employees in the field, and salaries of all temporary employees, must be paid. It is our only working fund. The appropriation for 1914 was $64,090. On January 15, 1914, with practically one-half of the fiscal year unexpired, the working balance in this fund is $12,377.27, or less than one-fifth of the total, and this total is a reduction of $16,000 from the amount asked for under this fund for the year 1914.

The estimate of $29,015 for this bureau, to be included in the emergency deficiency appropriation, is made necessary by the fact that a like request was omitted from the appropriation by the special session of the Sixty-third Congress. In the original estimates for the fiscal year 1914 an increase of $47,490 over the estimates for 1913 was urged. This increase was not granted, but the development and extension of some of the work of this bureau was deemed imperative and has proceeded as far as possible. The annual investigations into wholesale prices and rates of wages, which constitute two of the regular lines of work of this bureau, have been revised, and arrangements are well under way, through the cooperation of foreign labor departments with this bureau, to inaugurate a uniform and comparable system of international price and wage reports. Money is needed to further perfect this arrangement and carry it into effect, also to extend and perfect the investigations into wages and hours of labor, and the working conditions and wages of women in industry.

The extension of the work of the women in industry division has been forced upon the bureau by reason of the urgent demands for assistance or cooperation from the various States and by the constantly increasing requests for information.

The growing demand for detailed information as to unemployment, wages, and hours of labor in an ever-widening range of industries has made the expansion of the wage inquiries of the bureau imperative.

The necessity for cooperation with other bureaus and commissions in such parts of their work as specially belong to the functions of this bureau, such as the wages and labor conditions in an industry, places special strain upon the finances of this bureau, and this in an unsual degree during the balance of this present fiscal year, occasioning unforeseen drains upon the financial resources already overstrained. To be more specific on this particular point, we are at this very time in a serious difficulty growing out of this urgency for cooperation with other bureaus in matters of vital concern to us. Under date of January 29, 1914, the Secretary of Commerce wrote the Secretary of Labor as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 29, 1914.

The SECRETARY OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In further reference to the proposed cooperation of the Department of Labor with this department in such phases of the investigation of the cost of production in the clothing industry as lie within the interest of your department, as proposed in my letter of January 20, I have the honor to inform you that at a recent informal conference held between the representatives of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of this department and the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor it was agreed that recommendation be made that so much of the work of investigating the cost of production of certain commodities as can be more conveniently done by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, namely, the securing of data concerning the rates of wages, hours of labor, and other labor conditions affecting the cost of production be transferred to the latter bureau, and that the two bureaus cooperate to such an extent that as nearly as practicable the same establishments will be covered by their respective investigations.

This recommendation meets with my approval, and if you approve it also it is proposed that the following items now on this department's schedules of inquiry for the investigation of the cost of production of clothing be eliminated from those schedules, and that the Department of Labor include them in its concurrent investigations. * * *

In addition to the above items of inquiry to be transferred from the cost schedules of this department, it is proposed that the Department of Labor take up the collection of statistics of wages and hours of labor in the same branches of the clothing industry that are now being studied by this department, and as nearly as practicable in the same establishments.

It is also recommended that the Department of Labor collect such data concerning the general characteristics of the labor supply, the cost of living, factory hygiene, sanitation and safety, and other labor conditions in the clothing industry as may be of interest in this connection.

With regard to the publication of the material to be obtained by the two departments, it is proposed that each department publish its own information, and that the Department of Commerce will be at liberty to use such part of the published information of the Department of Labor as it may desire to complete its reports on the cost of production, provided that due credit is given concerning the source of the data so used.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

This is in conformity with the general purpose to have the Bureau of Labor Statistics cover the wages feature of industries being investigated by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for cost of production purposes. In other words, the Bureau of Labor Statistics is recognized, it is fair to say, as the best equipped to handle all labor and wages questions, and it must be prepared to do this line of work when done by the Government at all.

Again, the law directs that there shall be cooperation with the Commission on Industrial Relations. Up to date this has meant that the division of the bureau handling investigations concerning women in industry has necessarily been increased, and the field work in this division has been augmented, with accompanying increase in expense. These requests could not be ignored, but all of this must be done at the expense of our regular work. Requests for cooperative work with State bureaus and commissions have been declined, except in the case of Indiana, because of lack of funds. This is doubly unfortunate, because in case of cooperation the work thus performed would be on a basis that would make the work done by the States comparable with the work of this bureau, greatly enhancing its value both to the State bureaus and to this bureau.

The civic waste this involves is deserving a moment's consideration. There are now 38 State bureaus of labor or permanent industrial commissions; 9 States have minimum-wage commissions, and several States have temporary industrial commissions. All of these are conducting investigations along lines in which the experience of the Bureau of Labor Statistics especially fits it to be a counselor and guide, and such guidance is frequently, in fact, generally, asked. If it could be given, it would mean that most, if not all, work done by State authority would be done on a plan which would fit in with similar work done in other States and by the Federal bureau, so that the results would be comparable, combinable, and mutually strengthened. In a short time a practical uniformity of method could be established. As it is, each State and each commission, board, or bureau in each State is going its own way, and in most cases the work of one such body can not be compared with the work of any other. Only the Bureau of Labor Statistics can bring order out of this chaos, for only this Bureau is invited to do so, and it is barred from assisting in preventing this waste of effort by lack of funds. Just now invitations to cooperate from Connecticut and from Pennsylvania are in hand. Each new commission or new organization of a State bureau usually brings such request, and this bureau ought to be in a position to respond immediately and effectively.

There are several distinctive lines of investigation which the bureau carries on continuously and in which uniformity and continuity are of vital importance. To permit a break in the record, or to have the data gathered on a radically different plan for two or three years and then attempt to connect up the record of prices, wages, or other continuous lines of inquiry, would be impracticable and wasteful of funds. Inquiries, like wages, prices, etc., in which for comparative purposes continuity on a uniform basis for a series of years is an essential element of value, should be consistently maintained in a bureau of permanent existence where a continuous record is possible, and should neither be broken into nor interfered with by temporary requirements. The extra strains put upon the bureau jeopardize the continuity of much of that work to which continuity of record is most important.

Next in importance to continuity and uniformity of record comes promptness in gathering and publishing the data covered by our regular wages and prices investigations. We are behind in this work, for the reason that the special investigation called for by a Senate resolution on the iron and steel industry called off so many of our men and took so much of our money that we have never been able to get even. It is true we got a deficiency appropriation of $20,000 in 1912 on account of that special work, but this covered only a small fraction of the loss to our regular work. With our present funds the field work can not be prosecuted for much more than six months in the year. Many special agents who ought to be in the field are now in the office and must remain there on clerical work until after July 1, unless this committee will grant relief through a deficiency appropriation. With the appropriation here requested, the bureau could get on its feet; the wages data for 1914 could be gathered, tabulated, and printed in 1914, thus putting us once more abreast of our work, and at the same time enable the bureau to do thoroughly the work desired by other bureaus to be done through it.

The lines of work conducted by this bureau which will suffer most from a break in continuity or from lack of being strictly up to date, are:

Retail prices: This work involves the monthly collection of retail prices of food in the principal cities throughout the United States. These current prices, connected up as they are with prices of identical commodities by identical firms for a series of years, have been of greatest assistance in the adjustment of differences between employers and employees in which wages are involved, and there is, as our correspondence files will show, a very insistent and widespread demand that more articles and more cities be included.

Wholesale prices: This extensive and important compilation of wholesale prices, published annually with price index to show relative changes, has taken the place in the public mind of those of Dunn and of Bradstreet, which have been discontinued for several years. As stated, the list of articles has been revised and negotiations are well under way to establish between this bureau and similar bureaus in England, France, and Canada a system of international prices and wages reporting on a comparable basis. The importance of this one piece of work is such as to justify the additional funds requested for its completion. Once the countries above named join in a system of uniform and comparable reports on wholesale prices and wages, it will be but a short time until the other principal commercial and industrial countries of the world will join in with the plan.

Rates of wages: This consists of the collection of pay-roll data relative to rates of wages and hours of labor for all industries in which 75,000 or more persons were employed, according to the census of 1905, throughout the United States. The wages are collected as of a certain date in identical establishments from year to year. As before stated, the bureau is behind in this work, not having completed the field work for 1913, while in one industry the rates for 1912 have not yet been published. As up-to-dateness is an essential element in the value of such reports, the bureau would urge upon the Congress the importance of being permitted to get on its feet once and have a chance to start even on this important work. The industries included in this series of reports are:

1. Cotton goods manufacturing and finishing.
2. Woolen and worsted goods manufacturing.
3. Silk goods manufacturing.
4. Lumber manufacturing.
5. Millwork.
6. Furniture manufacturing.
7. Boot and shoe manufacturing.
8. Hosiery and knit goods manufacturing.
9. Clothing manufacturing.
10. Cigar manufacturing.
11. Car building and repairing.
12. Iron and steel manufacturing:
    a. Blast furnaces.
    b. Bessemer converters.
    c. Open-hearth furnaces.
    d. Rolling mills—
        Blooming mills.
        Plate mills.
        Rail mills.
        Bar mills.
    e. Sheet and tin-plate mills.

Union rates of wages: This consists of data derived from the wage-scale agreements between employers and their employees in 39 cities. The most important trades covered are the building trades, the metal trades, printing trades, and bakery trades. The cities selected are those from which retail prices of certain articles of foodstuffs are secured. The wage rates are as of the date May 15. The field work for 1913 is practically done. With adequate relief through this deficiency appropriation bill, the field work for 1914 on this investigation would start May 15 and six weeks of valuable time would be saved. As this fund stands now, not a dollar could be spared for this work until after July 1.

Labor legislation and digests of court decisions affecting labor: This is another of the continuous lines of work of this bureau most seriously crippled and retarded by lack of funds.

Other lines of work which, while not necessarily continuous, are nevertheless urgent and should be kept up to date, but which are being delayed and made to suffer from lack of sufficient current working funds, are: Vocational education, industrial hygiene, industrial accidents and accident prevention, workmen's insurance and compensation, conciliation and arbitration, digests of foreign labor reports, and practically all of the special studies conducted by the bureau.

Vocational education: Taking these enumerated studies up in more detail, it is but fair to say that the Bureau of Labor Statistics has put more study into the subject of industrial education and vocational training than any other single institution in this or any country. It was the pioneer and blazed the way for all subsequent work along this line. Our eighth annual report, published in 1892, our seventeenth annual report, published in 1902, and our twenty-fifth annual report, published in 1910, were devoted to this subject, and in addition several special studies have been published by this bureau.

The problem of vocational education is sufficiently vital that 40 cities in the United States have appointed commissions or boards to study the subject and formulate plans. One city is ready to spend $1,000,000 in the endeavor to safely guide the young in their life work. In every case these cities are groping in the dark not only as to what to do, but as to what has been done and what they themselves want to do. Much of their funds will be wasted before they get started. The Bureau of Labor Statistics is the best-qualified institution in America to organize, guide, and safely direct the energies of this movement. It ought to be in a position to put itself in the lead in each of these 40 cities and to guide along the lines of a practical, positive, constructive plan for vocational education which would adapt the work of each city to its own local needs without neglecting the interest of the child for more widely useful industrial skill. Vocational education is an industrial and economic problem primarily, and as such is preeminently within the scope of this bureau's functions. At present the expert knowledge and experience derived from our various investigations can not be made practically helpful to any of the cities requiring it because the bureau can neither spare the men nor stand the expense.

Industrial hygiene: The work done by this bureau along this line is partly represented by the following reports already published:

Bulletin No. 75: Industrial hygiene.

Bulletin No. 79: The mortality from consumption in dusty trades.

Bulletin No. 82: Mortality from consumption in occupations exposing to municipal and general organic dust.

Bulletin No. 86: Phosphorus poisoning in the match industry in the United States.

Bulletin No. 95: Industrial lead poisoning, with descriptions of lead processes in certain industries in Great Britain and the western States of Europe. The white-lead industry in the United States, with an appendix on the lead-oxide industry. Deaths from industrial lead poisoning (actually reported) in New York State in 1909 and 1910.

Bulletin No. 100: List of industrial poisons and other substances injurious to health found in industrial processes.

Bulletin No. 104: Lead poisoning in potteries, tile works, and porcelain, enameled, and sanitary ware factories.

Bulletin No. 120, Hygiene of the painters' trade.

Bulletin No. 127, Dangers to workers from dusts and fumes and methods of protection.

In addition, there is in the office, but not ready for publication, a study of the hygiene of the smelting and refining of lead. Field work is now being done on a study of the hygiene of the printers' trade and also on a study of anthrax as an occupational disease in the United States. Similar studies in other industries will be taken up as soon as possible. This bureau has gained for itself a position as an authority on many of the questions of industrial hygiene. Its report on phosphorus poisoning in the match industry was made the basis of a Federal law calculated to prohibit the manufacture and sale of such matches. Industrial diseases and the best, cheapest, and easiest methods for preventing them or for reducing them to a minimum are matters of vital interest, and many States, notably Illinois, New York, and Massachusetts, are legislatively experimenting with the problem. The reports of the Bureau of Labor Statistics are recognized as valuable guides in shaping this legislation.

Industrial accidents and accident prevention: The study of accidents in various industries has for several years been carried on in a limited way by the bureau, and in recent years it has published several studies in this field—one in the cotton textile industry, a second in the metal trades, and a third and more elaborate study in the iron and steel industry. This latter study covered not only the collection of accident statistics and the study of causes of accidents, but also the study of methods of safeguarding and preventing the accidents. This volume should serve to indicate the usefulness of such studies, showing, as it does, the methods of safeguarding and accident prevention which are in use and which may be readily adopted in many other plants.

The line of study illustrated in this report of accidents and accident prevention in the iron and steel industry is now being followed by the bureau. The study of the subject is being continued in the iron and steel industry, and a similar study is also being made in plants engaged in machine building. Work of this character could be extended at relatively small cost and with most useful results. In such work emphasis would naturally be placed more and more upon those safety devices and methods of safety work which are found to secure definite results in the prevention of accidents.

The work here referred to is being developed gradually, inasmuch as it is believed that the best results can be secured in that way. Additional funds should be provided, so that the work can be extended by taking up a larger number of industries, by completing and publishing the results of studies more rapidly, and especially by giving greater attention to the study of safety devices in detail. Great advances have been made within a very short time in the development of safety devices both in this country and abroad, and the fullest information should be made available in regard to these matters.

The possibility of substantial reductions in the accident rates and great saving in life and suffering by organized safety work is beyond question. In the iron and steel industry in the United States, where organized safety work has probably reached its best development, the Bureau of Labor Statistics found, in comparing the accident records of a group of plants in which safety work has been fully developed with a group in which such work had not been done, a rate of 167.1 per 1,000 300-day workers for the former group and 507.9 for the latter group, a reduction of 67.1 per cent, or of 2 accidents out of every 3. The greater part of this accident reduction appeared in the accidents resulting in temporary disabilities, but a reduction of 21.5 per cent in the permanent disability rate and of 30.2 per cent in the fatal accident rate indicated that the saving extended to accidents of practically every class.

There are many reasons for believing that what has been accomplished in the manufacturing plants of a single industry can be accomplished by similar methods in most other industries with a high accident rate. Such results have been brought about by a careful study of the causes of accident, organization of systems of inspection, educational work, and the introduction of direct safety appliances. Even with the passage of well-considered laws calling for all reasonable safeguards, such laws can not come into general effect or produce the full measure of the results which should be expected without careful study of the conditions and causes of accident occurrence. Accurate statistics and the careful study which should accompany them can alone furnish a reasonable basis for improvement.

Workmen's insurance and compensation: Here again this bureau was the pioneer in this country. Our fourth special report in 1893, under the title "Compulsory Insurance in Germany," was the first report published in this country devoted to the subject of workmen's insurance. Our twenty-third annual report, published in 1908, and our twenty-fourth annual report, published in 1909, were devoted to this subject and brought together the laws of all countries relating to it. In addition to this the bureau has published more than a score of special reports and studies relating to these subjects. Within the last five years no less than 23 States, not including the United States, have passed such laws, while commissions to investigate and recommend have been appointed in 26 States, 5 of these having been appointed during the last year in Indiana, Louisiana, Maryland, Vermont, and Missouri.

Our Bulletin No. 126, now in proof, shows the status of legislation on this subject in the United States and foreign countries, summarizing laws in force in this and in foreign countries and reproducing the texts of American laws. This report was ready for the printer several months ago, but the bureau had no money to print it. Finally a Member of the Senate was so impressed with the value of the report that he secured the passage of a resolution providing for its printing as a Senate document. No information in the possession of the bureau is more in demand at present than that relating to workmen's compensation, and it is unfortunate that the equipment of the bureau, represented by the experts who have studied the practical application and working out of these laws, can not respond to the many and frequent calls from State commissions for information and practical guidance.

Conciliation and arbitration: Conciliation and arbitration has been the subject of investigation and report by the bureau in numerous bulletins or publications, notable among which were the following studies:

Voluntary conciliation and arbitration in Great Britain, in 1900.

Labor conditions in New Zealand, in 1903.

Labor conditions in Australia, in 1905.

Government industrial arbitration, in 1905.

Conciliation in the stove industry, in 1906.

The Canadian industrial disputes investigation act, in 1908 and again in 1910 and 1912.

Mediation and arbitration of railway-labor disputes in the United States, in 1912.

Conciliation and arbitration of railway-labor disputes in Great Britain, in 1912.

Conciliation and arbitration in Great Britain, in 1912.

Conciliation, arbitration, and sanitation in the cloak, suit, and skirt industry in New York City, in 1912.

Industrial courts in France, Germany, and Switzerland, in 1912.

Conciliation and arbitration in the building trades in Greater New York, in 1913.

Report of the industrial council of the British Board of Trade on its inquiry into industrial agreements, in 1913.

These studies of conciliation and arbitration are regarded as of the first importance in the work of the bureau. The successful methods in the prevention and adjustment of labor disputes are not matters of chance, but are invariably the results of careful study and experiment. The knowledge of these methods necessary to their application in new industries or communities can only be gained by careful study of the history and workings of those plans which have been successful. It will be obvious, then, that continuous and systematic study of the questions involved in conciliation and arbitration is practically essential in order that the available experience may be of value to the public.

At the present time two studies in regard to conciliation and arbitration are being carried on by the bureau, one a study of the operations of the protocol agreements in the various clothing industries in New York City and in Boston, the other a study of the methods in the bituminous coal mining industry. These studies have been much hampered and delayed by the lack of available funds.

Another matter which can not be too strongly stated in defense of this request to have the working fund of this bureau materially strengthened at this time is the necessity of meeting emergency demands. At the present time these must all be refused, however important, and without regard to the bureau's eagerness in some cases to respond. Such, for instance, is the general demand from all quarters for immediate information as to the present unemployment of workmen. Within the last two days we have received a request from the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House for information as to the unemployment of labor. No question is of more vital concern; yet the bureau is not in a position to make even the most superficial survey of the present situation, certainly not from any unwillingness or indisposition to take up such a study, but because the entire balance in the working fund of the bureau would not be sufficient to prosecute safely such investigation.

Again, matters of more local importance are urged upon the bureau almost daily which are so distinctively within its functions that only disappointment can come to the public when nothing is or can be done to throw light upon the conditions to which attention is called. This is illustrated by picking up almost at random any of the daily requests for investigations. For instance, a telegram to a Congressman from a man in Seattle refers to the labor conditions in the fish canneries along Puget Sound. The telegram, referred to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, is as follows:

"Have Attorney General and Department of Labor investigate wage scandal fish-cannery operatives. Contractors make big profits, but pay only 25 per cent transient labor. No remedy in courts. Mayor, judges, and newspapers interested. Alaska and Puget Sound canneries' foreign labor fed now by charity—Hawaiians and Filipinos."

There is no doubt that an investigation here would throw light upon the situation and, through the influence of public opinion, effect beneficial results. In this particular case the expense would probably not be great, but too great to be risked in the present condition of this fund, and the bureau was forced so to state in its reply.

It is therefore submitted that the working fund of this bureau should be strengthened at this time sufficiently to enable it to cooperate during the next six months with the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in securing wages in the clothing and such other industries as that bureau elects to investigate for cost of production, and this without crippling or retarding the regular continuous work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics; that this working fund should be sufficiently strengthened to enable the bureau to catch up with its regular work within this fiscal year, and this without the necessity of being forced to decline all emergency demands upon it.

It is but fair to state that the appropriation for this bureau's working fund is less now than it was 10 years ago; that it has never been increased with the increase of the demands made upon the bureau for work; and that for 16 years the bureau has not had one cent of increase in its regular working appropriation, and, with the exception of 1912, when it was allowed $20,000, has not had a deficiency appropriation since 1898.

This statement proves the contention of the opposition wholly without reasonable grounds. The amendments I have offered are worthy of the support of every member of this committee.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the House to this subject matter for a few minutes. I want to say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is one that I should have offered myself if he had not done so. The printing of the bulletins of the Department of Labor, as the successor to the Bureau of Labor, merely continues a function of the bureau which I think can be said to be the parent function of all its activities.

Now, as chairman of the Committee on Labor it is my duty to say to the House that a number of the bulletins and studies completed by the bureau, which can not be printed unless this amendment prevails, will be absolutely essential to the proper consideration of legislation now before the House itself, or at least before committees of the House. The ones I refer to specifically at this moment are a number of bills pending before the Committee on Labor with reference to the regulation of hours of laboring women and minor children. I will run hurriedly over the details of these studies—and let me say to the Members of the House who may not have had the advantage of acquaintance with them that they represent scientific investigations of their respective subjects. They represent a kind of treatment of the subjects that can not, in the nature of things, be obtained through private sources, first, because you have the partisan motive when private parties handle those subjects, and, second, because there is no private motive at all to produce the laborious statistics and to conduct the painstaking investigations essential in these studies. Those to which I will refer are as follows:

Lead Poisoning in the Smelting and Refining of Lead in the United States.
Butter Prices from the Producer to the Consumer.
Retail Prices, 1890 to December, 1913.
Mortality and Morbidity among Locomotive Engineers.
Administration of Labor Laws and Factory Inspection in European Countries.
Administration of Labor Laws and Factory Inspection in the United States.
Foreign Labor Legislation, Great Britain.
Foreign Labor Legislation, Germany.
Minimum Wage Legislation in the United States and Foreign Countries.
Decisions of Courts and Opinions Affecting Labor, 1913.
Conciliation and Arbitration in the Cloak, Suit, and Skirt Industry in New York City.
Conciliation and Arbitration in the Bituminous Coal Industry in United States.
Women in Industry.
Woman and Child Labor in the United States.
Public Aid to Home Owning and Housing in Foreign Countries.
Wholesale Prices, 1890 to 1913.
Prices and Cost of Living in Foreign Countries.
Retail Prices, 1890 to February, 1914.
Retail Prices, 1890 to April, 1914.
Union Scale of Wages and Hours of Labor, 1913.
Wages and Hours of Labor in the Iron and Steel Industry.
Wages and Hours of Labor, 1890 to 1913: Cotton, Woolen, Silk, Millwork, Furniture.
Labor Laws of the United States, January 1, 1914.

I want to say to the Members of the House that unless they have paid attention to the publications of this Bureau of Labor they can have no conception of their invaluable importance to our legislative action and legislative guidance in many of the States of the Union. They really constitute a library of sociology, essential not merely to explain the status of labor in this country but to define by fact and experience the extent to which remedial action should properly go.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he desires to pass this bill to-night?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is not much more of it left.

Mr. STAFFORD. We wasted an hour at the opening of the session to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not a holiday; it is a labor day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Now, Mr. Chairman, these are not cases in which the information can be gotten in any other way. This kind of information is not collected or published by private initiative, nor is it collected and published by any State or by any other department of our Government. And I want to say to the members of the committee that, personally, I shall be unable to know how to discharge my duties with reference to the important subjects contained in them unless I have the advantage of their publication. I trust the House will not be penny-wise and pound-foolish on this subject. I appreciate, of course, the attitude of the committee which has charge of the purse and feels it a particular duty to conserve the revenues of the Government. But this is an instance in which it would be a delinquency of the Government not to provide proper funds. And I trust that the members of this committee will sustain this amendment, so absolutely essential to sound public information and to proper and intelligent public procedure in the legislative bodies of the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the total allotment for the printing for the Bureau of Statistics for the current fiscal year is $32,000. It was stated that if all the bulletins which it was hoped might be finished by the 30th of June were ready for printing by that time, it would require $60,000 to print all of them. Some of these bulletins are now in the course of preparation, and some are in the Printing Office. This bureau has been taken into this department, and it is necessary to readjust some things in connection with it, and an attempt has been made to do that for the next fiscal year. It seems to me that, from the information at my disposal, the allotment of $32,000 is sufficient, and that there is no necessity at this particular time to increase it, particularly as no formal request was made by way of estimate. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KEATING. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 25.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois and Mr. FITZGERALD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 27.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fifty-five gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the committee do now rise, Mr. Chairman.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13612, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BAILEY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for two days, on account of attending the funeral of a friend.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 10258. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Lawton, Okla., a tract of land to be used for watershed and water-supply purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 25, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 25, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for all the attending mystery of life and for the spiritual law in the natural world. We bless Thee that Thou art in all, through all, and over all. We have to do with Thee, and we must come at last to stand before Thee.

We pray for that measure of grace which will enable us to meet all the exigencies of life, that we may not be driven into any crisis by the stern necessities of heartless law, but that we may be brave to face all conditions through the grace that God alone can supply and which will bring us out more than conquerors through Him who loved us and gave Himself for us. We ask in His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representative disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. BRADY conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for the improvement, construction, and repair of sidewalks in the District of Columbia, and for the assessment and payment of the cost thereof, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RURAL CREDIT.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as an indication of the great interest the farmer is taking regarding the question of rural credit, I present a resolution adopted by the Farmers' Equity Exchange at Watrous, Hettinger County, N. Dak., on January 24, 1914.

Mr. President, only a few days since I called attention to the vital importance of enacting a law which in some way would be helpful in furnishing the farmer with capital at a lower rate of interest than he is now paying.

We have pending before the Senate and before the other House bills touching upon this question. I have carefully examined these bills, and, in my judgment, none of them, if enacted into law, contain provisions that will give the farmer the relief he is seeking. The farmer is not asking for more credit, but as a matter of right and justice he is demanding that his paper shall be recognized in the channels of trade and commerce and placed on an equal footing with commercial paper. When a farmer gives a mortgage on a valuable, productive farm he feels he is entitled to the same consideration, to get his money at as low a rate, as the rate paid by the commercial organizations. His mortgage is as good as a Government bond, and it is an injustice to the people of this class engaged in this great industry to discriminate against their paper and compel them to pay a higher rate than is paid on the so-called commercial paper.

I ask that the resolution may be read at the desk.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

To Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, members of Watrous Equity Exchange, pursuant to a resolution passed at a regular meeting of our exchange, respectfully represent that

Whereas it is always the lot of settlers of comparatively new farming districts of our country to be burdened and handicapped by an unduly high rate of interest on farm securities, thus hindering development and being to a large extent the cause of hardships and failures that such settlers must endure; therefore

It would be proper and meritorious action on the part of the present Congress of the United States, as recommended by President Wilson in his annual message to Congress, to establish by legislation a system of rural credits whereby money could be secured on farm securities at a low rate of interest, and thereby remove the present handicap to the advantage of the American farmer in general, and to such of your petitioners in particular who have to start out under adverse conditions and with very small, if any, capital; and therefore

We, your petitioners, respectfully ask and request that you, as Member of the United States Senate from our State, use your utmost influence and energy for the drafting and adoption of an effective law on that subject at the present session.

Dated at Watrous, Hettinger County, N. Dak., January 24, 1914.

MANUFACTURE AND DISTRIBUTION OF PRODUCTS.

Mr. JONES. I have a letter here, in the nature of a petition, from A. W. Anderson, a business man in my State, making some very valuable suggestions in reference to the method of doing business, and making some legislative suggestions which he would like to have considered by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has before it proposed legislation along those lines. I shall not ask to have the letter read, but I should like to have it printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COLVILLE LOAN & TRUST CO.,
Colville, Wash., February 19, 1914.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I understand that business legislation is to be taken up and discussed before and by the committees at Washington, and I would like to present a few phases of the matter that never seem to occur to legislators, the people, or even to the business men themselves.

What we call "business" or commerce is such a complicated and interrelated system that whatever change is made in one item has its relative effect all along the line, and it would seem shortsighted policy in making sweeping and radical changes in some items without following the effect down the line and correcting the evils that may result to other items where conditions will not permit of self-adjustment to the change in item 1.

However, it is not the tariff, trust busting, or the parcel post that I wish to discuss, though the latter two have seriously affected the retail business, and in a way that we are powerless to overcome until Congress follows the effect down the line and corrects the evil, and it is this: The manufacturing and distribution that need attention now.

There are now two systems of distribution struggling for supremacy—the old and established system of merchandising from factory through the jobber or broker and retailer to the consumer; the other the catalogue house, which seeks to eliminate the jobber and retail merchant.

All legislation so far has been to advance the interest and success of the catalogue house.

The catalogue house has just as much right to exist and do business as any other concern, and if its system is the correct one it will exist and acquire supremacy on an equal basis; it will of itself eliminate the jobber and the retailer, if its system is the correct one, without legislation favorable to it and injurious to the other system. Therefore if any business legislation is to be enacted it would be well to analyze the systems and endeavor to enact legislation that will tend to give uniformity and fairness to all classes.

First, the old system of distribution through the jobber and retail merchant to the consumer; this is the result of a natural growth evolved and established through necessity, the fact that the distribution to the consumer requires a service that the factory can not give. It may be that time and the development of the country has made it possible, or will make it possible, to eliminate the jobber, but it has not and will not make it possible to eliminate the retailer, for this service given can not be rendered in any other way.

Aside from the strictly mercantile service that he performs for the factory and the consumer referred to above, he has performed another service for which he should be given credit; in all towns of this developing country he was the pioneer, for he catered to the first wants and the necessities of his people. Around him grew up the smithy, the church, the industry various, and the school.

He carried the people on his books when to have done otherwise they would have been obliged to leave the country, and every community to-day has its men now able to buy out their local merchant twice over, who could never have remained in the country to acquire their prosperity had it not been for the local merchant.

He encouraged industries, looked up and made markets for the settler, and assisted him to get his products to them.

He had community and State interest and always put these foremost; he helped to lay out and build roads and highways; he gave and gives to the church as much as the rest of the community as individuals frequently, and always gives.

In encouraging and building up his community he has raised valuation and holds property and pays taxes himself.

Surely these things might be considered in connection with the purely commercial services he renders, and what has been true is true now and will be true in the future.

Yet with the agitation over the high cost of living, the articles in the press from cartoon to editorial, from socialist Pearson's to supposedly conservative Saturday Evening Post, the reader is left with the impression that their retail dealer is a rascal and a crook.

The catalogue houses encourage this and deliberately use it as an argument, and when the administration starts in "trust busting" and Congress investigates and legislates for the high cost of living, it gets more airing with the same impression dominant and they proceed to help out the mail-order house.

The matter has gone too far to stop now, and now is the time to endeavor to get commerce on a stable and equitable basis.

One of the first evils that should be corrected is the discrimination against buyers of merchandise.

It has always been held that the man who bought great quantities was entitled to a better consideration in the price than the man who bought small quantities, but whatever the arguments may be for this procedure, it is not democratic, and it leads to unfair competition.

For instance, a small buyer goes to a knitting factory and buys a case of underwear at a price of $1 per garment. The large buyer goes to the same factory for the same garment, but buys 25 cases, and he obtains a price of 87½ cents. Is this fair?

The large buyer lists the garment at $1.12½ in his catalogue, the customer pays the freight, and owing to his large business and the evasion of the service that the local retailer must necessarily give his cost of doing business is very small.

The small local dealer pays $1 for the garment; freight from 3 to 5 per cent, as the case may be; cost of doing business, which can not be surmounted, and in this State is 15 per cent, which makes the garment cost him $1.20, and he sells for $1.35.

The customer makes the comparison, and goes down and calls one of his best friends a robber.

If the factory can sell its output at 87½ cents per garment, it should be made illegal for it to charge any person $1 therefor.

If it must get $1 for the garment to yield it a fair profit, it should be made illegal for it to charge any person 87½ cents therefor.

If the average, or 94 cents, is required to yield it a fair return, that is the price that should be charged and charged to all alike.

This may sound radical, but there are already several large factories that have of their own accord adopted this system; and, as further justification, will refer you to the rebate provision in the interstate commerce act.

Certainly it is worth just as much to the railroad to give a better price consideration to the shipper who gives them $100,000 worth of business a year against the one that only gives them $100 worth, as it is to the factory that makes the same concession, yet the law has stepped in and said, "No; you must make a rate that will yield you a fair remuneration, publish this rate, and charge it alike to all, and any evasion of this will be prosecuted, and you must file this rate for review with the representatives of the law."

If this is true and correct in the case of the railroad, it is just as true and correct of the factory or any other commercial transaction, and whether it is correct or not, as I have said, it is too late to stop now; it must be carried on down the line till all business is on an equal basis, and any action taken should embrace uniformity of price whether it be among factories, jobbers, or retailers.

Another reform that should be embraced is that a factory or importer should be legally bound to sell and deliver to any retail dealer any order for the goods they manufacture or import, regardless of the quantity ordered, and at their regular price.

We are now able to buy some goods direct from the factory and importer, much that we can not—that is to say, we can purchase from the factory, but the goods will be shipped through the jobber, and the price we pay contemplates the passing of the goods and account through the jobber.

To sum up, the small retailer is a necessity in the distribution of goods, he performs a service that can not be entirely dispensed with, and to eliminate him will require the substitution of some other agency to perform this service.

That it is not justice to eliminate those now in business involving such a great financial sacrifice in order to substitute other agencies which can do no more nor any better.

Inasmuch as all administrative action and legislation so far has been in the interest of big business, unless something is done now for the small dealers there is but one result possible.

And the first relief should be along the lines above indicated.

They would injure no one and would bring equity and balance in a very large way to commerce.

Action along these lines would be fought by catalogue houses and jobbers, of course, but it will not injure catalogue houses. They would still have the advantage of capital, and the only elimination of jobbers would be only as jobbers in some instances, as the jobber also performs a service that would still be necessary, and such as could not meet this would simply transform to mail-order or catalogue houses.

Yours, truly,

A. W. ANDERSON.

EMORY SCOTT LAND.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 67) for the relief of Emory Scott Land, to submit an adverse report (No. 285) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the report.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to have the report go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill, together with the adverse report, will be placed on the calendar.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES (S. DOC. NO. 432).

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably an opinion prepared by the Comptroller of the Treasury on the 3d of January, 1914, in relation to the half-and-half system of paying the expenses of the District of Columbia, which was submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] on the 20th instant. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to request that the article be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 116) making appropriations for reimbursement of appropriations for the support of the Army for the transportation and care of interned Mexican soldiers and refugees; to the Committee on Appropriations.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,000 for the instruction and employment of the blind of the Columbia Polytechnic Institute who are actual residents of the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to give notice that on Friday, February 27, 1914, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 52, being the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN & HARTFORD RAILROAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 277, by Mr. NORRIS, directing the Attorney General to inform the Senate if any contract has been entered into or contemplated with the officials of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad regarding the reorganization of said company.

The VICE PRESIDENT. An amendment was offered to the resolution by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest that the pending question is the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to refer the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] moved to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I think a resolution of this importance ought certainly to be referred, but——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, owing to the importance of the resolution, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is absent owing to illness. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]. This announcement may stand for the day.

I desire also to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Senate by illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. RANSDELL. The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is detained on account of illness.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the absence on account of illness of my colleague, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. He is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] on important business. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. KERN. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY] on account of public business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], to refer the resolution to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when the call for a quorum of the Senate was made I had just said that I hoped this resolution, which I regard as one of very great importance, would be referred to a committee, and I was proceeding to say that I also hoped the Senator from Alabama would move to refer it to the Judiciary Committee instead of to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, because it is clearly a matter that comes within the jurisdiction of the former committee. The questions are asked of the Attorney General; they are purely legal questions; the resolution in its nature relates to the Department of Justice and its operations, and that department and all appointments under it under our rules and practice come before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will yield to me for a moment I will say that the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce is unavoidably absent from the Senate on public business. He communicated with me a moment ago, asking me to look into the matter and to request that such action be taken as seems to be proper. It appears to me from an inspection of the resolution that the jurisdiction of it would probably lie in the Committee on the Judiciary, as has been suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I am of the opinion that the resolution should be referred to some committee. I therefore make no objection to its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]—the Senator from Arkansas being a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee—I will move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I think I have the floor.

Mr. CLAPP. I was going to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he would yield to me for a moment.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. There is an amendment to this resolution which is pending and printed, and is now on the table, to which I suppose, of course, it is proper to refer.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; but the amendment would go with the resolution.

Mr. CLAPP. That amendment, in addition to making the inquiry as proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], asks that the Attorney General lay before the Senate his agreement, arrangement, or understanding, which would not involve any judicial inquiry, but would simply bring before the Senate the fact itself for the Senate to deal with either directly or, if in the opinion of the Senate that involved a subject that should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, it would then be so referred.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that amendment also is a matter which concerns the Attorney General, and it seems to me that all matters relating to the Department of Justice belong, and always have belonged, to the Committee on the Judiciary; but the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has made his motion in that form, and I do not care to enter into any further discussion on that point. It seems to me that is the proper reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama now changes his motion and moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to speak in regard to the resolution itself. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], in speaking of the inquiry contained in the resolution, said—and said very truly—that in his opinion it could be answered only in one way. In that I entirely agree with him. Therefore we can not look to this resolution for anything in the nature of information; and I am a little at a loss to understand just what the actual purpose of the resolution is, as it is not calculated to give us any information. Whatever the purpose of the resolution may be, however, it will have a very bad effect, in my opinion, upon what the Department of Justice and the governors of the States through which this railroad system passes, especially the governor of my State, are trying to bring about.

Although the New York, New Haven & Hartford is the only railroad mentioned in the resolution, the matter under consideration affects at this moment the Boston & Maine Railroad—that is, it relates to the separation of the Boston & Maine from the New York, New Haven & Hartford road. The resolution seems to imply that the Attorney General is entering into a contract with somebody. I can not understand—perhaps it is my own fault—how the Attorney General can enter into any contract with anybody. He may be contemplating a suit for dissolution, unless he is satisfied that such a dissolution is to be brought about voluntarily in a proper and satisfactory manner and in a way beneficial to the public interest. Therefore I presume the arrangement, whatever it may be, will be submitted to him for his approval; but he certainly does not himself, in his official capacity, enter into any contract with anybody.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the situation as it is where this railroad actually exists. It is not necessary to go over the whole history of these two roads, but the situation of the Boston & Maine, which it is now proposed to separate from the New York, New Haven & Hartford system, is totally different from that of the New York & New Haven road. In the first place, it is not conceded by everybody, as the Senator from Nebraska stated yesterday, that the taking possession of the Boston & Maine by the purchase of a majority of its stock by the New York & New Haven was a lawless proceeding. It was done in full light of day, after protracted public discussion, under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, which is the State from which the Boston & Maine holds its franchise; and whether it was in contravention of the Sherman Act is a point not raised at the time and is now, as then, a point open to considerable doubt.

The Boston & Maine system is not suffering because it has been plunged into debt by extravagant or unwise expenditures in buying up other properties, as is the case with the New York, New Haven & Hartford. The Boston & Maine system proper has no bonded debt; it has some debenture bonds, but not a large amount. The trouble with the Boston & Maine is that the road for many years has been starved and, in ordinary parlance, has been "skimmed." No money has been spent on it for improvements for many years. The former president of the road, Mr. Tuttle, a very able and most competent officer, again and again, I know, represented the need of expenditures on the road in order to keep it up to a proper condition, but was not permitted to expend the money that was necessary for this purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Massachusetts might well add to what he has said that the Boston & Maine Railroad was very unwise in leasing a great many small lines of railroad and promising to pay an annual charge upon those roads which their earning capacity did not warrant. In other words, the Boston & Maine Railroad has a great many leased lines that do not pay sufficient to enable them to meet their obligations without taking from the funds of the Boston & Maine Railroad proper.

Mr. LODGE. That is undoubtedly true in regard to some of the leased lines; but I think the Senator will agree with me that the road also was starved, that it was not kept up as it should have been, and that the board of directors would not permit the former president to spend even the money that was absolutely necessary for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; that is undoubtedly so.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he knows whether the contemplated agreement or contract, or whatever it may properly be called, involves anything more than the dissolution of what is alleged to be an unlawful combination? In other words, does it go to the extent of undertaking to determine how these different railroad companies, or whatever they may be, shall be operated in the future?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know what the Attorney General and the governor of Massachusetts and the representatives of the roads contemplate. I have not been consulted by them.

Mr. WORKS. That is one of the things I desire to be informed about.

Mr. LODGE. I know the principal point at issue is as to who shall constitute the board of trustees who are to take over the New Haven stock in the Boston & Maine and operate the road for two years or three years, as the case may be—two years, I suppose is the term. That is the vital question which is being discussed.

Mr. WORKS. I asked the question because I have never believed that the Attorney General has any right or authority to make agreements with anybody for the future business of these corporations that are separated from each other either by contract or by a decree of court.

Mr. LODGE. That is my understanding. I agree with the Senator. I do not think he has, and I think——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Massachusetts yield to his colleague?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to my colleague that it is generally understood, and I have been so informed by good authority, that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. has made an arrangement with the Attorney General for the severance of the Boston & Maine and New Haven properties, and that the only matter in controversy now is who the five trustees shall be, into whose hands shall be placed the Boston & Maine stock which is now in the New Haven treasury.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I understand is the state of the case at this time, and the Attorney General——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator inform the Senate how long the stock of the Boston & Maine has been held by the New Haven road?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means when it was purchased originally?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I can not say at once, but I should think it was some three or four years ago.

Mr. NORRIS. My judgment is that it was probably more than that. I do not know definitely. Now, I want to ask the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. The exact date has escaped my memory, although the transaction I remember very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator, now, if the "skinning," as the Senator termed it, has not to a great extent, at least, taken place since the Boston & Maine came under the control of the New Haven Railroad?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; it has not. The New York & New Haven Railroad, whatever its faults may have been in other directions, spent a great deal of money on the Boston & Maine after it came into their possession. It did not come into their operating possession until about two or three years ago. To cite one thing which shows the situation of the road at that time, the Hoosac Tunnel got into such a condition with the gases there that it was becoming almost impossible, as well as very dangerous, to operate trains through it. It is a tunnel a trifle over 4 miles long.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I should like to finish that statement.

Mr. LIPPITT. I merely want to say to the Senator that the date of the purchase of the Boston & Maine by the New Haven road was June 30, 1910.

Mr. LODGE. That was the date of the purchase, but it did not pass into the operating control of the New Haven road until somewhat later.

Mr. LIPPITT. That was when the New Haven road assumed operating control.

Mr. LODGE. Then it was three years ago; I said two or three. The condition of the Hoosac Tunnel was so bad that engineers and firemen fainted in the cabs and passengers suffered very much in going through it. One of the first things the New York & New Haven Railroad did was to spend over a million dollars in electrifying that tunnel. They bought a thousand freight cars. The freight cars of the Boston & Maine system had been practically used up. The New Haven road also bought for the Boston & Maine some 30 or 40 locomotives. The Boston & Maine had been operating with old locomotives and old cars; and the New Haven road, in one way and another, spent a large amount of money on the Boston & Maine.

I will not enter into further details, for the only reason I have for referring to the condition of the road is to show that it is not a road weighed down with debt. It has a floating debt, which it has incurred lately, which must be taken up and put into the form of bonds.

Mr. President, my own personal belief is that if the Boston & Maine, when separated from the New York, New Haven & Hartford system, could be placed in good hands—in the hands of such trustees as are suggested—in two or three years the road could be put upon a dividend-paying basis. It is a fine property, it has a fine territory, and I have not any question that it can be restored to the stockholders.

I have confidence, Mr. President, that the Attorney General, so far as he has any power in the matter, is interested solely in the rescue of the property and in securing the best possible management for it. I do not believe, nor does anyone else believe, that the Attorney General has the faintest idea of protecting anybody who has done wrong at any time in regard to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. How could he?

Mr. LODGE. He could not, Mr. President, as a matter of fact. But I do not believe that he has the faintest idea of doing anything of the sort; nobody has, and nothing that is being done would have any tendency to do that. The governor of Massachusetts, who is the only person with whom I have talked with regard to it—I saw him for a few moments while he was here—is deeply interested in securing a reorganization of the road. His whole interest is the interest of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. I know no one who will have an authoritative voice in the matter who does not take that view.

For myself—if I may say one personal word, so that my position may be clear—I have no personal interest whatsoever in the road. I never in my life owned a share or a dollar of interest in either the New York, New Haven & Hartford or the Boston & Maine road. The interest I take in the matter is solely because it is of such vital importance to the great community which I in part represent and to the communities of the New England States north of Massachusetts, in whose welfare I am also deeply interested.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. I agree with what has been said, that the Attorney General certainly can make no contract or agreement or arrangement of any kind that would deprive individuals of their right, whatever they may be; but the thing that appeals to me is the question whether or not the United States Government should be a party at all to any agreement or arrangement for the selection of trustees to operate a railroad. That is what it comes down to, as I understand.

After these railroad companies are separated, there is a proposition here that is being discussed as between the officers of one of these roads, or perhaps both of them, and the governor of the State of Massachusetts, and probably others, as to who shall be selected as trustees to operate this road. If it turns out all right and is successful, nobody will complain; but if it turns out badly, the Government at least ought to be held responsible for the consequences. I am puzzled to know what right the National Government has to deal with that question at all.

Mr. LODGE. I may be wrong, because I do not see very clearly what the part of the United States Government is as suggested by this resolution; but, as I understand it, the Attorney General has the power to bring a suit for the dissolution of those roads. For instance, after the arrangement is made for the present management of the Boston & Maine Railroad, if he is satisfied that it is not bona fide, that it is still really, though not nominally, under the control of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, I think that would influence his action in a suit for dissolution, and ought to. I suppose that is the position he takes and the reason the matter is brought before him—that an arrangement must be made which will satisfy him that it is a bona fide separation; that the Boston & Maine is to be run by men who do not represent the New York, New Haven & Hartford Co.; and that it is to be run in the interest of the stockholders and of the community which the railroad serves.

I wish to come back to the importance of that road to our people. A large part of Massachusetts is served by it. It is of very great importance to the people of the State. The eastern part of my State, through which the main line of the Boston & Maine Railroad runs, is the most densely populated part of the United States. Most roads carry 2 tons of freight to a passenger. In the region through which the Boston & Maine Railroad runs in Massachusetts they carry a third of a ton to a passenger. You can see from that how enormous the passenger business is. One hundred and five thousand people go out of the North Station over the Boston & Maine lines every day. In one week there passes out of that station more than the entire population of the city of Boston. They are always carrying on this immense passenger business, which of course is largely local. The condition of that road and the service that the road is able to give are matters of vital interest to hundreds of thousands of people in their daily occupations.

If that road is crippled, if its reorganization is delayed, if it is forced into bankruptcy, it means an impairment of the service for that whole great community which it now serves. Already they have been obliged to take off certain trains, which causes serious inconvenience, to say the least, to many people. From motives of economy they have been obliged to cut down the working force to the lowest point, and they employ a great many men. Therefore it affects the community in the service it renders; it also affects gravely the men whom they employ.

Furthermore, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the character of the ownership of the Boston & Maine Railroad; that is, who the stockholders are. The stockholders of the Boston & Maine Railroad number 23,968.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What is the date of the statement?

Mr. LODGE. September 30, 1913. They number 23,968. Of those stockholders, 9,008 are males—that is, 33 per cent of them—10,474 are females, and 3,702 are trusts and guardianships. Sixty-one per cent of those stockholders are women and trusts or guardianships. It has been long a safe and profitable property. People of very small means have invested in it, as those figures show. It has been held by trusts. The stoppage of the dividends has caused great injury, and even suffering, to many people of very small means.

The bonds of some of the subsidiary lines, on which there are bonds, are held in our savings banks. The savings banks of Massachusetts alone—I am not speaking now of New Hampshire or Maine—have over $800,000,000 of deposits. The average deposit a few years ago was $125. Not more than $1,600 can be deposited by any one depositor. That demonstrates the character of the $800,000,000 in those savings banks. They are the savings, the accumulations of the working people and the people of the smallest means in the community. The savings banks are, of course, owing to those great accumulations, the largest lenders in the community and they hold in large the bonds of the subsidiary lines of the Boston & Maine.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not quite understand the statement just made. If 61 per cent of the stock of the Boston & Maine Railroad is in the ownership just described, how can the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad control it? What percentage of the stock did the latter railroad company buy?

Mr. LODGE. I was reading, of course, the distribution of shareholders. I was not reading the amount of stock. I was reading the number of shareholders.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood, though——

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean they held 61 per cent of the stock. I meant that 61 per cent of the shareholders were trusts and women.

Mr. CUMMINS. Without regard to the amount?

Mr. LODGE. No; I was not reading the amount, Mr. President.

As to the distribution of shares in the Boston & Maine Railroad, from 1 to 10 shares are held by 4,895 people; from 11 to 50 shares, by 2,531 people; 14 people hold 1,001 shares and over.

Mr. CUMMINS. What proportion of the stock, in amount, did the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. purchase and hold?

Mr. LODGE. They bought an amount which, with that held by certain other owners of stock, gave them a control—51 per cent.

I was describing this matter of the banks simply to show how much harm it had done to innocent people. As to the stock owned by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Road in the Boston & Maine Road, they paid, as my colleague tells me, $150 for the stock they bought. It is now selling for less than 50 cents on the dollar. That stock, which is in the treasury of the New York & New Haven Road, belongs to the stockholders of the New York & New Haven Road; and those stockholders are suffering through the breakdown of the Boston & Maine just as much as any other stockholders.

I should like to see this road placed in a position where the interests of the stockholders could be safeguarded, where the interests of the investors, particularly of the savings banks, could be safeguarded and protected, and where the service that the road must give to the community which it serves could also be guarded and made as good as possible. That can be obtained only by giving the company a reorganization which will enable it to take up its outstanding notes, to improve its road and its equipment, and to proceed to do its great business in the manner in which it should be done.

In order to do this it must borrow money either from its own stockholders or from the community or from the business world generally. It can not do that, except at exorbitant rates, unless the people who lend the money are convinced that the road is in good hands, that it is going to be run in the interest of the property and in no other interest, and that it is not to be made the football of politics in the United States Senate. There is not the slightest danger of anyone escaping who has done wrong. No one is seeking to protect them, so far as I am aware.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator a question. In what respect would the passage of this resolution injure the business interests of the situation, so far as going ahead and accomplishing the things the Senator desires to have accomplished is concerned? In what respect would the passage of this resolution have a tendency to affect that or to injure the situation?

Mr. LODGE. Why, Mr. President, it is a question of getting the confidence of the community, so that they will lend money to the road. That is what is needed now. The road must borrow money in order to go on. If it can be allowed to borrow money to take up its outstanding floating indebtedness and meet its immediate payments, I believe it can be restored both for the benefit of the community and for the benefit of the stockholders; but if those who are invited to lend money for the reorganization of the road find that its affairs are being discussed and dragged over here every little while; if they understand that the Senate, which has no executive authority whatever, is to pass up and down on any arrangement that is made and discuss and assail it, of course it impairs public confidence; it will be impossible to get the money, except at exorbitant rates, and within six months the road will be in bankruptcy.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not see why the discussion of this matter in the Senate would be more calculated to have a bad effect if it were discussed, as it has been discussed throughout the business world and in the newspapers and in places where they have money to loan, and so forth. The discussion of the matter here has relation to but one proposition, and that is whether or not immunity is going to be granted to certain parties who have violated the law. There is no proposition here to censor the business feature of the matter, as I understand, which the Attorney General has in charge.

Mr. LODGE. That is exactly what it is, a proposition to criticize and hold up any plan of reorganization. If this proposed amendment is adopted—and I understand the mover of the resolution is ready to accept it in some form—we are to have here the Senate set up to pass upon an arrangement made for the future conduct of the road. The Senator is as well aware as I am that the thing that business dreads most, that every investor dreads most, and that everyone who has money honestly to lend dreads most, is uncertainty and suspense. They want to know what they have to go upon and what the conditions will be. If they do not know and can not find out, that is a sufficient reason for not investing their money.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. LIPPITT. With the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, I should like to read a reply to the question of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that is contained in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, written by Mr. Prouty.

Mr. Prouty made an investigation of this subject, and after quite an exhaustive consideration of the situation he made a report, one section of which is headed "Remedy." This is the first remedy:

What is needed, first of all, to improve the railroad situation in New England is rest and an opportunity for constructive work. There is much truth in the claim of these carriers that they have been so occupied with investigations and so criticized by the public that no fair opportunity has been given for the operation of their railroad properties.

Mr. LODGE. I could not put it better than that. There is no doubt of the truth of that statement. In some way they must raise $27,000,000 between now and the 1st of July. In order to do that this reorganization ought to be effected as soon as possible. I do not believe there is the slightest ground for supposing that the Attorney General would approve—whether he has any authority to act or not, he certainly would not approve—any board that was not a good board. The governor of Massachusetts would not accept any board which was not sure to act wholly in the interest of the State and the railroad. There is nothing in the whole matter of reorganization that is intended to protect or cover up any wrongdoer. Nobody means to do that. The State of Massachusetts and the stockholders of the road are probably more anxious to have the wrongdoers punished than anybody else, for it is they who are immediately affected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Right along that point, I wish to ask the Senator if he believes it would be proper for the Attorney General or the governor, or anyone else having anything to do with the selection of the personnel of this board, to agree that those who have been in control in the past, and who are guilty of the wrongs of the past, should be in control of the new board simply because they are in position to furnish the money to finance it?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not, Mr. President, and no such names have been suggested that I have heard. I know nothing except what I have seen suggested in the papers and what the governor told me. Of the names mentioned to me not one of them was within that class.

Mr. NORRIS. Then would it harm the negotiations, would it not in fact be a good thing, if the Attorney General in answer to the resolution here if it were passed should say that? In effect would it not have a tendency to strengthen the financial arm of the railroad?

Mr. LODGE. No; I think it would have the very reverse effect. When the Attorney General is engaged in this great and complicated business, to keep harassing him with Senate resolutions, asking questions which it is admitted can only be answered in one way, can have nothing but a bad effect on the whole work that he is trying to do. What I am pleading for are the people, the communities, the innocent stockholders whose all in many cases is at stake on what is being done.

I have never been able to see what business the Senate has in plunging into executive departments before they have acted and intimating by resolutions that they can not be trusted unless we look over what they are trying to do. I do not think it is a matter that concerns the Senate. We are here as a legislative body. I do not like to have our powers interfered with, and I do not care to see the Senate interfere with the other departments of the Government.

Mr. President, I have said this much because I am extremely anxious that this reorganization should go through as speedily as possible. They must raise in the neighborhood of $27,000,000, as I have said, before the 1st of July. Immediate action is of the greatest importance. To suggest that anyone, if he had the power, is going to grant immunity to wrongdoers or hand the road back to the people who it is said have ruined it, is to imply that the Attorney General and the governors of those States are dishonest men and unfit to hold their offices.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have received a telegram, and I have no doubt every Senator has received one similar to it. We know how such telegrams are gotten up. It was shown by the lobby committee that they are frequently gotten up by one or two men. I do not know whether it was gotten up by the "Wolf of Wall Street" or not, but it is signed by the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange. Does the Senator from Massachusetts know any such organization?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; there is an exchange known as the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts give us some information about the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange.

Mr. LODGE. It is an association of gentlemen who are engaged in the business of real estate. There are two such exchanges in Boston. This is one recently formed. It is very active, and it has a very active president, who has been talked of for one of the trustees. I know nothing more about it than that. He is a very energetic, earnest man, and, as I said, he has been talked of as one of the trustees.

Mr. President, I think that I have said enough. I hope the resolution will be referred. I hope it will be carefully considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. It seems to me as it stands, if passed in its present form, to be little more than a vote of want of confidence in the Department of Justice. I think the Committee on the Judiciary ought to look into it, and look into it carefully, before we commit the Senate to the policy which the resolution seems to embody, and especially to the policy embodied in the amendment.

I am utterly at a loss to know what business it is of the United States Senate to pass on any settlement or arrangement that is made for the reorganization of the Boston & Maine Railroad. If anybody representing the Government has any part in it, it must be the Attorney General, who is an executive officer. I have entire trust in his integrity and in his determination to enforce the law; and I am unable to see what business it is of the Senate to interfere with him. Desiring as I do a speedy reorganization, desiring it in the interest of the great communities which this railroad serves, and representing in part the States through which alone it passes, I think we of New England have some claim to be heard in regard to it. We are anxious to have this reorganization brought about, to have that road established; and in our opinion to keep its affairs continually before the Senate on the idea—I will not use the adjective I was about to use—but on the mistaken idea that there is a hidden plan, a dark conspiracy, somewhere to shield somebody unnamed, is most unfair to the innocent people who are suffering from the present condition of the road. It is unfair to the States through which the road passes. It is an injury to the people of Massachusetts. Every day that this matter is delayed it is an injury and an obstacle to reorganization.

I hope, I sincerely hope, that the Senate will show some regard for the States and the communities involved, and that it will allow the Attorney General to proceed so far as he has power, and the governors of the New England States to proceed so far as they have power, in enabling that road to make a reorganization which will permit it to continue business and give good service and at the same time rescue the property for the benefit of its stockholders.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Missouri yield until I can have read into the RECORD a telegram regarding this matter?

Mr. REED. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I send to the desk a telegram that I think bears directly on one of the statements of the Senator from Massachusetts. I received it last night. It relates to a meeting that was held yesterday in Boston. I ask that the Secretary may read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., February 2½, 1914.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

A thousand business men, representing boards of trade and chambers of commerce throughout New England, assembled at Faneuil Hall to-day and enthusiastically indorsed Norris resolution and Clapp amendment by unanimous vote.

WM. T. HAINES,
Governor of Maine.
JAMES M. CURLEY,
Mayor of Boston.
GEO. F. WASHBURN,
HERBERT S. FROST,
CHAS. S. JUDKINS,
Full Committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Catron	Gallinger	La Follette
Bankhead	Clapp	Hitchcock	Lane
Borah	Clark, Wyo.	Hughes	Lippitt
Bradley	Cummins	Johnson	Lodge
Brady	Dillingham	Jones	McCumber
Brandegee	Fall	Kern	Martine, N. J.

Nelson	Pomerene	Simmons	Swanson
Newlands	Ransdell	Smith, Ariz.	Thompson
Norris	Reed	Smith, Md.	Townsend
Overman	Robinson	Smoot	Vardaman
Page	Root	Stephenson	Warren
Perkins	Saulsbury	Sterling	Weeks
Poindexter	Sheppard	Sutherland	Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to occupy the attention of the Senate just a few minutes on the resolution and the amendment. If I understand aright, and I am sorry the Senator from Nebraska is not at this moment in the Chamber, no one has charged that an improper contract has been drawn or that the Attorney General has undertaken to bind the United States by becoming a party to that contract. No one has asserted that the Attorney General has any authority of law to make a contract with relation to the business transactions of these roads.

The question, then, that is presented to all of us is simply this or the alternative: If the Attorney General does have authority and he is acting within the scope of that authority, it is highly improper for the United States Senate to interfere in advance with the exercise of that proper power and authority. On the other hand, if the Attorney General has no authority of law, then any act he may undertake to do will bind anybody, will be utterly void, and of no effect whatever. In that situation it seems to me that the resolution and the amendment can have no possible or conceivable effect except to reflect upon the Attorney General of the United States and to interfere with the reorganization of these properties.

I repeat to the Senator from Nebraska, if the Attorney General is within the purview of his legal authority the Senate can not stop him and ought not to attempt to stop him. If he is outside his authority then his acts are null, void, and of no effect whatever. Hence I am inquiring what is the purpose of the resolution. Why is it here at all? What object can it serve? What end is to be met by the resolution? Are we to assume that the Attorney General is acting within his authority, and having assumed that, demand that he shall submit to the Senate for its inspection and for its opinion the propriety of his proper acts done within the purview of his authority? Are we to seek to set up an espionage and a supervisory right over an Attorney General acting within the scope of his authority? Is that what the Senator from Nebraska desires?

Would it be a proper thing in any case to do, assuming that the Attorney General is acting within his authority? Manifestly it would be a mere piece of impertinence, of pestiferous interference, of seeking to prevent the proper exercise of authority by an officer of the Government of the United States. I repeat, if he is acting without his authority, if he is assuming to do a thing he has no business to do, then the act is null and void, and there is no use in passing a resolution of this kind.

It seems to me that the purpose of the resolution is exactly as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said, to pass a vote of lack of confidence in the Attorney General.

Mr. President, if it were proposed to have an investigation by a committee of the Senate of these railroads and of the plans and schemes by which they have been organized, combined, and looted, as has been charged by the public press, it would be a legitimate exercise of power by the Senate, and it might accomplish something, because the Senate as a part of the lawmaking body of the country is interested in knowing whether interstate corporations engaged in the transportation of freight and passengers are so conducting themselves as to render to the public a service at a reasonable and proper charge, and such an investigation of the affairs of these railroads might have some good effect. If that were the proposition now before the Senate, I would be heartily in favor of it.

But, sir, this is a proposition to investigate the Attorney General's office, and it is bottomed upon the assumption that the Attorney General is doing something wicked or wrong—either that or else it is an assumption of superior wisdom in this body and of the proposition that we alone are capable of handling these great matters.

Let us see what the Attorney General can do. The Attorney General can not make a contract for these roads; the Attorney General can not bind the United States to any contract, agreement, or arrangement that may be made by these roads or by any officer of these roads. He has no such authority, and it is safe to say he has assumed no such prerogative or right. If he did, it would fall dead from the pen that indited the pretended agreement. What can he do and what ought he to do? He can bring suits for the purpose of dissolving trusts and combinations and monopolies, if they exist; and, if one exists in this case, it is his duty to bring such an action. But, Mr. President, he has another duty. The duty of a practical officer, in any capacity, is to get results, and to get them promptly and efficiently. It is not a duty to file a suit if the same end can be reached by negotiations more speedily and more justly to the people. So it is entirely proper for the Attorney General, if the management of these roads have now reached a point where they are willing to acknowledge the law and to obey the law, to say to these concerns: "If you will dissolve voluntarily, if you will reorganize as separate institutions, if you will proceed hereafter in the right way, I will assist you in the furtherance of that project of disorganization and reorganization. If that is what the Attorney General is doing, then the Senate ought not to interfere. It is, in my judgment, all he can do and all that he can possibly be attempting to do.

The Attorney General can do one thing further; he can grant immunity to witnesses. He has the right to call witnesses in a judicial proceeding and to say to a witness who testifies—indeed, the law says it for him—"If you give testimony and it is against you, it shall not be used for your conviction." That has not been done, because judicial proceedings have not yet been had, but I want to know what Senator there is in the Senate who is prepared to say to the Attorney General, "If, in your judgment and discretion, you need the testimony of any witness, you shall not have the right to call that witness." Is it pretended here by the author of this resolution, or by anybody else, that the Attorney General is making contracts of immunity; that he is saying to the men who have organized what we are told is a combination in restraint of trade, "I will see that you are not punished for your past misdeeds"? Is that asserted? If it is asserted, I should like to have it done now. Mr. President, silence is my answer. No one makes that charge; no one, I think, dare make that charge; but if it were charged and if the Attorney General were to attempt it, it would not bind his successor for a moment; and he would have a successor very quickly, in my opinion.

What is the purpose of this resolution? What shall we gain by its passage? Will the Senator from Nebraska cast his eagle eye over the documents prepared by the Attorney General and give us the flood light of his intelligence, so that we may observe where the Attorney General is making mistakes? Will some other Senator essay that duty and perform that office?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this resolution has no proper place here, and I move that it be laid on the table.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to lay the resolution on the table, which motion is in order and is not debatable.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not going to debate the motion, Mr. President. I merely wish to ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is detained from the Chamber by illness.

Mr. REED. I feel authorized to release the Senator from Wyoming from his pair with my colleague on this vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In view of the statement of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], being released from the pair with his colleague which I have just announced, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who has informed me that, if present, he would vote in the same way that I shall on this resolution. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ROOT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], but I am specifically released from the pair on this vote. I accordingly vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. STERLING (when hi name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. Not knowing how he would vote, if present, upon this question, I withhold my own vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]; but having good reason to believe that he would vote "yea" if present, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], but I am informed that if he were present and voting he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KENYON].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence withold my vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is detained from the Senate to-day, and he is paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON].

I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. RANSDELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] on account of sickness. As already announced, he has a pair with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] on official business of the Senate.

Mr. LIPPITT (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have a general pair with that Senator, and, as he has not voted, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). When I voted I did not notice the absence of my pair, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I now transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Bankhead	Hughes	Perkins	Smith, Md.
Bradley	Johnson	Ransdell	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Kern	Reed	Smoot
Bryan	Lodge	Root	Stephenson
Clark, Wyo.	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Swanson

du Pont	Lippitt	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Fletcher	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Goff	McLean	Sterling

So the resolution of Mr. NORRIS was laid on the table.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 1346) to authorize the Eastern Maine Railroad to construct a bridge across the Penobscot River between the cities of Bangor and Brewer, in the State of Maine.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 433).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State in response to the resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant, requesting the Secretary of State to inform the Senate whether the International Fisheries Commission created under the treaty of April 11, 1908, for the preservation of food fishes in the waters contiguous to the United States and Canada has completed its work and whether further regulations under the treaty are now or soon will be ready for action by Congress.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1914.

THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Philippines:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Fourteenth Annual Report of the Philippine Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, together with the reports of the Governor General and the secretaries of the four executive departments of the Philippine Government, for the same period.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1914.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10308. An act to provide for the improvement, construction, and repair of sidewalks in the District of Columbia, and for the assessment and payment of the cost thereof, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11338) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment reported by the committee inserting the proviso beginning in line 22 and ending in line 25, on page 15, in order?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, when the bill was laid aside yesterday I was considering the propriety of Congress delegating legislative power to the Postmaster General. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] questioned the constitutionality of the provision in the Post Office appropriation bill of 1913 under which the Postmaster General has proceeded to change the weight limits, the rates of postage, and the zones, upon the ground that it delegated power to change at the will of the Postmaster General any of these matters without any regard to the question whether the change was reasonable or unreasonable.

That calls to my mind the authority under which the Government can carry parcels at all. Bearing in mind that the Constitution authorizes the establishment of post offices and post roads, in the consideration of the bill before it was reported to the Senate the subcommittee took the precaution to inquire of the members of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate as to the right of the Government to put in a general parcel-post system. It seemed to be the consensus of opinion of the members of that committee that the right existed if the parcel post were but an incident to the carriage of the mails; but that if it reached a point where the carriage of the parcels was the principal business and the carriage of the mails was incidental, Congress would not have the power.

I quoted yesterday from the work of Mr. Tucker on the Constitution. I desire at this point to insert another quotation from the part of the work in which he is considering this clause of the Constitution:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Commenting upon that, Mr. Tucker says:

This legislation under these constitutional provisions shows that the doors to and from the Treasury are under legislative control, and the key is in the hands of Congress. The obstructions to drawing money from the Treasury except through sworn officers, without whose concurrent action the custodian of money in the Treasury can never permit it to pass from him, make the appropriation by a law of Congress to be the only pass-key to the vaults of the Treasury, as the Constitution intended; and all legislation which Congress is authorized to pass as necessary and proper to carry this important provision into execution must be directed to the point of fencing the contents of the Treasury beyond the reach of any other power than the Congress of the United States. The last provision of this clause was fully commented on in the convention—that the people, by public reports, from time to time should be made aware of the collections of money as well as of its disbursement.

Of course, it is true that Congress has to make the appropriations to pay any expense brought about by reason of any rates which the Postmaster General may establish, but in an indirect way we permit appropriations to all intents and purposes to be made by an executive department, because under this clause in that appropriation bill of 1913 Congress authorizes the Postmaster General to change the rate, and if he creates an obligation the good faith of Congress is at stake; and I apprehend that no voice will be heard upon the floor of the Senate to deny a just compensation for the rates established.

Speaking of that indirect method of accomplishing what can not be done directly, Mr. Tucker says:

If the King collected and held the revenue under his authority, the parliamentary power to grant subsidies and appropriate money to the Crown would be a sham. Hence all the machinery, not only for levying but for collecting and keeping the public revenue, is under the supreme control of Parliament. The freedom of grant would be transformed into the enforced exactions of the King if the revenue were, through the machinery of collecting and keeping, directly or indirectly under the royal power, and the device of appropriations for the army for one year only would cease to be any check upon the prerogative. It is the independent holding of the revenues within parliamentary hands that effects the divorce of the purse from the Crown, and which makes prerogative impotent in its assaults upon liberty.

So, upon the broad question, I am unwilling to turn over to one man power so tremendous as that carried in the appropriation bill of 1913. I do not now ask that we shall take it away, but that we shall say, "We will ratify what has been done up to now; but we want enough time taken before any more changes are made, so that Congress, which must raise and collect this revenue, shall determine whether it chooses to conduct the business at a loss, or to increase weight limits, or to change rates of postage."

If Senators are willing for that power as to fourth-class mail matter to be lodged in the hands of one man, then consistency of argument demands and compels that they also should go to where the logic of their position would carry them, and vote to let the Postmaster General fix the rate upon first-class matter, upon letters; upon second-class matter, upon newspapers and magazines; and upon third-class matter.

Mr. President, what would the Postmaster General do if he had the power to fix second-class rates? He tells us in his report. Ought Congress to turn over to him that power? If it ought not as to newspapers and magazines, why should it as to merchandise?

In his report the Postmaster General says:

The mailings of newspapers and periodicals as second-class matter at the cent-a-pound rate and free in the county of publication, during the fiscal year 1913, were greater than during any previous year, and for the first time in the history of the Postal Service exceeded a billion pounds. Although second-class matter constituted approximately 62 per cent of the aggregate weight of the domestic revenue-producing mail, it produced only 4.98 per cent of the postage derived from such mail. The difference between the receipts from second-class matter and the expenditures chargeable thereto is not as disproportionate, yet it is so great as to deserve the most careful consideration with a view to fixing more equitable postage rates on the several classes of mail so that the revenue from each may be more nearly commensurate with its cost for handling and transportation. The commission created in 1911 under a joint resolution of Congress to investigate the subject found the cost of handling and transporting second-class matter, exclusive of certain expenditures regarding which exact information was not at hand, to be approximately 6 cents a pound, and recommended that the postage rate thereon be increased from 1 cent a pound to 2 cents a pound, such charge being regarded as reasonable and a step in the direction of the equalization of the postage charges on the several classes of mail. The report of the commission, on February 22, 1912, was transmitted by the President to Congress with a recommendation for favorable action. Upon receipt of the commission's report Congress created a joint committee composed of Members of the Senate and House of Representatives to give the subject further consideration, and the question of proper rates of postage on second-class matter is now before this committee. It is understood that the committee is making an inquiry into the subject and will report its findings with recommendation not later than March 4, 1914, as provided by law.

The findings of the commission which were transmitted to Congress by the President, as above stated, and which are now under consideration were reached after full and exhaustive hearings accorded not only the officials of the Post Office Department, but all publishers and others interested who desired to appear and present their views. There can be no doubt whatever as to the fairness and conservative nature of the finding. It is sincerely hoped that appropriate action will be taken at this session of Congress amending the existing laws and raising the rate in accordance with the recommendation of the commission. Until some such action shall be taken to readjust rates on second-class mail matter no serious consideration can be given to plans for revising and reducing rates on first-class mail matter.

The question that I have never been able to solve to my own satisfaction, the question that I have been unable to have solved by any expert, either in or out of the department, is, How is it that second-class mail matter, which carries a rate of a cent a pound, is carried at a loss of 5 cents a pound, with a part of it carried by freight to save expense, while fourth-class mail matter, carried at the same rate, is carried at a profit?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. And the same expense per pound attends carrying both second and fourth class matter on the part of the Government.

Mr. BRYAN. I think it would cost the Government more to carry the fourth-class mail matter, because the travel of the daily newspapers is to the cities, more largely, and this fourth-class matter is supposed to go out on the rural routes. If that be so, then it would cost the Government more to handle packages, but undoubtedly it costs as much. How it can be argued that we lose 5 cents a pound on second-class mail matter and make a profit of ten to twelve million dollars a year on fourth-class mail matter, when practically the same rate is imposed on both, I never have been able to understand.

Mr. President, the only objection urged here to this amendment was that the action of the Postmaster General has been popular. I do not see present the Senators who made the inquiry and who insisted that this provision should remain unchanged because, forsooth, the order was popular. I suppose that question was not intended to be answered in the Senate. When Senators ask a question and do not wait for the answer, perhaps they have some other purpose than asking the question for information in the Senate.

I know it is popular to carry this matter at 1 cent a pound. It would be twice as popular if it were carried at half a cent a pound, and four times as popular if it were carried free. Little of the popularity would be lost, and there would not be quite so much denunciation by the newspapers of Senators who refuse to vote for an appropriation bill which in their judgment means a loss to the Government, if the same power to change the rate on second-class mail matter resided in the Postmaster General. I am almost tempted to be willing to try it, to let him double the rate on newspapers and magazines, and see what would happen. All this cry about Senators on this committee being "under the control of the express companies" would change when the interests of the newspapers became affected, and it was proposed to double the charge upon them. Then "the liberty of the press" would be involved and it would not be so popular.

Mr. President, we do not gain much by calling each other names. Senators do not gain much by reading into the RECORD attacks upon their fellow Members made in ill-considered newspaper editorials. It would be just as proper for those who do not care to see this Government involved in a great expense, and who are trying to protect the expenditures so that there may not be a big deficit, if like-minded, to turn and say, "Gentlemen opposing this amendment are instigated by the great mail-order houses of this country."

I do not believe there is a single Senator on this floor who is interested or who is concerned as to the advantages that may accrue to the mail-order houses by keeping this provision out of the bill. Neither do I believe there is a single Senator here who is actuated in his position here by any benefit that may come to an express company by the inclusion of this amendment.

Can we not have a little confidence in ourselves? Have we so little confidence in our own integrity as to be driven from a position we believe to be right because some newspaper says that this provision will operate to the benefit of the express companies?

As I said upon yesterday, I believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission in interstate shipments and the State railroad commissions in intrastate shipments have the power to ignore the existence of an express company in fixing rates. It seems to me there is the remedy. Certainly the remedy can not be to have a statutory rate remaining inflexible and then reduce these rates to a nonsupporting point. The Congress or the executive department that is going to lower the rates ought also to have the power to lower the mail payments. The commission is now taking evidence, and has been for many months, as to the amount that should be paid for the carriage of the mails, and if we could have it so fixed that when a rate is reduced the payment will be reduced we need not fear a deficit every time a change is made.

Mr. President, if it be true that by the establishment of the larger limit of reductions in the rates of postage we are to have a surplus in the Post Office Department, then it occurs to me to be relevant and pertinent to inquire why the great increase in this bill over the bill of last year. The appropriation of 1914 was only $11,000,000 over the appropriation of 1913. The appropriations for the Post Office Department had grown at about that rate for several years. But the appropriation for 1915 is $310,752,000, an increase over the appropriation of 1914 of $27,000,000—$15,000,000 more than the normal increase.

Mr. President, as far as I was concerned, I did not care whether this measure was attempted to be placed on the bill or not. When it was undertaken to give that power to one man I opposed it, and introduced a bill to take the power away from him before a single act had been done under the law, because I believe the proper function of the executive departments in matters affecting appropriations is to collect information and present it to Congress and let Congress do the legislating for the country. But when the matter was presented I joined cheerfully in the effort to bring back to Congress the power to control the expenditures of the Government. You can not change the rates of postage every Tuesday and have anything that anybody can depend upon. I have the honor to be serving on the commission which is trying to find out what reduction can be made in rates. We thought we had some way of finding out by providing distinctive stamps, so as to show what the revenues were. That was abolished by executive order in the Post Office Department.

The truth is the Government is about to be ruled by bureaus. By another order in the Post Office Department weights were increased. Then the commission began to try to collect information on the new basis. The 1st of January the rates were again increased. So the purpose of this provision is to let the thing remain stationary long enough to get the data and to provide for it. I believe the Senate and the House will respond to the reasonable public opinion of the country.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HUGHES. In my judgment, the language under discussion amounts to a change of substantive law until a contrary law of a substitute character is passed by Congress. Would the Senator have any objection to changing the phraseology under discussion so as to limit its operation to one year, so that automatically the present situation would revert at the end of that time?

Mr. BRYAN. No; I would have no objection to that. I will state to the Senator why it was worded in that way, as far as I am individually concerned. I can not speak for the committee, but, as I understand, the reason that the claim was made was that the express companies reduce their rates, and if this were passed the Post Office Department would be unable to do so. So the language was drawn with the idea in view that if such a situation came about application could be made to Congress and the rates or rules could be prescribed in a joint resolution, which could be passed.

It was not the intention to carry this beyond the year. We want to find out where we are. We want to find out whether the claim that the business is being carried on at a great profit or the claim that it is being carried on at a great loss is correct. I think it would be perfectly satisfactory to the committee if that were done. The idea is not to cripple the parcel post. I said yesterday that it would be a peculiar body of men who, after having brought the law into operation, would then turn around and undertake to kill it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Suppose a decrease in express rates should take place in vacation?

Mr. BRYAN. I will be glad to answer that question. Suppose that should happen. I believe the answer is to be found in a consideration of the statement made by Representative LEWIS, who has been referred to upon several occasions in this debate. If the rates of the express companies are less than the rates the Government makes to the railroad companies for the carriage of its parcels, we can not compete, unless it be that we are to turn over to the Post Office Department the right to go into a rate war with the express companies. Would the Senator from Texas be willing to have the Government enter into a rate war with the express companies of the country?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator has just said that if the express companies decrease their rates the Postmaster General can make application to Congress and secure permission to decrease these rates.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; he could, but I apprehend that Congress would not be very quick to say it will allow him to decrease rates below living expenses. The Senate would never consent to do that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator made that suggestion himself. He said that that was the remedy the Postmaster General would have, and the inference was——

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, if the Postmaster General can convince Congress that the rates ought to be changed, either because the express companies have changed their rates or for any other reasons, it would be right for Congress to do it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the decrease in rates of the express companies occurred in vacation, there will be three or four or five months before that opportunity would be presented.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator if he ever knew rates to be decreased except by the order of some legislative or executive department or commission. Can the Senator point to a single reduction that was ever made in the history of this Government by the transportation companies of their own volition?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was simply referring to the contingency the Senator himself suggested.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, what is the matter with it? That is the fact. They can come in and get permission from Congress and we will establish the rates. Does the Senator believe that the Postmaster General ought to have the credit of the Government to enter into a rate war when the rates are as low as they can be placed, and make such reductions as may be necessary in order to drive out of business some private enterprise? I have never understood that that was the theory upon which the law was passed. I thought it was to take advantage of an opportunity to serve people who could not be accommodated with reasonable rates by any existing machinery. Of course the Government could win in a rate war, but would it be proper to take out of the taxes of the people money to pay whatever it might cost?

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate too long already. I believe the amendment of the committee is in order, and I shall so vote.

During the delivery of Mr. BRYAN'S speech,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 254, to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is unavoidably absent from the Senate on account of illness. I therefore ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is laid aside. The Senator from Florida will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. BRYAN'S speech,

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I was very much interested in the discussion of this question by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and I want to submit some practical suggestions to the Senate in regard to the operation of the rule by which the Postmaster General has amended the parcel-post law.

The Senator from Florida was correct when he stated that the parcel-post law was drafted by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. When the bill came to us from the House it contained a simple provision providing for a limited parcel post on rural routes. The Senate committee took the bill and amended it by incorporating into the bill as a substitute for that provision the parcel-post law.

Now, what were the provisions of that law? First it divided the United States into zones eight in number, and fixed the rates according to the zone. There was a local rate which was the rate from the central post office out on the rural routes or to be delivered within the city by carriers. That was the local rate, and that rate is still maintained.

The first zone embraced the territory within a radius of 50 miles of the post office.

The second zone embraces the territory within a radius of 150 miles of the post office and outside of the 50-mile radius.

The third zone embraces a radius within 300 miles and outside of the 150, and so on until eight zones were created, the last zone being all beyond an 1,800-mile radius. Rates were fixed by law for each one of the zones. Great care was exercised by the committee in fixing these rates to guarantee that they would pay the expenses of the maintenance of the particular service which we were establishing.

The rates on the first and second zones I think, from the experience we have had, were somewhat high and should have been reduced by law by this time or sooner. But it was out of caution that we fixed them as high as we did, because we did not want to establish a service that would bring another drain upon the postal revenues—that is, we did not want to make the same mistake that was made by Congress when it established the second-class rate something over 30 years ago. No one now who is familiar with the operations of the postal establishment will state that the second-class rate is not lower than it ought to be. No one will question that Congress at that time made a mistake in fixing the rates too low.

Why are they not raised, then? is the question that is asked. They are not raised because when you once establish a postal rate, to increase that rate imposes a tremendous burden upon the business concerns that have grown up under the rate. If you should double the second-class rate throughout the United States to-day, you would destroy the business of thousands of men. You would destroy the business of men who have devoted their time from their boyhood to old age in building it up. So I have never been able to get the consent of my mind to increase those rates, because of the conditions that have developed as a result of their operation during a generation. In fixing the rates originally for the parcel post we did not want to make the same mistake, so we fixed them high enough, expecting to reduce them as experience demonstrated that they could be safely reduced.

The bill passed the Senate with this provision, written very largely by ex-Senator Bourne, then a Senator from Oregon. I was somewhat amused yesterday to hear a Senator state that a Member of the House—Mr. LEWIS—was the father of the parcel post. As I remember, he is not a member of the Post Office Committee, and had nothing to do with preparing the House provision. I know that he did not draw a line of the parcel-post bill as it passed the Senate and became the law. If anybody deserves the credit for the Parcel Post system, it is ex-Senator Bourne, of Oregon, who spent 14 months in working it out and accumulating a fund of information that is now on file in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of this body, which will stand as a monument to his energy as long as the records of that committee are preserved.

Now, the bill went to conference, and in the conference there was included a clause which was not in either of the bills, and it came in here in the conference report. At that time I opposed it with what vigor I could. I went to the limits of the rules of this body, I believe, in denouncing the action of the conferees in incorporating it into the bill, because I believed then it was a vicious provision, and I know it is now, as I shall undertake to demonstrate before I get through. But this is the provision:

> The classification of articles mailable as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability under this act, if the Postmaster General shall find on experience that they or any of them are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of the service greater—

"To permanently render the cost of the service greater"— > than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, after investigation, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions, or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

Under the authority conferred in that paragraph of section 4 the Postmaster General has made the changes which are under discussion and which led to the amendment to the bill which we now have before us.

In the same bill there was created a commission in the following paragraph:

> That for the purpose of a further inquiry into the subject of the general parcel post and all related subjects a joint committee of six persons (Members of Congress), three of whom shall be appointed by the President of the Senate and three by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is constituted, with full power to appoint clerks, stenographers, and experts to assist them in this work. That the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall furnish such data and otherwise render such assistance to the said committee as may be desired or available. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of this committee the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The committee shall report fully to Congress at the earliest date possible.

That committee organized and began work. Its desire was to cooperate with the Postmaster General and with the Interstate Commerce Commission for the purpose of determining what changes ought to be made in this new feature of the Postal Service which we had established.

On the 6th day of March last the chairman of the commission addressed to the Postmaster General a letter in which he called upon him for a large amount of detailed information. I desire here to submit a copy of that letter and a copy of the statement which he forwarded to the Postmaster General asking him for information in regard to the operation of the parcel-post law.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator give us the names of the gentlemen composing the commission?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Kansas who is now addressing the Senate is chairman; the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] is a member, and also the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. These three represent the Senate. A Member of the House, Mr. LEWIS of Maryland is a member, Mr. FINLEY of South Carolina is a member, and Mr. Gardner of New Jersey is a member.

Mr. SHEPPARD. How many meetings has the commission held?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will get to that if the Senator will permit me. The committee has held as many meetings as it was desirable to hold. It met and organized and asked the Postmaster General for the information indicated in the letter and statement that I have just submitted. A copy of the letter and the information I have filed herewith and ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the document referred to may be printed in the RECORD. If there be no objection, the statement will be printed.

The papers referred to are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 6, 1913.

Hon. ALBERT S. BURLESON,
The Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I inclose you herewith data which the joint committee of the House and Senate to investigate general parcel post desire from the department. If you will refer this to the various bureaus of your department and direct them to provide the committee with the information as early as convenient, I will appreciate it.

I trust you are finding your new duties agreeable and interesting.

Very truly, yours,

JOSEPH L. BRISTOW,
Chairman Joint Committee to Investigate General Parcel Post.

INFORMATION DESIRED FROM THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Number of fourth-class shipments per month, 1913.
Estimated gross weight of same.
Estimated number of packages sent as by the old fourth class.
Estimated number of packages sent as by new fourth class (giving basis upon which estimate is made).
Additional cost to postal system of handling fourth-class business, exclusive of railway pay and permanent expenditures (e. g., maps, scales, etc.), for given period, and list in detail.
Additional cost per shipment on new fourth class.
Additional cost for incoming shipments.
Additional cost for outgoing shipments (giving detail as to methods of computation).
Average haul of fourth class in all zones.
Percentage of shipments for local delivery.
Percentage of shipments in each zone.
Percentage of revenue from each zone.
Number of parcel shipments delivered by wagon.
Cost of such delivery, wagons.
Cost of such delivery, hire of substitute carriers.
Number of parcel shipments delivered by automobile, trucks, etc.
Cost of such delivery, hire of trucks.
Cost of carriers, etc.
Weight and cost per piece of handling different classes of mail, excluding payments to railways (each class stated separately).
Gross pay to railways for latest available year.
Table showing comparatively, by columns, the following data: Ton-miles and percentage of gross railway pay assigned to routes carrying 211 pounds or less, 212 pounds to 519 pounds, 520 pounds to 1,019 pounds, 1,020 pounds to 1,519 pounds, 1,520 pounds to 2,059 pounds, 2,060 pounds to 3,559 pounds, 3,560 pounds to 5,079 pounds, 5,080 pounds to 48,103 pounds, 48,104 pounds and over.
This table should be arranged with columns showing gross weight, compensation for weight and for space, and for each class per ton-mile for each class.
Number of car-foot miles utilized for mail.
Number of car-foot miles utilized for express.
Number of car-foot miles utilized for passengers. (With revenue per thousand car-feet in each service and cost to railways for each service; with estimated weight of express and mail matter carried per car-foot mile.)
Number of persons engaged in Postal Service from 1886 to date, including those under contract, giving estimates where exact data are wanting.
Number of mail pieces for same period, actual or estimated.
Number of mail pieces handled per employee per annum.

Cost per average mail piece for each year (of all classes) from 1886, with columns added excluding the additional cost of rural delivery.

Gross weight of mails, including equipment, for years 1907 to date, with estimates of increases after date of actual weighings.

Resultant per ton-mile railway pay.

Percentage of weight and ton-miles of equipment to total weight of railway mail carried.

Percentage of weight and ton-miles of equipment carried to weight of fourth-class matter.

Estimates of railway pay per ton-mile on the assumption that the total weight of mail should increase—100 per cent, 200 per cent, 300 per cent, 400 per cent—taking into consideration the "sliding scale" of compensation for increasing weights provided by the statute.

Mr. BRISTOW. The committee then proceeded to inquire of all the countries of the world that are operating parcel-post systems for the detailed facts in regard to the operation of such systems, and that information was called for through the Secretary of State by the following letter:

[Copy of letter to Secretary of State.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 10, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The joint committee of the House and Senate to investigate general parcel post desire to secure some information in regard to parcel post, express, and freight as it is now in operation in certain foreign countries, and I append below a series of questions which it is desired should be answered separately, where possible, and in those cases where information is not available the fact should be stated. I would respectfully request your cooperation in obtaining the desired information through our diplomatic representatives in Australia, Austria, Belgium Denmark, Egypt, Germany, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxemburg, Netherlands, Norway, Russia, Servia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

For clearness the questions are divided into divisions as follows with explanatory notes:

I.

Maximum weight of parcel-post package carried.
Minimum charge per package carried, parcel post.
Minimum charge per package carried, express.
Minimum freight weight, package carried.
Minimum express weight, package carried.
Minimum charge per package carried, freight.
Charges by post for letters merchandise, etc., otherwise than by parcel post.

NOTE.—The above questions are designed to elicit precise information as to the maximum weight limit of parcels carried by post and the minimum weight limit for purposes of shipment by express and freight. Thus in the United States the minimum weight limit by freight is 100 pounds, and if the shipment should weigh less the charge would be as for 100 pounds.

It is also designed to find the minimum charges for such weights when carried by post, express, or freight, and it is especially desired to know whether articles of very small weight can be shipped by post otherwise than by parcel post, and the postal rates therefor. Thus, in Belgium the minimum charge by railway parcel post is said to be one-half franc, or 10 cents, for which sum 11 pounds can be shipped. Give full information showing whether there are lower postal rates under which shipments of a half pound or a pound might be made.

II.

Charges and regulations for collection, parcel post.
Charges and regulations for collection, express.
Charges and regulations for collection, freight.
Regulations and charges as to delivery, rural delivery.
Regulations and charges as to delivery, town delivery.
Weight limit in each delivery.
Special charges for delivery, regular delivery.
Special charge for delivery, special delivery.
As to notice for consignee.
As to notice to consignor.
Including experience by parcel post, express, and freight.

NOTE.—This series of questions is designed to secure information as to the charges made, and the working cost of the service, if obtainable, for the act of collection of the shipment at the place of origin, culminating in its deposit in the post office or railway car, and the act of delivery of the shipment to the consignee, and whether the charge is included in the regular rate. If possible, this information should be given separately with reference to weights for parcel post, express, and freight shipments. In some countries the services are performed by private parties, and typical instances of charges in such cases should be given.

III.

Insurance rates and regulations, parcel post, express, and freight.
C. O. D. rates and regulations, parcel post, express, and freight:
(a) On the price of the article.
(b) On the carrying charge.
Rate when made singly on above and rate in combination, with charges for insurance, for return receipt, both upon the collection of the price and of the rate charge.
Return of empties, rates, regulations, etc.
Packing facilities, regulations, and cost of paper or other containers and hampers, etc.

NOTE.—The above questions are designed to elicit information as to existence of insurance and C. O. D. privileges, with their related rates and regulations. It is important to know whether an uninsured article going by post or express or freight carries any right of indemnification in case of loss or injury, and also to know what the charges are for the insurance and C. O. D. service. Distinction should be made between collecting the price of the article on delivery and collecting the transportation charges therefor, and the charges should be given singly of each of the elements of service, as well as collectively where such services are rendered in combination.

Information is desired as to the rates and regulations for the return of empties or containers, as well as the cost of their purchase, by the private parties or the transportation agencies employing them; and in this connection the regulations as to packing requirements for eggs and the other more fragile articles of commerce should be explained.

IV.

Statistical report.

Receipts.	Parcel post.	Total postal receipts.	Express freight.
Number of shipments
Number of tons
Number of ton-miles
Average journey, package
Number mail pieces of all classes handled per employee, several years
Number telegrams
Number phone calls
Number mail pieces per capita of populations in country
Estimated value of parcels declared insured

In number of postal employees an estimate of number of the employees of telephone and telegraph should be deducted.

NOTE.—It is desired to secure the fullest statistical information obtainable in connection with this service, and answers to each of the specific questions above should be given where possible. To the number of mail pieces handled should be added the number of phone calls or telegrams per employee per annum, where these services are performed by the postal agency, together with the gross financial receipts of each service and the total postal receipts from all services.

V.

Railway pay.

	Parcel post.	Express.
Cost per piece handled
Cost per pound
Cost per journey
Cost per ton-mile
Cost per "axle-meter"

NOTE.—"Axle-meter" is the continental measure of car space by size of truck. Information with reference to the compensation paid the railways is desired showing the amount per piece handled, etc., as indicated in the above questions.

In countries where parcel-post zones are established the information should show the number of shipments in each zone and the average weight of such shipment. From the length of the zone the average journey may be inferred. Thus, first zone 100 miles, average journey 50 miles; second zone 200 miles, average journey 150 miles; third zone 300 miles, average journey 250 miles, etc.

By the terms "express" is meant matter carried on passenger trains, whether wholly or in part, and matter carried on scheduled trains, whether passenger or not, which make the highest speed—say, from 20 to 35 miles per hour. If the shipment during any part of the journey is carried upon a passenger train or upon the trunk lines, if carried grand vitesse or eilgut, such matter comes under the term "express."

By axle-meter is meant a unit of car movement in use on the Continent, and where the statistics are reported for car movement a note should be added explaining the meaning of the "axle-meter" with reference to the amount of car space included. In the United States the statistics give car-miles, and our cars have 8 wheels with 4 axles. Thus, the axle-meter report to be given should indicate the average ton capacity of the car and the relation of the number of axles to the number of cars.

VI.

Limitations as to size of package accepted, parcel post and express.
Classifications: What admissible in each classification, by each service.
Sizes, in miles, of zones.

NOTE.—These questions relative to the size of the package acceptable by parcel post and by express, and it is desired to know whether any distinction is made in charges for the article shipped in its "set-up" condition as compared with its "knocked-down" condition.

By classification it is meant to elicit the character of the articles admissible to parcel post and express service, with a list of the principal articles excluded.

In this connection considerable practicable information should be given as to the use made of the service, especially with reference to the sale and shipment direct by producer to consumer of standardized commodities in their retail forms and of the shipment direct from the farm or the fishery to the consumer of various food products.

VII.

Comparative chart considering classifications and charges both as to weights, sizes, and distances traversed for parcel post, express, and freight.

Tables showing comparatively the tables of rates of parcel post, express, and freight for different distances and weights.

NOTE.—The above questions require some general explanation.

In Prussia, for example, a shipment of 110 pounds may be sent by parcel post, by express, or by slow freight. The rates for each of these services are supposed to be different. The minimum weight by parcel post, let us say, is 11 pounds; by express, 22 pounds; and by freight whatever it may be. It is desired that a series of charts should be made showing comparatively a parcel-post, express, and slow-freight charges on the highest minimum weight for either (say 22 pounds) for the average distance delivered, which, let us say, in Germany would be 75 miles, with a like chart showing the comparative rates for each service on 110-pound shipment for the same distance.

In the "comparative rate tables" the actual rates themselves for different weights and distances from 11 pounds up to 110 pounds or the maximum weight limit of the parcel post should be given. Shipments will tend to move by the lowest rate where the services meet the shippers' requirements, and it is the design of the questions in the above division to secure information giving information as to rates for like weights and distances for the three services. In countries where the railway net work is divided into two or more controls these rates should be given for the control commanding the greatest railway area. Thus, in Germany, Prussia, and in England for the largest railway company.

VIII.

A copy of the legislative act or acts under which the Parcel Post Service was established.

I would appreciate it greatly if you would cause this information to be procured with the greatest possible dispatch.

I beg to suggest that possibly it might expedite the matter if several copies of these questions be sent to each of the various diplomats.

Very truly, yours,

JOSEPH L. BRISTOW,
Chairman Joint Committee to Investigate General Parcel Post.

In due time we began to hear from the other countries. We heard from all the European nations, but we got no information of any value from the Post Office Department of the United States until the 30th day of December last. The last report to come to the joint commission was from our own department located here in Washington. We heard from England and other European countries months before we heard from the department here, and before that information was furnished to the commission three or four changes had been made by executive order by the Postmaster General.

Now, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] may think such action is good administration. He may think that it is such proper cooperation, as the law requires between the department and a committee of Congress. I do not think so.

I want now to come to the practical side of this question. The American people are not so much interested as to when or how these orders were made as they are in the orders and their value to them as a part of their Postal Service.

Now, what are they? The first order increased the weight of the packages delivered in the first and second zones from 11 to 20 pounds, and very materially reduced the rates. That continued for a few months, and then the Postmaster General issued another order increasing the weights in the first and second zones to 50 pounds and the weights in the remaining six zones to 20 pounds.

In the first order he abolished the first zone and made the rates on both the first and second zones as created by law the same, as follows:

One pound, 5 cents. That was within the radius of 150 miles. Two pounds, 6 cents, and so forth. Five cents for the first pound, and 1 cent for each additional pound up to 50 pounds.

That is the way the law stands now as amended by the Postmaster General, and it is the same whether the package of 50 pounds is carried 5 miles or 150 miles.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the manner by which this rate is being applied and how it is working out. I will do that by illustrating certain rates here.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume that we are all very much more interested in the actual result of this change than we are in the manner in which it was made, but I am curious to know one thing, as the Senator proceeds, if he can answer me at this point. The law requires changes to be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BRISTOW. After investigation.

Mr. CUMMINS. After investigation. The law creating the Interstate Commerce Commission and the law that applies to this work in fixing rates for common carriers prescribe that the rates which they affix must be just and reasonable and without discrimination. That is understood in the law, of course, to be rates which, at the least, will return to common carriers the cost of the service and a fair reward upon the value of the property through which the service is performed. I should like to know what rule the Interstate Commerce Commission adopted in determining whether the rates or changes made or suggested by the Postmaster General were just and reasonable and without discrimination. Did the Interstate Commerce Commission apply the same rule that it applies to common carriers?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say to the Senator that the commission made no investigation of its own at all. A member of the commission told me that they listened to the representatives of the Post Office Department who presented the case to the commission one afternoon, and that the commission approved the action. This member stated to me that the commission did not devote more than two hours, all told, to the consideration of the case. So, of course, they applied no rule to it; they regarded it as a pro forma matter, and approved what the Postmaster General recommended.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I gather from what the Senator from Kansas has said that he feels that these changes in the zones and in rates and weights were not proper or were not justified by the extent of the service?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Assuming that it be so—and I am expressing no opinion about that now—why is it that the committee makes a report here recommending an amendment which will continue these rates, zones, and weights until they shall be changed by law?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me, further. If they are so radically wrong—and the Post Office Committee has had sufficient experience to justify them in saying that they are wrong and that they ought to be changed—why not make a suggestion as to what changes ought to be made?

Mr. BRISTOW. I shall suggest to the Senator, before the debate closes, what changes I think should be made; and I will further say that I favor holding the rates as they now are until the joint committee can submit to the Senate and the House of Representatives a proper schedule of rates which they believe would be just and equitable. Judging from the experience which we have had in the operation of the system which is now in force, I think it would have been much better to have left the old system until we could have changed it by reducing rates and making changes which we all now admit would have been desirable; but I do not feel that I could myself formulate a perfect system without giving very careful consideration to the operations of the law as it is. You must hold the law somewhere long enough to investigate the matter; you can not change these rates every month or so and then obtain any knowledge that will be safe to follow in formulating a permanent system.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I assume, of course, that the committee would not recommend any change in rates or in weights or in zones unless, after a full investigation, they felt justified in so doing. Why may we not apply that principle to the Post Office Department in view of the fact that neither that department nor Congress has had any particular experience with reference to the parcel post save only such as it has been able to gather since the adoption of this law?

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Ohio will listen to me for the next half hour and let me demonstrate to him what these rates are which the department has adopted and how they operate, then, if he believes that it is a proper system of rates, I suppose he will vote to let the department continue to change the rates indefinitely. If he thinks that they are not adopting for the country a system that is just and equitable, then I suppose he will want it to stop until Congress can formulate rates that will be just and equitable.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether the attitude of the Post Office Department, the figures of the department, and the justification of these changes in weights, classifications, and zones have been placed before the committee so that they would be accessible to the committee?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think so. I think the chairman of the committee can answer that question, however, better than I.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, all that there is on this subject, so far as the committee is aware, is found in the annual report of the Postmaster General and in the hearings. He made a general statement. I will say to the Senate that I wrote to the department to send the committee all the information they had on the question of weights, rates, and zones, and they sent up a partial statement and said that that was all the available information which they had.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President and Senators, I want to invite your attention to the rates charged in the Parcel Post Service, and I am first going to illustrate that subject by some rates in my own State, then I will submit rates that relate to other States, in order to show that it is a general condition. I shall take points in my own State with which I am very familiar. We will take Kansas City as the commercial metropolis of our section of the country. What was originally the first zone being abolished, the rate now in the first zone covers the radius of the first and second zones, or a radius of 150 miles around Kansas City. That rate is 5 cents a pound for the first pound and 1 cent a pound for each additional pound delivered anywhere in the territory within a radius of 150 miles of Kansas City; that is, a 50-pound package will be delivered anywhere in this region here [indicating on the map] for 54 cents. Salina, Kans., is 186 miles from Kansas City, on the Union Pacific Railroad by rail, but it is within the radial distance of 150 miles of Kansas City; so that the rate under the parcel-post scheme of Mr. Burleson from Kansas City to Salina on a 50-pound package is 54 cents for a distance of 186 miles, and it costs the department, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, 50 cents to deliver that 50-pound package from Kansas City to Salina. The shipper of that package is charged 54 cents, making a profit of 4 cents for delivering that 50-pound package, according to the department's figures. Of course I do not think that any profit is made; I think the package is carried at a loss. But for the purpose of this discussion I am going to accept Mr. Burleson's figures.

Bavaria is a village which is 7 miles west of Salina, or 193 miles from Kansas City.

Mr. TOWNSEND. By rail?

Mr. BRISTOW. By rail. It is within the radial distance of 150 miles. The rate to Bavaria from Kansas City is exactly the same as it is to Salina, 54 cents per 50-pound package. The rate from Salina to Bavaria, a distance of 7 miles, is 54 cents for a 50-pound package. According to Mr. Burleson's figures, it costs the Government 50 cents to deliver a 50-pound package from Kansas City to Salina; it costs the Government 51½ cents to deliver it from Kansas City to Bavaria, and that package from Kansas City to Bavaria goes through Salina to reach Bavaria. A citizen of Salina who would ship a similar package to Bavaria would be charged 54 cents, the same amount as Kansas City is charged, though it costs the Government, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, but 6½ cents to carry that package from Salina to Bavaria. I want to ask any Senator here if he thinks that is a just and equitable rate to charge the people of this interior Kansas town, 54 cents for 6½ cents of service, when the Government carries a similar package of 50 pounds from Kansas City through Salina to Bavaria, 193 miles, at a cost to the Government of 51½ cents for the service. I want to ask the Senator from Texas if he believes that is equitable and just in transportation rates?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think it is just on the same principle that you charge the same for carrying a letter either 5 miles or 50 miles.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator think that the same rate should be applied to freight as to letters?

Mr. SHEPPARD. So far as the parcel post is concerned, and to a limited extent; yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, this is express. Then suppose we increase this to a hundred pounds, will the Senator say that the same rate should be applied to hundred-pound packages as to letters?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have not studied this question sufficiently to state whether I should agree to go that far or not; but I do know that the weight limit in Germany is 110 pounds; in Belgium, 132 pounds; in Switzerland, 110 pounds; in Hungary, 110 pounds; in Russia, 120 pounds; in Roumania, 110 pounds; in Luxemburg, 110 pounds; and in Sweden and Norway it is 110 pounds.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not care anything about that; I do not care if it is a thousand pounds. The question I am addressing to the Senator from Texas is, Does he believe when the Government charges a citizen of Kansas City 54 cents for delivering a package of merchandise 193 miles, when it costs the Government 51½ cents to deliver it, that it is just to charge a citizen of Salina, Kans., the same amount for delivering a similar package 7 miles at a cost of 6½ cents to the Government?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. OWEN. Is the Senator from Kansas making this argument in support of the proposition that the Postmaster General shall not be allowed to change these rates?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am, upon the proposition that, having misused the power we gave him, it ought to be taken away.

Mr. OWEN. Notwithstanding that they are unjust, as he says, he wants to make them permanent?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not. I want them to remain until Congress can establish a system of rates that will be equitable and just; and it will not be very long about it if the Senator from Oklahoma will join with me in an amendment which I expect to offer to this bill later on.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. Is it not a fact that Salina, in turn, would be the center of a zone for packages originating at Salina, and that within that zone the Salina citizen, provided he had occasion to ship as far as the Kansas City man ships, would get the same rate from Salina that the Kansas City man gets from Kansas City?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am coming to that just now.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I be permitted to interrupt the Senator from Kansas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understood in the course of the debate on yesterday it was stated that the Post Office Department had no records of the cost of continuing the parcel-post service, and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] seemed to be very uncertain about whether or not this service was being conducted at a loss. To-day the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] says that the Post Office Department gives certain figures as to the cost of carrying a package from Kansas City and Salina to some other places named. How has the department arrived at that cost, in view of the statements which were made yesterday?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I will say these are estimates. The department's estimate is that it costs 2.58 mills per pound per 50 miles to handle mail on the railways. Since that estimate was made there has been an increase of cost in the operation of the Railway Mail Service because of a marked increase in the salaries of railway postal clerks; so in all of these estimates, instead of multiplying by 2.58 I have taken 2.60, which is a very slight increase, but it applies to all and is as approximate a cost as the department has been able to furnish. That is the statement which they have made in their official report as to the estimated cost of carrying the mail on the trains.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, Mr. President, if we have that estimated cost, can not the department arrive at some rate which would be more equitable than the ones to which the Senator has just referred?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly. If the department had not abolished the first zone and had allowed the 50-mile zone to remain, it would have approximated equity. My complaint is that it has abolished the original first zone, and when it will abolish the next zone nobody knows. You can not, in handling small packages, observe perfect equity with every citizen; but as you handle large packages, where the amounts involved are more, then you can divide the cost more equitably; and in such cases the zones should be multiplied still further. I expect to discuss that phase of the subject before I get through.

Mr. POMERENE. I think we are all interested in making the parcel-post system a complete success.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Kansas has pointed out here a great inequality, it seems to me, in the rates, if I understand his statement fully.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. And, for that reason, I am at a loss to understand why an amendment should be offered here to leave the zones as they are after the Senator has made the statement that it would have been better if the zones had been left as they originally were. Without the amendment, inequalities could be changed by the department.

Mr. BRISTOW. The reason which I give may not satisfy the mind of the Senator, and if he has a better system I will be glad to cooperate with him in getting it adopted; but my judgment is—and it is the judgment of the committee—that there should be no further changes until we can formulate a system of rates that approach equity as nearly as it is possible to do. That can not be done if the Postmaster General is permitted to change the rates every 50 or 60 days, because the experience that would come from the short use of a rate would be absolutely useless to the commission. You must have time in order to determine the effect of the operation of a transportation rate. It will not show its result in a month or two.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] inquired if there was not a radial distance from Salina that would give the Salina citizen the opportunity to ship a package by parcel post 150 miles, the same as is given the citizen of Kansas City; and I am just coming to that. Here [indicating on the map] is Salina, Kans. Norton, Kans., is located on the Rock Island Railroad here. [Indicating.] That is within the radial distance of 150 miles from Salina; but to get there a package must travel by rail about 330 miles, because the railroads do not run as the parallels of latitude run. That package from Salina delivered at Norton would cost the Government about 57 cents, for which it would get 54 cents. A citizen of Norton mailing a similar package to Almena, a distance of 9 miles, would be compelled to pay 54 cents, and it would cost the Government a little less than 7 cents to deliver that 50-pound package from Norton to Almena. Now, I want to know if there is any man here who believes that it is a just and equitable system of transportation to carry that package from Salina to Almena or to Norton for 54 cents, when it costs 57 cents to deliver it there, and still charge a citizen of Norton 54 cents for transporting a similar package 9 miles when it cost less than 7 cents to do so?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator if this difference comes about on account of the extension of the first zone?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; because of the abolition of the original first zone.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that the cause of the difficulty?

Mr. BRISTOW. That is what I am directing my objection to now, namely, the abolition of the first zone.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, under the rule as it stands now, the first zone is 150 miles, as I understand?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, within that zone the rate is always the same for the same weight package?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; that is right.

Mr. NORRIS. So that the same thing would occur in any zone system, except there might be a difference in degree?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; except a difference in degree.

Mr. NORRIS. So that the evil of which the Senator is speaking now comes about because, in his judgment, the present first zone is too large?

Mr. BRISTOW. Entirely. My objection is to the abolition of the first zone by the order of the Postmaster General. I think when he did that he did an absolute injustice, an act that was absolutely indefensible. No man can defend it upon any ground of equity.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. I think what the Senator from Kansas meant was not that the evil came from abolishing the first zone, but the extent of an evil that is inherent increased because of the abolition of the first zone.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; that more accurately expresses my view.

Mr. NORRIS. The evil would exist in any case, but not to the same degree if the zones were smaller.

Mr. BRISTOW. Not to the same degree; that is right.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, if the Senator please, of course he is perfectly familiar with this matter, as probably most of the Senators here are, but, in order that his speech may be clearly understood, I make the suggestion—for I think there is a misunderstanding on the part of the public—that every point in the United States, in turn, becomes the center of a zone for shipments initiated from that point.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course I know that, but I merely wanted to bring it out plainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is true. Now, it might be asked by those somewhat hypercritical why the people of Salina or of Norton, when they can get within a 150-mile zone the same rates, are complaining of Kansas City coming into their territory and delivering goods, sometimes at a loss to the Government, under the noses of the local business men and merchants? It is well known that the great mail-order houses of the United States are taking advantage of the rates which Mr. Burleson has put in force, which give them a tremendous advantage over the local merchants in every community in the United States.

I am going to illustrate that before I get through, and show that this system, if it had been written by the representatives of the mail-order houses of Chicago, New York, Kansas City, and other great cities, could not have been framed more to their advantage.

I will now take the State of Virginia, for I see before me the junior Senator from that State [Mr. SWANSON], who is a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I will take Staunton, Va., which is 154 miles by rail from Washington. It is within the radius of 150 miles, and is therefore within the first zone, as it is now constituted according to Mr. Burleson's order, but not according to the way in which the bill was originally prepared. The Post Office Department, under the order of the Postmaster General, will carry a 50-pound package of merchandise from a Washington department store to Staunton, Va., for 54 cents. It costs the Government 45 cents, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, to deliver that package. If a citizen of Staunton wanted to send a similar package to Christians, which is a village 10 miles beyond Staunton, he would pay the Government 54 cents, the same rate for which the Washington store could send the same package to Christians, although the package goes through Staunton and 10 miles farther on to Christians, and it is delivered for 54 cents, at a cost to the department of 47.6 cents. If a citizen of Staunton wants to send a package to Christians, which is 10 miles instead of 164, as it is from Washington, the Post Office Department, under Mr. Burleson's order, charges that citizen of Staunton 54 cents, just the same as it charges the department store in Washington, although it costs the Government but 7.6 cents to deliver it. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Virginia if he thinks that is fair to the people of Staunton? Is that a fair rate? Of course, there is but one answer to that, as the Senator from Virginia will promptly see. It is not and it can not be a fair rate. It is not fair to charge the citizen of Staunton 54 cents for doing 7.6 cents' worth of service, and then charge the department store in Washington only 54 cents for rendering 47.6 cents of service.

Take Lynchburg. Lynchburg by rail is 173 miles from Washington, but it is within the radial limit of 150 miles; it is within the first zone, according to Mr. Burleson's order. The rate, therefore, on 50 pounds is 54 cents, and the cost to the department, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, of delivering that 50-pound package to Lynchburg is 50 cents, for which it charges 54 cents. Amherst is a village 13 miles from Lynchburg. If a citizen of Lynchburg sends a package of 50 pounds from Lynchburg to Amherst, 13 miles, he is charged 54 cents, just the same as if that package had been sent from Washington to Amherst. In the one case the Government is serving the citizen in hauling his goods 13 miles, and in the other instance it is 160 miles.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. Are both those cities within the zone?

Mr. BRISTOW. Both of them are within the first zone.

Mr. HUGHES. Then, of course, that is bound to happen if you have the zone system.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why, to be sure; it is bound to happen. What I am complaining of, however, is the abolition of the first zone, which was created by law to give a more equitable adjustment of rates; and I am going to wait this afternoon for somebody to rise here and defend the abolition of the first zone in this law by the order of the Postmaster General. I am contending against giving the executive the right to abolish a zone which the Congress fixes after 14 months of study and deliberation by its committees.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. One result of abolishing the first zone was to give the second zone cheaper rates than theretofore, was it not?

Mr. BRISTOW. Probably.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So all within the second zone got rates as low as those originally within the first zone.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why not abolish all of them, then?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is an entirely different question.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is an entirely different proposition only in degree, is it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Three thousand miles is quite different from 150.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; but it is a difference in degree only, is it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. A difference in degree may be so great as to amount to a difference in principle.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator think it is a good system of transportation of merchandise to charge the same for 150 miles that you do for 5 miles?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas further yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My own preference would be, if I were fixing either parcel-post rates or freight rates, to charge so much a mile, to charge a rate in accordance with the distance hauled; but we have not that system.

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That system was not established by Congress. The zone system was established by Congress; and the comment I made upon the Senator's statement was in answer to his objection to a change which practically doubled the size of the first zone.

Mr. NORRIS. It trebled it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question at that point.

Suppose every railroad in the United States were to draw a circle with a radius of 150 miles around every point in the United States at which it did business and agree to transport all freight within that radius of 150 miles at the same rate. How long does the Senator think that rate would stand under the investigation of the Interstate Commerce Commission? I venture to say that it would excite universal complaint and condemnation and that it would be overthrown just the moment the Interstate Commerce Commission could take it under consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas further yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. For 30 years or more the community in which I live has been the victim of far worse practices than that on the part of railroad companies, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, while remedying the situation from which we suffered, itself fixed a series of zones for freight rates covering the entire United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. From the western points?

Mr. POINDEXTER. From the eastern points to the West. One zone was from New York and vicinity to Buffalo and Pittsburgh zones; the next one was from Buffalo and Pittsburgh to Chicago; the next one was from Chicago to St. Paul; and then there was one from there to the far West.

Mr. CUMMINS. That does not answer my question. Suppose every railroad in the United States were to draw a circle around each of the points that it serves, and publish a rate that would be uniform within the radius of 150 miles. Does the Senator from Washington believe it would be right, or does he believe it would stand under an investigation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, it is a rather fanciful supposition, and it is impossible to form any opinion as to whether it would stand or not; but it would not be more unjust nor would it be so unjust as the system upon which railroad rates are fixed at present as between different communities.

Mr. CUMMINS. There are many instances in which that is true, and they are being complained against every day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; but in the struggle of 30 years we have not been able to change them.

Mr. CUMMINS. And we now have the Government of the United States, through its Postmaster General, doing the very thing that we have complained against for all these years.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Washington lives at Spokane. I am slightly familiar with some of the struggles of Spokane for justice in rate making. I happen to live at an interior point in Kansas that has suffered just as Spokane has.

Twenty-five years ago, when we got a carload of sugar from San Francisco we paid the rate to Kansas City plus the rate from Kansas City back to Salina, although it was dropped at Salina and never went to Kansas City. For years we fought that injustice. I want to know if the Senator from Washington proposes now to ratify exactly the same principle in fixing the rates when the Government of the United States proposes to go into the transportation business?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas further yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has asked me a question. That is the only reason I ask him to yield to me.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am glad to yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator apparently entirely misunderstands the position of Spokane if he compares it with the situation created by the Postmaster General's merging of these two zones. In the first place, we have gotten very far away from the original suggestion I made, that the result of the order of the Postmaster General was to give cheaper transportation to every one within the increased zone. Since the Senator has raised the question of the Spokane rates, however, I want to say that we have been contending in Spokane for freight rates based upon a principle similar to that of which the Senator is now complaining. All that Spokane has asked for is that she should get the same rates that other communities receiving the same service in the same territory receive, and not that she should get a better rate——

Mr. BRISTOW. Receiving the same service——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment, if the Senator will let me finish the sentence.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We would be satisfied, on freight rates from Chicago or New York, to receive the same rate at Spokane that is given to Seattle, 400 miles farther west.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am willing to concede, if the Senator maintains that—I do not know what his position is in regard to it—that it would be more just to give Spokane a lower rate on that haul, which is 400 miles shorter.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We would be satisfied, at least for the time being, if we could accomplish what we never yet have been able to accomplish and get an equal rate.

Mr. BRISTOW. I shall not pursue that any further, because I have some illustrations in the Senator's State, and I want him to discuss this subject further when I get to them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have known, but I have forgotten, and therefore I ask the Senator what was the first zone?

Mr. BRISTOW. The first zone was 50 miles.

I have submitted these illustrations as to Virginia, and I do not think either of the Senators from Virginia will contend that this order of Mr. Burleson's abolishing the first zone was a just one. Do we want to leave it within his power to abolish the second zone and to make the same rate for the third, or should we fix these zones according to law and let the business of the country adjust itself to that system?

Take the State of Maryland. The junior Senator from Maryland, I see, is not present. He was here yesterday, and read from a Baltimore paper an editorial criticizing the committee very severely. I am sorry he is not present now, because I wanted his opinion on some of these Maryland rates, to see if he thinks they are just and equitable to all the people of Maryland. I will put the matter in the RECORD in any event, and then the Senator can discuss it at some other time when he returns.

The distance from Baltimore to Cumberland by rail is 192 miles. Cumberland is within the radius of 150 miles from Baltimore; therefore it is within the first zone. The distance from Baltimore to Mount Savage, Md., a village 4 miles beyond Cumberland, is 196 miles. The rate from Baltimore to Mount Savage is 54 cents for 50 pounds. The cost to the Government for delivering a package from Baltimore to Mount Savage, carrying it, through Cumberland, 4 miles farther, is 56 cents, 2 cents more than the Government gets out of it. Now, if a citizen of Cumberland ships a package of 50 pounds of identically the same merchandise, or whatever it may be, to Mount Savage, the Government charges him 54 cents for carrying that package of 50 pounds 4 miles. It costs the Government, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, 6 cents to render that service.

I want to inquire of any Senator here if he thinks that is a just charge, if he thinks that is a fair system of rate making for transporting merchandise? The big department stores at Baltimore get 56 cents' worth of service from the Government for which they pay 54 cents. The citizen of Cumberland gets 6 cents' worth of service from the Government for which it charges him 54 cents. Does the Senate think that is just? Do the Senators from Maryland want to ratify that system of rate making? If they do, they will vote to ratify the action of Mr. Burleson by voting against this amendment.

I will take the city of Baltimore. The city of Baltimore is a great city, 40 miles northeast of here. It has a number of great establishments that use the mails very extensively. So has the city of Philadelphia, which is 96 miles from Baltimore. A citizen of Philadelphia can ship 50 pounds of merchandise from Philadelphia to Rossville, Md., which is 84 miles from Philadelphia, and the charge which the Government makes is 54 cents. The cost is 26 cents. If a citizen of Baltimore sends a similar package to Rossville, a distance of 11 miles, he is charged 54 cents, although the Government renders him but 7.9 cents' worth of service.

I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland—I see he is here now—if he believes that is a just system of rate making, to permit a citizen of Philadelphia to land goods in the suburbs of Baltimore for one-fourth the amount of expense per mile that is imposed upon the Baltimore citizen?

Now we come to the State of Mississippi. I have been pleased to see the Senators from Mississippi present this afternoon.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am not familiar with the rates, and I certainly would not say offhand, upon a mere prima facie appearance of inequality, that the whole system was badly adjusted or that the whole system was inequitable. There is certainly nothing in the individual inequality the Senator points out that should in any sense justify Congress in taking away from the Postmaster General the power to alter the inequality.

If I may make a further remark, with the permission of the Senator from Kansas——

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I was very much interested yesterday in listening to the invocation of the spirit of George Washington by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], with which the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Utah seemed to sympathize. There was a sort of passage of sympathy and understanding between the Senators. There was a disapproval in the atmosphere of the aggressiveness of the executive department in encroaching—I think that was the word quoted from the Farewell Address of the Father of his Country—upon the prerogatives, so to speak, of Congress.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, if he will reply to the Senator from Florida in his own time, and just devote himself to this particular question, I shall be obliged, as I wish to get through.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I was going to bring the matter down to the remarks of the Senator from Kansas in just one moment.

I gathered from the remarks of the Senator from Kansas, so far as I have had the pleasure of listening to him, that, far from any encroachment by the executive upon the legislative, there is a proposition on foot to take away from the executive certain powers with which he has been previously vested. The encroachment seems to come from the Capitol, and not from the Post Office Department. The spirit of George Washington seems to have been invoked too soon. If he is coming here to reprove anybody, he must come here to reprove the legislative branch of our Government.

I think the Senator from Kansas has dealt with this matter with wonderful vigor and with great interest, but I have not gathered from what he said any conception of this matter except that it is clearly an executive business matter; and yet I think he describes it as being somewhat in the hands of a legislative committee, and I understand he proposes very clearly to change the law, to take this plain executive function away from the Postmaster General and restore it to a legislative committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, does the Senator think the fixing of postage rates is an executive function?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should think that so complicated a system, involving so many details and involving possible competition with other systems of carriage, is clearly a matter that can be more safely intrusted to executive action than to legislative deliberation. Furthermore, I do not think the action of the executive in this matter should be subjected to the regulation of Congress, and possibly that of the Interstate Commerce Commission as well, when the competing carriers apparently are only subjected to the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator see any reason why the executive should not fix the rates on first, second, and third class mail matter as well as on fourth-class mail matter?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. You probably would have a much more philosophical and harmonious system if you did put it right up to the executive to get results by fixing the rates.

Mr. BRISTOW. Then, does the Senator see any objection to authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the tariff duties? The fixing of tariff duties is a very complicated thing, more complicated than the fixing of postal rates.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Of course there are limitations upon all of these functions, and the reductio ad absurdum is very readily reached; but we all know, if I may invoke the advent of the shade of George Washington, that there was nothing which hampered the progress of the War of the Revolution so much as the interference of Congress in the conduct of the war—the legislative jealousy, the legislative ambition, so to speak, hampering the great commander whose shade was invoked here yesterday at every turn of that vital controversy.

Without discussing the entire schedule, in which, of course, the Senator is much more of an expert than I am, and without going into other details of legislation, instead of being an attack upon Congress by the aggressive executive this appears to be the taking away by Congress of powers already vested in the executive and not yet fully developed or completely harmonized.

I do not mean to say, Mr. President, nor do I wish to be understood as saying that this is not a proper subject for legislation on the part of Congress; but I do say that this is no occasion for the suggestion that the administration has been too aggressive, whereas under the present circumstances of this report and this amendment the entire aggression appears to come from the legislative end.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand the Senator from Maryland considers my suggestion as to the levying of customs duties somewhat different; he thinks that would be absurd, while he thinks that it would be an improvement to permit the Postmaster General to fix the postage rates. In my opinion there is no more reason why he should fix postage rates than why the Secretary of the Treasury should fix the rates of internal taxation or of customs duties. The one, I think, would be just as consistent as the other.

The Senator says we are undertaking to take from the executive an authority which he already has; we are, in fact, undertaking to take from the executive an authority which we believe he has not used for the best interests of the people, an authority which we gave him, which was ours to give, and which was given, according to some able lawyers here, in violation of the Constitution; but be that as it may, we gave it. Since we gave it, if we think it has not been properly used, have not we the right to withhold from him any further exercise of the power which we bestowed? That is all we are asking here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas, if we passed this bill with this proviso left out of it, whether we would not leave the Postmaster General of the United States with the power to make a new law every Tuesday or every Friday, whenever he got ready?

Mr. BRISTOW. Just as often as he wanted to; yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I thought.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now I want to take up Mississippi.

Hazlehurst, Miss., is 150 miles from New Orleans. Under the present law the rate on 50-pound packages from New Orleans to Hazlehurst is 54 cents. According to Mr. Burleson's figures, it costs the Government 44 cents to carry that package from New Orleans to Hazlehurst. Crystal Springs, Miss., is 9 miles from Hazlehurst. Under this order of Mr. Burleson's the Government will carry 50 pounds from New Orleans through Hazlehurst to Crystal Springs for 54 cents, and it costs the Government to deliver that package, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, 46.3 cents. Now, if a citizen of Hazlehurst were to ship a package of exactly the same weight and the same material from Hazlehurst to Crystal Springs, a distance of 9 miles, he would have to pay 54 cents for transporting that package 9 miles, the same as a New Orleans merchant paid for transporting his package 159 miles. It costs the Government 7.3 cents to carry that package from Hazlehurst to Crystal Springs. It costs it 46.3 cents to carry it from New Orleans to Crystal Springs. Now, is it just to charge the citizen of Hazlehurst 54 cents for rendering him 7 cents' worth of service and to charge the citizen of New Orleans 54 cents for rendering him 46 cents' worth of service? Is that equal or fair treatment?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator address that question to me?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not know of any law or of any system that operates with perfect equality. This system is to-day in the uncompleted stage. Now, I am going to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. The Senator says that is the law now?

Mr. BRISTOW. That is the order of the Postmaster General.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Now?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator propose to change it?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; not now; but I propose to have us change it as soon as we can.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator favor letting it remain as it is?

Mr. BRISTOW. I favor taking from the Postmaster General the authority to make any more changes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is not the question.

Mr. BRISTOW. Just a minute. That is based upon the fact that the changes he has already made are unwise and unjust, and he should not be permitted to make any further changes; and if the Senator will support me, before this debate is over we will correct the inequalities that he has put in the law.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then, when the Senator proposes a measure that will correct the existing inequalities and perfect the system, he may rely not only upon me to support him, but upon every other Senator on this floor. I do not understand that it is the purpose of the Senator to change the law as it now stands, but to have it remain just as it is?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; until Congress can legislate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Senator has no remedy for the imperfection that at present exists?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; the Senator has.

Mr. VARDAMAN. When the Senator proposes it I shall be very glad to consider it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. Pardon me just a moment. I wish to ask the junior Senator from Mississippi if he believes the Postmaster General, when he abolished the first zone, did a wise and equitable thing?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I rather think that he did.

Mr. BRISTOW. That he did?

Mr. VARDAMAN. That he did. I rather think that the system as it now is is better for the American people than it was before. As to errors still in existence, or rather the imperfections of the system, I do not pretend to say that they do not exist.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator believes then——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the senior Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. In just a minute. The Senator believes, then, that it is right to charge the citizen of Hazlehurst 54 cents for rendering him 7 cents' worth of service, while the Government renders the citizen of New Orleans 47 cents' worth of service and charges exactly the same price for it?

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; the case as stated by the Senator from Kansas brings about an inequality it is true, but in the general working of the system the whole people are greatly benefited by it.

Mr. BRISTOW. By these changes?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. If an ordinary common carrier should do just what the United States Government is doing in that case, would it not be attacked before the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. BRISTOW. I should think so. Suppose the express companies charge the same rate from Hazlehurst to Crystal Springs that they charge from New Orleans to Crystal Springs, would the junior Senator from Mississippi say that they were making fair charges?

Mr. VARDAMAN. The order of the Postmaster General which the Senator from Kansas complains of was made after conference with the Interstate Commerce Commission and with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I have the permission of the Senator from Kansas to interrupt him. Then we have come to a point where the United States Government is doing things for which it would punish a common carrier. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas this question. Of course I have no sort of feeling against the Postmaster General. He is one of my old, lifelong friends. I am devoted to him personally. He was one of my "crowd" in the other House. I believe in him thoroughly. I do not believe he would do anything purposely wrong. I make no attack upon him at all, but I do say the Postmaster General of this country has not a right to do a thing for which we would punish a common carrier, an express company or a railroad company, and that when you undertake to charge more or charge as much for a short haul as for a long one you are violating the general principle of ethics and equality that ought to prevail in the United States. It was suggested to my mind a moment ago that perhaps the Senator from Kansas is struggling toward this point, that he did not want the Postmaster General to increase the number of his errors, and that even if he could correct the errors the Postmaster General has already made he did not want to have them increased.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. LANE. I should like to suggest that while under the parcel-post system the rates are discriminatory in some of the charges for the short haul, in the main the business of the Government is done more equitably than was that of the express companies. Whereas the Government in some cases may overcharge for short hauls the express companies invariably overcharged for both long and short hauls.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me, nobody disputes that. There is not any Government in the world that could act worse than the express companies have acted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will please address the Chair.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] will stay with me patiently this afternoon, I will demonstrate to him that the system which is now in force, as changed by the Postmaster General, is in the interest of the express companies and not against their interest. I hope that he will wait until I get to that.

I will continue another illustration from Mississippi. The postage rate on 50 pounds from Memphis to Greenwood, a distance of 152 miles, is 54 cents. It costs the Government 44½ cents, according to Mr. Burleson's figures. The distance from Greenwood to Carrollton is 16 miles. It costs the Government, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, 9 cents to deliver this package 16 miles. Yet the Government charges the citizen of Greenwood 54 cents for rendering him 9 cents' worth of service, while it renders the citizen of Memphis 44½ cents' worth of service for the same amount. If the Senators from Mississippi think that that is equitable and just, then they will favor the system which Mr. Burleson has established in abolishing the first zone.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Under the law, could the Postmaster General have any other discretion than to act under the zone system?

Mr. BRISTOW. He did not establish the zone system. The zone system was established by Congress.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly.

Mr. BRISTOW. He abolished the first zone.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly; but he was compelled to follow the zone system, and Congress is responsible for the inequality and not the Postmaster General.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator has listened to me without effect if he has not learned that there is no claim here that any zone system can be so organized as to make all charges exactly equal.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Postmaster General is not responsible for the inequalities of the zone system.

Mr. BRISTOW. But, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, the Postmaster General is greatly exaggerating the very inequalities.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is trying to make the Postmaster General responsible for the whole proposition.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Texas is mistaken, for I have said time and again that the zone system was written into the law by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Did you support it?

Mr. BRISTOW. I did. I drew it. I voted to put it in the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. How can you defend the inequalities that have made possible the exaggerations?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator must see that I admit that we can not have it absolutely without inequalities.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yet you are attempting to criticize the inequalities.

Mr. BRISTOW. My contention is that when the Postmaster General abolishes one zone he exaggerates without cause those inequalities.

Mr. SHEPPARD. You are attacking inequalities for the original inauguration of which you are yourself responsible.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator wants to put that construction on it, he may do so; I have no objection. If his mind does not encompass a question of this kind with any more capacity than his statement indicates, that is his misfortune and not mine.

Now, we will proceed to take up an illustration from the State of Nebraska. From Omaha to Hastings, Nebr., the distance is 152 miles. Omaha is within a radius of 150 miles of Hastings. It is within the first zone as created by the order of the Postmaster General. Kenesaw is a village 14 miles out of Hastings and 14 miles beyond Hastings from Omaha. The rate from Omaha to Kenesaw is the same. It is within the first zone, and the rate on 50 pounds is 54 cents. The rate from Hastings to Kenesaw, a distance of 16 miles, is 54 cents. It costs the Government 48.2 cents, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, to deliver a package from Omaha to Kenesaw. It costs the Government, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, 8.6 cents to deliver a package from Hastings to Kenesaw. The department charges a citizen of Hastings 54 cents for rendering 8.6 cents' worth of service, while for the same amount it renders the Omaha man 48 cents' worth of service. The packages pass through Hastings en route to Kenesaw, but the citizen at Hastings is charged just as much to get his 50-pound package 14 miles as the citizen of Omaha is charged to get his package 166 miles.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Nebraska may think that is just, but I do not.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Kansas I do not believe that is just.

Mr. BRISTOW. I knew the Senator did not. I should not have so intimated.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not like the Senator to impute that to me.

Mr. BRISTOW. I beg the Senator's pardon. I know the Senator would not stand for that a minute.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator a question on that point.

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Take the same amount charged from Hastings to Kenesaw. Between the two towns, about half way, there is the town Juniata. Has the Senator any figures from which he can state what a 50-pound package would cost from Hastings to Juniata?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; and I will tell the Senator why. When we developed in the committee the Parcel Post System we limited it to 11-pound packages. The Senator will see, on a fair consideration of this matter, that where you deal with small quantities for short distances you can not make the charge absolutely equitable, because you can not divide up the charges so as to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. BRISTOW. When you get into large amounts, 50 or 150 or 200 pounds, then, in my opinion, you should have a different system of rates; there should be a different system established.

Mr. NORRIS. In both cases they are merchandise.

Mr. BRISTOW. In both cases they are merchandise.

Mr. NORRIS. The only difference is in degree. I concede that an arrangement which would be suitable for a very small package would be different entirely in the case of a very large package, a package of two or three hundred pounds. It would be more important to have a whole lot of zones if you were to take packages of a large and heavy size.

Mr. BRISTOW. It would be absolutely essential.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, the nearer you would approach a charge that should be a compensation for the service rendered.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is right.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. He does not favor the abolishment of the zone system?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am for it. I am very much for it, of course. What I am objecting to is abolishing the first zone by the Postmaster General. I want to take from him any authority to abolish any more of them.

Mr. NORRIS. If the package is increased in size, assuming that we first have a zone system that is right, then, of course, the size of the packages carried ought to be increased with the number of zones.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think that is equitable when you get into big packages. I agree with the Senator on that point exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. The point on which I can not agree with the Senator is that he proposes now to make a law of the act of the Postmaster General which has brought about this very difficulty.

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it should be plain to anyone that Congress, the House and the Senate, as a practical proposition can not fix the rates for the payment of the transportation of merchandise.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think it has got to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe that it can.

Mr. BRISTOW. It must do it. We might just as well undertake it. We have authority to do it, technically speaking. There is, perhaps, not as much reason for it, but the same theory would apply as in fixing freight rates. I think that ought to have been done in the beginning.

Mr. NORRIS. By Congress?

Mr. BRISTOW. Surely.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is true, then I do not believe the Senator and myself can get together on any proposition of that kind, because I believe that it is an impracticable proposition for the House of Representatives, with over 400 Members, and the Senate, with nearly 100, to fix rates. The Senator will find, I believe, that they would never fix them and fix them right. It would be a job that they never could get through with.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator misunderstands me. I would not say that Congress ought to go through all the detailed service of the United States and fix the individual rates, but I do say that originally there should have been some law which prescribed the way in which the rates should be fixed, and not on the ipse dixit of selfish men, who seek to exploit one community to the detriment of another.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it was the intention of the law we passed last year that we would give to the Postmaster General, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the right to fix the rates; but I think we would all agree, and it would probably be found upon trial, that it would not be always equitable. We limited his authority, as I remember the law, and practically provided that the readjustment, if any should be made, should take place under his supervision, so as to correspond with the cost of the transportation.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is, we are undertaking now to correct abuses that have grown up in the transportation system which should have been prevented in the first place, if we had known what we now know. That was impossible, of course, because, we were entering upon a new era of development; but our legislation in regard to the fixing of rates for 25 years has been to correct evils the creation of which, if we had known then what we know now, could have been prevented. I would not want it said that we should fix every individual rate. Of course that would be ridiculous. I would not want anyone to understand that I advocate any such idea. The only way that I now see for equitably adjusting these postal rates for parcel post is by a zone system. We worked out a zone system as best we could, and my complaint now is that the Postmaster General has abolished the first zone of the system, and the result of that abolition has been to create these marked discriminations that can not be defended. No man has ever said that a 50-mile zone was not equitable or just or convenient in the administration of the postal affairs, and the Postmaster General had no business, in the interest of the service, in the interest of the American people, to abolish it.

Now, take O'Neill, Nebr. O'Neill is 197 miles from Omaha. The rate to O'Neill which the Government charges is 54 cents, because it is within a 150-mile radius of Omaha. It costs the Government, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, 56.2 cents to deliver a package of 50 pounds at O'Neill, 2.2 cents more than the Government gets out of it. When a citizen of O'Neill sends a package of exactly the same quality and character to Inman, 8 miles away, he is charged 54 cents, although it costs the Government but 7 cents to deliver that package.

Now, it can not be fair to charge the citizen of O'Neill 54 cents for rendering him 7 cents' worth of service and then charge the citizen of Omaha 54 cents for rendering him 56 cents' worth of service. That can not be defended. Yet the abolition of the first zone has brought about just such an indefensible situation.

Mr. NORRIS. I may have asked a question of the same nature before, and I do not care to go over it again. If we had the 50-mile zone now, the zone that was abolished, with the exception of the difference the same evil would exist.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; not the same.

Mr. NORRIS. It would be only a difference in amount.

Mr. BRISTOW. It exaggerates the inequality.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; but that is true of any zone system.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand. I have said that a number of times this afternoon. Why should you exaggerate this inherent inequality?

Mr. NORRIS. I am not desiring to exaggerate it, Mr. President.

Mr. BRISTOW. My complaint is that the Postmaster General has done so without any occasion for it.

Mr. NORRIS. And my complaint of the Senator's position is that, after the Postmaster General has done that, he would have Congress pass a law that would prevent the remedying of that very evil.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I am not. The Senator does me injustice.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to do that, I assure the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. What the Senator from Kansas is undertaking to do is to prevent the Postmaster General from making any more mistakes like this, and then the committee will undertake to formulate, with the experience we now have, a just and equitable system.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask——

Mr. BRISTOW. We had one in the beginning.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming that the Postmaster General is acting in good faith, and I do assume that, even though I might disagree with him as to the abolishment of that zone——

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not question that.

Mr. NORRIS. When the matter is brought out and the Postmaster General says that he has taken a step which will bring about an injustice, does the Senator think that the Postmaster General would not himself want to rectify it, or that there would be any danger of his making again any mistake of the same kind? Here, when we prevent by law the Postmaster General from making another mistake, the same law prevents the Postmaster General from rectifying the mistake that he has made in the past.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Postmaster General does not admit that he has made a mistake.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be true.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Postmaster General, I take it for granted, thinks that he has not made any mistake.

Mr. NORRIS. Would not this be true: If we pass the amendment which the Senator supports, while we would prevent another mistake from being made, we would prevent the rectifying of mistakes that have already been made?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; the Postmaster General does not intend to reestablish this zone. This is his action. That is what I am complaining about. If he makes any changes, he will make more mistakes just like this. He proposes now to increase the weight to a hundred pounds.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether he would make more mistakes or not, but while the Senator would prevent him from making more, assuming that is a mistake, would not this same law prevent him from rectifying the mistake that the Senator is complaining of?

Mr. BRISTOW. It would prevent him from throwing any more responsibility on Congress to rectify mistakes he has already made, and I take it for granted the Senator from Nebraska will join me in undertaking to correct this as rapidly as possible.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be very glad to do so, but it seems to me the committee could have reached it better if they had provided by this amendment to restore the zone that has been taken away or perhaps make the first zone smaller than it was before, because we recognize the fact that the packages have been increased, and that is one reason for making the zone smaller instead of larger.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator would rather depend upon the Postmaster General who has made these mistakes to correct them than have Congress do it.

Mr. NORRIS. As I said a while ago, I do not believe that it is a practical proposition for Congress to legislate on the details of any system of carrying merchandise. I thought when we passed the law we had placed the matter in a very good place. If we were mistaken and if we have given authority to make these changes to some official who ought not to have the authority, then we ought to change the law; but somebody ought to have the authority; and it seemed to me when we gave it to the Postmaster General and provided that he should make no change except when the Interstate Commerce Commission consented to it that we had placed the responsibility exactly where it ought to be.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator think the changes have been properly made?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not say that. My own idea is that the Postmaster General could have made changes that would have improved the system. I have my doubts about the wisdom of the Postmaster General in abolishing this first zone. I am inclined to think that the first zone ought to remain; but the rates were too high, and the weight of packages, I think, was too small. We started in with a sort of experiment in the law. I felt, and suppose the Senator felt, that we had established the rates a little too high.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; I am convinced of that.

Mr. NORRIS. We made the rate on the packages a little too high. I felt that way, but I wanted to be on the safe side, and I anticipated that after the law was in force the Postmaster General would cut down the rates and would increase the weight of the packages.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question, preceding it with a brief statement.

I think he is entirely right as to the best way of making rates. I do not believe Congress can adjust a complicated system of rates. But it is easy for Congress to declare a policy and for the executive officer to administer it or carry it into effect. What rule did we give the Postmaster General by which he was to be guided in making these changes? None at all. We left him at perfect liberty to apply the postage-stamp theory, eliminating distance and cost entirely; and he is approaching that in these changes. I have no doubt about his good faith; but is it not true that we ought to give him some rule that will control him or govern him in determining what these rates shall be? It seems to me we ought to do it, and we ought not to vest in him or anybody else that undetermined, that unrestricted authority which the provision in the original act gave to him

I have no objection at all to the power being vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, or jointly in the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Postmaster General, if we say to him what our policy is with regard to these rates. Must they be nondiscriminatory? We have said that in regard to rates for our common carriers. The United States has now become a common carrier of freight. Are the rates to be just and reasonable as between individuals and as between communities? Are they to be sufficient to defray the cost of the service? Are they to be sufficient to lay aside any surplus over the cost of the service? What is our policy with regard to that? We ought to have one, but if we have not announced it, we have simply abdicated all our legislative power and have attempted to vest it in the Postmaster General. I do not think we have any authority to give the Postmaster General the power that we gave him in this act. Now is the time, it seems to me, to declare some policy, and if this power is still to reside in the Postmaster General we should give him guideposts anyhow that would lead him to the proper end.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Iowa directed his question to me. That is my excuse for interrupting the Senator now, but I will not be offended if the Senator does not desire to yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am willing to yield if it does not take too long.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will realize that the Senator from Iowa asked me a question. I do not want to discuss it. I will be as brief as I can.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would like to get through, but I will yield at this time to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I will answer in a very brief way. I will not go into the details, because I do not want to take the time of the Senator from Kansas.

I think it would be all right to give to the Postmaster General a policy. I really think in a degree we give him one. If I had my way about it, I would provide a policy. I would by a specific statute instruct him, as near as I could, as a practical proposition to provide rates that would compensate the Government for the expense, so that at least we would be getting back the actual cost of transportation of this merchandise. I do believe in the zone system, but when we have a zone system there will be some inequalities naturally, because no matter what limit you put on the zone towns within the zone or towns without the zone will be charged for a short distance the same rate as for a longer distance.

Mr. BRISTOW. I must hasten through, because I wish to put in some more illustrations here. I now take up the State of Iowa. By rail from Chicago to Dubuque is 172 miles. Dubuque is within the first zone from the city of Chicago. Durango is 8 miles beyond Dubuque, or 180 miles from Chicago. That is within the first zone. The rate from Chicago to Durango through Dubuque is 54 cents, and the cost to the Government, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, is 51.8 cents. The distance from Dubuque to Durango is 8 miles, and the rate from Dubuque to Durango is 54 cents. It costs the Government, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, 7 cents to deliver a 50-pound package from Dubuque to Durango; that is, the citizen of Dubuque is charged 54 cents for 7 cents' worth of service, while the citizen of Chicago is given 51.8 cents' worth of service for the same amount.

I have other illustrations here from Iowa, illustrating the rates from Chicago to Davenport and Clinton, from Des Moines to Fort Dodge, from Minneapolis to Mason City and Norwich, carrying out the same principle and showing the same discrimination and inequality. They carry out what is illustrated by the Dubuque and Durango rates referred to.

I now call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to these rates. The distance from Spokane to North Yakima is 236 miles by rail. North Yakima is within the first zone from Spokane. Spokane is a commercial center in that region of the country. The rate from Spokane to North Yakima on 50 pounds of merchandise is 54 cents.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What was the distance the Senator stated?

Mr. BRISTOW. Two hundred and thirty-six miles.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If I understand, the first zone is 150 miles?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; that is the radial zone; that is, 150 miles in an air line, but the distance by rail is 236 miles to North Yakima from Spokane, which is in the first zone on the postal map. The rate is 54 cents and the cost to the Government in delivering that package is 66.4 cents—that is, 12.4 cents more than the Government gets out of it—a loss of 12.4 cents.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, some other Senator has already commented on the fact that the Senator from Kansas yesterday stated that it was impossible to ascertain the cost of this service. Now the Senator is stating the cost.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am stating it from Mr. Burleson's figures. I think the department underestimates the cost. I think the cost is more than that given; but it can not be accurately obtained. I have said several times this afternoon that the Post Office Department says that it costs to ship on the railroads 2.6 mills—to be accurate, 2.58 mills—per pound for 50 miles. I am using the figures which the department furnished in their estimate of the cost.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, the Senator from Kansas concedes that there must be a zone system; the Senator does not contend that there should be a flat mileage rate. So there must be more or less discrimination. Taking the system as a whole, as it is standing now, the Postmaster General insists that there has been a very large profit to the Government, and just as much credence should be attached to that statement of the Postmaster General as is attached to the figures which the Senator gives.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me ask the Senator from Washington a question. The Postmaster General says—and when I speak of the Postmaster General I speak of the department; of course, his officials do this work under his direction—the Post Office Department says that there is a loss of more than 6 cents a pound on second-class matter. The charge for handling second-class matter is 1 cent per pound. It is plain that if there is a loss of 6 cents per pound for handling that matter that it costs the department about 7 cents a pound. The Hughes commission found that there was a loss of about $50,000,000 per annum in handling second-class matter. Can the department charge the same rate for fourth and second class matter, as it is doing, and make money on one and lose on the other, when the expense is the same in handling both?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems, Mr. President, if the figures which the Senator from Kansas is stating are correct and reliable, that they are doing it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am giving the figures which the department furnishes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is citing those figures himself, and he ought to accept his own figures.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Washington wants to be fair in this discussion, he will concede that I have stated here at least several times this afternoon that I think these figures underestimate the real cost. That is my opinion. I think it costs more than 64 cents to deliver a package of 50 pounds from Spokane to North Yakima, but I am using the figures which the department furnishes as their estimate of the cost.

Mr. GRONNA and Mr. BRYAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply want to suggest to the Senator from Kansas that in the rate on second-class mail matter there are no zones.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is true.

Mr. GRONNA. But one flat rate is charged, and so it is hardly fair to make the comparison of the parcel post, which has several zones, with the second-class mail matter, which has, you might say, but one zone.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is true. There would be on a part of the fourth-class mail matter an increased rate—that is, a part of the second-class mail matter goes beyond the first zone—and the rate, if it were sent under the same system as the parcel post, would be increased.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me further, I will say that I believe it is contended that there is no loss in the handling of the second-class mail matter within a distance of 50 miles, but that it is in the long haul where the loss is sustained.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is probably true. I do not know whether it is conceded that there is no loss within 50 miles, though that might be conceded; but I have not clearly in my mind those figures, as it has been some time since I looked them up.

Mr. GRONNA. I think I am correct in stating that the hearings before the Post Office Committee show that within the 50 miles there is no loss.

Mr. BRISTOW. There may not be within what we originally fixed as the first parcel-post zone.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The point raised by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is the very one which we had under discussion this morning in the committee, and it brings out the difference between the calculation made by the Post Office Department and the one which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] is now making, because the rate on this class of mail matter increases as the zone increases. We have no figures, however, to determine the amount of matter that is confined within the zone of short distance, which really brings in the greatest revenue or shows the least loss. Under the flat rate we might carry the matter at a loss throughout the entire distance, but that is not the case under the zone system, where in the short distance we have the greatest amount of income. One of the gentlemen present this morning testified before the committee that within a radius of 44 miles of the city of Boston they had cut the express rate in two, had almost approximated the parcel-post rate, and yet had been able to realize a profit of $12,000 on the carriage from one city to another city.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would not disturb the rates within the 50-mile zone. My contention at present is, as the Senator understands, not for the abolition of the system of zones.

Pursuing this illustration from the State of Washington, I will say that the distance from Spokane to North Yakima is 236 miles, and it costs 66.4 cents to deliver a package from Spokane to North Yakima—12.4 cents more than the postage rates. Wapato is a village that is 12 miles from North Yakima. The rate on 50 pounds from North Yakima to this village, a distance of 12 miles, is 54 cents, the same as from Spokane to North Yakima, a distance of 236 miles. It costs the Government 8 cents to deliver that package from North Yakima to Wapato, a distance of 12 miles. I want to ask the Senator from Washington if he thinks it is fair for the Government of the United States to render a citizen of Spokane 66.4 cents' worth of service and to charge him but 54 cents for it, while it charges the citizens of North Yakima 54 cents for 8 cents' worth of service?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in the first place, I altogether deny the accuracy of those figures as to cost. The Government has a system established; it has its clerks on the trains; and, of course, there is some difference in the amount that is paid to the railroads; but the greater part of the expense of the Government in carrying these packages would be just the same between North Yakima and Wapato as it would be between Spokane and North Yakima.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Washington will permit me—I know he means to be right—he is mistaken now. The Government pays the railroad for carrying this package from Spokane to North Yakima, according to Mr. Burleson's figures, 61.4 cents; that is the railroad charge. That is based upon weight. The railroad gets 7 cents more out of this than the Government gets in postage.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in the first place, the basis of payment to the railroad companies is a very uncertain basis.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; that is one of the things which can be ascertained with some accuracy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think it has been settled on any accurate basis; and it is the subject now of investigation, for the very reason that it is not settled upon any accurate basis.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me understand. It may not be an equitable basis of payment, but the amount which is paid to the railroad can be ascertained with some accuracy, because you simply divide the number of tons carried by the number of miles they are carried, and you can get a fairly accurate estimate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But that is only one item in the cost of transporting these packages.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is only one item; but that item alone is more than the entire receipts for the package referred to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the other items, the maintenance of the system, the employment of the force of the Post Office Department would go on whether a package is carried from North Yakima to Wapato or not.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; to a certain extent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator, I understand, advocates the zone system; so I do not understand that the question here is between the zone system and a flat rate throughout the country.

Mr. BRISTOW. The question I am discussing now is the action of the Postmaster General in abolishing the first zone and thereby magnifying the discriminations incident to the zone system.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In the territory which the Senator has selected as an illustration we have been accustomed all our lives to discriminations in transportation rates so infinitely more unjust than those to which the Senator calls attention that we do not look upon the rates under the Parcel-Post System as discriminatory. The people of those two towns pay the same to the Government for the transportation of packages, whereas under the system of private transportation, which included a large portion of the merchandise which is now carried by parcel post, the discrimination was so great that we were compelled to pay more for a short haul than we paid for a long haul, and it was so great that towns themselves were destroyed. The very town of North Yakima itself owes its existence to the fact that the railroad company so discriminated against the original town of Yakima that it could not exist, and the people had to move away. Some of them carried their houses on wheels up to the place which the railroad by discrimination fixed as the place where the town ought to be. So that when we have a zone 150 miles wide or 300 miles wide—150 miles each side of the center—within which the people pay the same rate, instead of being discriminated against by being compelled to pay more for a short haul than for a long haul, we regard it as a great relief over the conditions previously existing.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator can not get into any controversy with me in regard to discriminations which the railroads have imposed on interior towns. I thoroughly agree with him; but that does not justify the Post Office Department in practicing exactly the same discrimination. I am not justifying the discriminations which have been made; I am complaining against a continuation of them under the order of the Postmaster General. What I am contending for is that we take out of this law the same character of discriminations concerning which the Senator from Washington has been complaining, to my knowledge, since he has been in Congress.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is not the same character of discrimination. Where different communities within the same zone pay the same rate and all are put upon the same basis and all receive the same service, in that sense there is no discrimination at all. You may calculate that the service costs less for one than it does for the other, but the rates are the same, and so all are upon an equal basis, so far as the people themselves are concerned, as to what they are required to pay. There is no discrimination in favor of one community as against another within that zone in that one is charged more than another; and so it is an entirely different class of discriminations from those which the Senator says I have been protesting against. I have been protesting against conditions where the people were not upon the same basis and not given the same service or the same rates.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, the Senator is defending a proposition here to charge a citizen of North Yakima the same amount for carrying a package of 50 pounds weight for him 12 miles that is charged a citizen of Spokane for carrying exactly the same package 236 miles, although in the first case it costs the Government but 8 cents, while in the last case it costs 66 cents. Let me ask the Senator this question: Suppose an express company should charge the same rate on packages from Spokane to North Yakima that it charged from North Yakima to Wapato, does the Senator think that would be a fair rate to charge the people of those communities for the service rendered?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, Mr. President, it would be a great deal fairer rate than the rates which we now pay.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am not asking whether or not the rates the express companies have been charging are fair; I am asking the Senator if he thinks that would be a fair system?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not defending, necessarily, Mr. President, the extension of the zones from 50 miles to 150 miles.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am glad the Senator from Washington and I are getting on common ground.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But I am insisting that the parcel-post system can not be a success if you are going to petrify the details of its administration and require an act of Congress, with all of the delays incident to an act of Congress, in order to change any one of them. On the other hand, I do not agree with the Senator as to the extension of the first zone being such a great abuse. I imagine that in some instances it is unreasonable and in other instances it is not. It depends somewhat upon the conditions of the country; but the same result follows from any zone system.

The Senator a moment ago asked me, if I favored the extension of the first zone from 50 miles to 150 miles, why not extend it throughout the country and make it a universal flat rate? Yet the Senator himself, when he was asked a moment ago if he was opposed to the extension of the first zone to 150 miles, why he did not oppose the creation of any zones at all, stated that it is a question of degree.

Mr. BRISTOW. Can the Senator think of any reason why the first zone should have been abolished?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The reason that I think of, taking a view of the whole country, is one which I suggested some time ago. Taking a view of the whole zone and all the people in it, it seems to me to be a very wise action on the part of the Postmaster General, in that it gives to additional millions of our people cheaper transportation so far as the parcel post is concerned; it has a tendency toward reducing the cost of transportation. If it proves inequitable, the zones can be readjusted; but the act itself whereby the rates were reduced over such a wide area of country and for the benefit of so many millions of people is an answer to the question of the Senator from Kansas as to the reason why the first zone should have been extended.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course it benefits the people of Spokane to get their merchandise carried out into the country 236 miles for less than it costs the Government to carry it and less than it pays the railroad for transporting it, and then make up that deficit by charging a citizen of North Yakima an exorbitant price for carrying his package 8 miles as a result of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is entirely mistaken about it. No such result as that follows from it at all. There are not very many packages that are carried from North Yakima to the town of Wapato. It may be true that the citizens of Spokane will get some benefit from the low rates on packages as far as North Yakima, but, of course, it is not so great a benefit as the Senator imagines, because Spokane is not the commercial center of the territory including North Yakima. The city of Seattle is closer to North Yakima than is the city of Spokane, and is a much larger commercial center.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, we will take Seattle.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the benefit which the Senator describes for Spokane is also had by the citizens of North Yakima in shipping their produce to the city of Spokane, and the same applies to all the people in the great Yakima Valley. They can ship their produce to either Seattle or Spokane, so that it is not a benefit, as the Senator would deduce here, which is applicable to any one center. North Yakima is the center of a zone just as much as is the city of Spokane. It can be said of them all as Proctor Knott said of Duluth, that the sky comes down the same distance in every direction around each one of them. The benefits which are derived from the extension of this zone do not discriminate in favor of any locality. They can be obtained by the citizens of every town in the country.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator think that the Government ought to carry packages from the vicinity of North Yakima to the city of Spokane at a loss?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that they ought to carry them at a loss, Mr. President, if that results from the establishment of a general system which, on the whole, is profitable.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator thinks the Government ought to carry packages from North Yakima to his community and from his community to North Yakima at a loss, I have nothing further to say; but I do not think so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will call attention, however, in that connection to the law which the Senator seeks to repeal, so far as carrying parcels at a loss is concerned.

If the Postmaster General shall find on experience that the classification of articles mailable, as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability, or any of them, are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of service greater than the revenue, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions (of mailability), or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue adequate to pay the cost thereof.

The Senator talks about carrying them for less than cost; but the very law which the Senator seeks to repeal lays down the rule that meets the objection which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] made to vesting this discretion in the Postmaster General, when he said that it was not subject to any rule—the rule laid down there is that the Postmaster General shall be allowed to fix such rates, weights, limits, and so forth, as will prove profitable to the Post Office Department and at the same time render due service to the people.

Mr. BRISTOW. And under that law the Postmaster General has established rates which, according to his own figures, resulted in a loss to the Government, when he was only authorized to make the change if it appeared that the rates which Congress had fixed were resulting in a loss. Now, I must hasten on, because I do not want to take too much time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Since the Senator has put that question to me, I would like to comment on the proposition that, following it logically to its conclusion, the Senator would make every single rate profitable.

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no. I must decline to be interrupted by questions that have been asked me here at least six times, and I think once or twice by the Senator himself, when I have already answered that no zone system can work with absolute equity. My protest is against the Postmaster General abolishing the first zone, and thereby greatly exaggerating the inherent difficulty in the zone system.

Mr. POINDEXTER. While it may exaggerate some of the difficulties, it also enlarges the benefits.

Mr. BRISTOW. It enlarges the benefits?

Mr. POINDEXTER. But I was not asking the Senator a question so much as answering the question which the Senator asked me. I will conclude with just this word: The Senator complains because under this enlargement of zones parcels are carried from Spokane to North Yakima, taking that as an illustration, at less than cost. The necessary inference is that the Senator objects to carrying parcels at less than cost, and yet he has just admitted that under the zone system which he advocates it is necessary, whatever zones are adopted, to do that in some instances.

Mr. BRISTOW. No such conclusion can be drawn from anything the Senator from Kansas has said, and the Senator from Washington knows it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to understand clearly what the Senator from Kansas means when he says that it was a mistake for the Postmaster General to abolish the first zone and have the same rate apply to all points within a radius of 150 miles. Does he mean to say that he has sufficient data to show that there is a loss on the gross? That is, the Senator says that within a certain radius there was considerable profit, but that by carrying it to the limit of 150 miles there will be a loss. Has the Senator figures there to show that the aggregate, the gross within that zone, entails a loss?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; there are no such figures available; but if there were, I should think it was a very grave injustice to make a zone so large that you would be carrying a large part of your traffic at a loss, and making up that loss by charging somebody else for it.

I have here illustrations from the State of Washington of rates from Seattle to North Yakima and Wapato, and from Seattle to North Yakima and Evans, showing exactly the same condition that exists, so far as Spokane and North Yakima are concerned. I ask permission to incorporate those in the RECORD without reading, so as not to take additional time of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Washington.

	Cost for 50 pounds, cents.
From Seattle (unit 5553) to—
North Yakima (unit 5355; miles, 164)	42.6+5=47.6
Wapato, Wash. (unit 5356; miles, 176)	45.8+5=50.8
North Yakima to Wapato, Northern Pacific R. R. (miles, 12)	3.1+5=8.1
From Seattle (unit 5553) to—
North Yakima (unit 5355; miles, 164)	42.6+5=47.6
Ellensburg (unit 5405; miles, 127)	33 +5=38
North Yakima to Ellensburg, Northern Pacific R. R. (miles, 37)	9.6+5=14.6

Mr. BRISTOW. Then I have an illustration here from the State of North Carolina, showing that from Raleigh to Weldon, a distance of 96 miles, within the first zone, a rate of 54 cents is charged, and the same rate from Weldon to Gumberry, showing the same discrimination as between the small towns and the smaller communities in the State of North Carolina that there is in the other States.

I also have illustrations from Norfolk to Newbern and to Vanceboro, showing that the department is charging the shippers from Norfolk 54 cents for carrying packages 171 miles to Newbern, and is charging the people of Newbern the same amount for carrying their packages 16 miles, showing that the discrimination which has been brought about as the result of the abolition of the first zone covers the entire country and inflicts an injustice upon the communities of every State.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Kansas has said several times that the effect of abolishing the first zone was greatly to exaggerate the inequalities that naturally inhere in the zone system. That, to me, seems quite obvious.

I wish to ask the Senator this question in connection with that statement: How do the differences between carrying the freight, say, 151 miles and carrying the same freight two or three or four or five hundred miles at the same rate compare in degree with the differences which occur between carrying the freight 30 or 40 miles and carrying the same freight up to 150 miles at the same rate?

In other words, is it not true that the difference within the 150-mile zone for carrying the very short distances as compared with carrying the entire distance of 150 miles would be very much greater than the difference between carrying 150 miles and carrying four or five hundred miles as we get beyond the 150-mile zone?

Mr. BRISTOW. That is true. An illustration which I will give a little later will show what tremendous losses the enlarging of the first zone has brought about.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So that really, if we are to have the zone system, the most important thing in it is to preserve the small zone?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Because it is there that these great inequalities exist?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly. The greatest mistake that has been made in the changes made by the Postmaster General has been, in my opinion, abolishing the first zone. There is not any defense for it.

Now, take the State of South Carolina. I have some illustrations here that I will put in the RECORD. The rate from Charleston to Chester, 194 miles——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator attributes these inequalities very largely to the abolition of the first zone. If the proviso reported by the committee is adopted, of course that abolition will continue.

Mr. BRISTOW. It will continue until we can correct it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Until Congress changes it?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The question I desire to ask the Senator is this: Should we not provide in this bill for the restoration of that zone? I do not hear from this side of the Chamber any denial of the proposition of the Senator that the abolition of the first zone has brought inequality and discrimination and has worked hardship. If that is so, why should we by law deliberately provide for the continuance of that condition, for a year at least, when we might possibly remedy it right now in this very bill?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina is a good one; but I should not want that statement to be interpreted as a concession on my part that there is any possibility of our permitting the abolition of the first zone to stand for a year. If the amendment which the committee proposes is adopted, immediate attention will be given by the committee to the recasting of this entire system.

Mr. SIMMONS. That will have to await the report of the commission, as I understand the Senator to say, which is now at work upon the question. We all know how dilatory these commissions sometimes are. That might delay the matter a considerable length of time; and then we do not always get bills through Congress as speedily as we should like.

Mr. BRISTOW. I agree to that, Mr. President.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. OWEN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield, and to whom?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield first to the Senator from Alabama and then to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In reply to the question of the Senator from North Carolina, I think I might properly say that the committee, in considering this amendment, discussed that very question; and we concluded that perhaps it might be held that it was new legislation; that it changed existing law; although that law was simply made by an order of the Post Office Department. We thought perhaps it was best to let existing conditions alone for the present, in order that the Post Office Department might have an opportunity to work it out, and to present to the Senate a little later some practical suggestions on the subject. Therefore we did not attempt to change the regulations of the Post Office Department, because we thought if we did the suggestion would be made that it was new legislation inasmuch as it changed existing law. We did not think this amendment could be so construed, because it does not change existing law. It simply provides that the existing law shall be maintained until Congress acts otherwise.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I only wanted to observe that I did not feel content to have the remark of the Senator from North Carolina, that there was no question made on this side as to the premises laid down by the Senator from Kansas, go without a challenge so far as I am concerned.

I do not concede the premises of the Senator from Kansas, I do not agree to his conclusions, and I do not agree to the parliamentary propriety of this whole procedure. We have now been debating here a day and a half over a matter which is obviously legislation; a violation of parliamentary law and a violation of our own rules of procedure in this body. When the Senator from Kansas has concluded, I shall submit some observations upon that matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. My remark to the Senator from Kansas was that I had heard no dispute on the proposition submitted by him. I have not been in the Chamber during the whole day; but when the Senator from Kansas was making his statement and giving his illustrations to show the discriminations which have been brought about by reason of the abolition of this zone, I was amazed, if it was not true, if the Senator from Kansas was wrong, that some member of the committee or some Member of the Senate who might be advised as to the facts did not controvert his statements.

I do not know whether the statements of the Senator are entirely warranted by the facts or not, but up to this time I have heard no one controvert them. I have heard no member of the committee controvert them. If they are true, as the Senator states them, then it would seem to me that a condition that is discriminatory has been brought about as the result. As I say, I am not myself familiar with the subject, and have ventured no opinion of my own with regard to the matter.

Mr. BRISTOW. So far as the facts and figures are concerned, no one will question them who has looked them up at all, because there is no doubt as to their accuracy, and they will not be denied by anyone. Whether it will be advisable for the Government to carry this merchandise for some people at less than cost and charge others an exorbitant price for it is a question of opinion. If the Senator from Oklahoma thinks that is just and desirable, of course he is entitled to his opinion. So far as this debate is concerned, which seems to have offended the Senator from Oklahoma, running on here for a day and a half without any authority, according to his opinion, of course I take it that the Senator thinks this amendment is not a limitation of the appropriation, and therefore is out of order. I disagree with him. That is a question which the Senate later on is to determine.

Mr. OWEN. I did not intend to say that the debate was out of order. I think the debate is entirely in order under the rules.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, take the State of South Carolina. From Charleston to Chester is 194 miles. That is within the first zone. The rate on 50 pounds is 54 cents. It costs the Government 55.4 cents to deliver the package from Charleston to Chester, which is 1.4 cents more than the postage receipts. Rockhill is 19 miles beyond Chester and 213 miles from Charleston.

The postage rate which the Government charges from Charleston to Rockhill is 54 cents for 50 pounds. The package is carried from Charleston, through Chester, to Rockhill. It costs the Government, according to the department's figures, 60.4 cents—6.4 cents more than the postage receipts. The Government will charge the citizen of Chester 54 cents for carrying a similar package 19 miles to Rockhill, though it costs the Government but 9.9 cents, or practically 10 cents. That is, it charges the citizen of Chester 54 cents for less than 10 cents' service, while it renders the citizen of Charleston 60.4 cents' worth of service and charges him but 54 cents. Now, the Senators from South Carolina may think that is just. I do not.

Now, take the rate from Atlanta to Spartanburg. A mail-order house in Atlanta, say, sends to Spartanburg, a distance of 192 miles, a package of 50 pounds for 54 cents. It costs 54.9 cents to carry it, or nine-tenths of a cent more than the postage receipts. Clifton is 8 miles beyond Spartanburg, 200 miles from Atlanta. It is within the first zone from Atlanta. The rate from Clifton to Atlanta is 54 cents. The cost is 56 cents; 2 cents more than the entire postal receipts. The Government will charge the citizen of Spartanburg 54 cents for carrying the package from Spartanburg to Clifton, 8 miles, though it costs the Government but 7 cents to do it, while it renders 56 cents' worth of service to the mail-order house at Atlanta for 54 cents. Now, the Senators from South Carolina may think that is just. I do not.

Take Texas: From Houston to Taylor, a distance of 165 miles, which is within the first zone, the charge is 54 cents on 50 pounds. It costs 47.9 cents. If a citizen of Taylor sends the same kind of a package to Elgin, 16 miles away, he has to pay the same rate of 54 cents, though he gets but 16 miles of service, which costs the Government but 9.2 cents. The Senator from Texas may think that is just to his constituents about Taylor, but I do not.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I am not prepared to pass judgment upon the merits of the system. I think the proposition before us is as to whether or not this is general legislation on an appropriation bill. It was for that reason that I raised the point of order, from a parliamentary standpoint.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course I do not think it is general legislation. I think it limits the appropriation. I will discuss that matter a little later; but the question has been thrown open so that the discussion as to the merits of the amendment is really on the point of order, and that is my reason for submitting these figures.

Now, I want to call attention to just two more sets of figures and then I will pass on, because I have wearied the Senate with these figures; but I wanted to illustrate the indefensible position which the department has taken in abolishing this zone.

Take the State of Colorado. Glenwood Springs is within the first zone from Denver; that is, it is within the radius of 150 miles. The distance by rail on one route from Denver to Glenwood Springs is 360 miles. The rate on 50 pounds from Denver to Glenwood Springs is 54 cents. According to the departmental figures, it costs the Government 98.6 cents to carry that package from Denver to Glenwood Springs, but the Government charges the citizen of Denver only 54 cents for carrying that package. Now, if the citizen of Glenwood Springs wants to send a package of exactly the same quality and weight to New Castle, 13 miles away, he will have to pay 54 cents. The citizen of Denver can ship that package through Glenwood Springs to New Castle, a distance of 373 miles, and the Government charges him 54 cents, though it costs the Government $1.02 to carry it; yet it charges exactly the same rate to the citizen of Denver that it charges the citizen of Glenwood Springs for carrying it 13 miles. Now, the Senators from Colorado may think that is just. I do not.

Another illustration to the same effect, from Denver to Glenwood Springs and New Castle by another railroad, which carries out the same principle, I ask to incorporate in my remarks without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Colorado.	Cost for 50 pounds, cents.
From Denver, by Colorado Midland Railroad (unit 3819) to—
Glenwood Springs (unit 4069; miles, 289)	75. 1 + 5 = 76. 5
New Castle (unit 4119; miles, 301)	78. 3 + 5 = 83. 3
Glenwood Springs to New Castle (miles, 12)	3. 1 + 5 = 8. 1

Mr. BRISTOW. Now we come to the last illustration I have, and that is in New Mexico. To me it is the most interesting one that has been presented, and I want to say that this New Mexican illustration is not the only one of this kind that can be found. There are many others, so I am advised, in the sparsely settled regions of the country. From Farmington to Gallup is 591 miles by rail. Gallup is within the first zone from Farmington. It costs the Government $1.59 to transport a 50-pound package from Farmington to Gallup, yet the postage rate on this package is 54 cents.

It may be a wise provision on the part of the Postmaster General to abolish the first zone, impose upon the revenues of the department such enormous losses, and confer such discriminating advantages upon one community as against another. Senators may want to vote to approve such an iniquitous exercise of authority which we conferred. Personally I do not intend to do it.

I want to call attention now to another matter, and then I will soon be through, unless I am interrupted, because I know I have already wearied the Senate. I should especially like to have the attention of Senators who have had experience in transportation matters to this proposition:

It is a well-known rule of transportation, which I think will be admitted, that the through rate should not be more than the sum of the locals. No system of transportation can be defended where the direct through rate is more than the sum of the locals; but under the system that has been submitted by Mr. Burleson, in many instances, the through rate is more than the sum of the locals.

To illustrate, you can send a 20-pound package from St. Louis to Kansas City—Kansas City being within the third zone from St. Louis—for 44 cents. A package going from Kansas City to Emporia, Kans., 100 miles away, comes within the first zone under Mr. Burleson's rule. The rate from Kansas City to Emporia is, therefore, 24 cents; 44 plus 24 is 68. That is, if that 20-pound parcel is sent to Kansas City, and remailed there to Emporia, the sum of the two rates is 68 cents. If it were sent directly over the same route from St. Louis to Emporia through Kansas City, without stopping at Kansas City, the rate would be 83 cents, Emporia being in the fourth zone from St. Louis.

That is repeated all over the United States. If you are sending these packages to Emporia or Newton or Hutchinson or Wichita, Kans., you can stop them at Kansas City or at Topeka and have them sent to the post office and delivered to the citizen anywhere within the delivery of that office; he can readdress them to the towns west—Hutchinson, Emporia, or any of the towns there—the Topeka post office goes to the citizen's place of business, gets the package, takes it down to the depot, reloads it on the train, and it goes on; and for every 20-pound package that is mailed by this process of stopping at intermediate points the shipper will save 15 cents in postage.

Is there any Senator here who thinks that is a wise system of rate making? Yet that is exactly the system which the Postmaster General has put in force under the authority which we gave him. A mail-order house at St. Louis can send a thousand packages to Hutchinson or Wichita, stop those thousand packages at any point from Kansas City as far west as Topeka, remail them there, impose all of that burden and expense on the department, and save $150 in postage by so doing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas how that condition arose. Was it by changing the law which we made?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is, if the law had been left as it passed Congress that condition could not have arisen?

Mr. BRISTOW. It would have been impossible.

No one is going to defend that. It can not be defended. It violates every principle of transportation. I should like to have any Senator show me what justification there is for conferring our authority—for it is our business to fix these zones and rates; that is the function of Congress—on a department and letting the department make these mistakes that not a single Member of Congress can defend.

It has been alleged that those of us who are criticizing the rates which Mr. Burleson put in force are "owned by the express companies." There have been some very interesting articles sent out from the Post Office Department—not by the Postmaster General, but by the publicity bureau there, I understand—which declare that the chairman of this committee and the Democratic members are reactionaries; and I think even the Senator from Arizona suggested that he was amazed that the Senator from Kansas should have joined any such association of Senators as those who were perpetrating this "outrage" upon the American people.

Let us see about this. Mr. LEWIS of Maryland, who has been quoted with approval here quite freely by Senators, admits in the speech which he made, and which was read yesterday by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], that the Government is losing money on these short hauls; that the express companies are letting the Government make the short hauls, where the rates are so low, and that the express companies are making the long hauls, where there is a profit. Therefore he says it is necessary for the Postmaster General to have authority to reduce the long-haul rates in order to enable the parcel-post service to compete with the express companies in those hauls where the express rates are lower than the parcel-post rates which the Postmaster General has put in.

Now, let us look at this a minute. Let us see how the Postmaster General can reduce the high rate which he has established here and meet the competition of the express companies successfully.

The express rate from New York to Grand Rapids on a 20-pound package is 62 cents. The parcel-post rate, under Mr. Burleson's order, is $1.22. The cost to the department for carrying that 20-pound package, according to Mr. Burleson's estimate, is $1.03; that is, our cost for carrying 20 pounds from New York to Grand Rapids is $1.03. The express company's charge to the public is 62 cents. The express company pays the railroad one-half of the total charge, or 31 cents.

Now, how can Mr. Burleson meet that competition? How can he reduce his rates, because in so doing he would be carrying the package, if he meets the express company rate, at far less than the cost to the Government?

I suppose if he is justified in abolishing the first zone and carrying packages, as he is, to some points in Colorado, New Mexico, Washington, Kansas, Texas, and other points for less than cost in the first zone as created by him, it will be argued that he would be justified in carrying the business for less than cost in the other zones, if it is necessary to meet the express rate.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator, Why not secure the same rate of transportation?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think we ought, but——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Kansas has given us the express rate in the fifth zone. Can the Senator give us the express rate in all the zones?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; I have them here.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have the Senator give them.

Mr. BRISTOW. I realize that the Senate is weary. I am perfectly willing to close for to-night, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] said that he wished an executive session. If he wants an executive session now, I will proceed to-morrow or I will close up this evening, just as the Senate may prefer. I can go on and give the rates clear through in the different zones and show just how it is that the order of the Postmaster General operates.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not ask the Senator from Kansas to give all the rates. I simply want to know the rates in the different zones on a 20-pound package.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have it here.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if he believes that the Post Office Department in making the estimate of the cost of transportation of the Parcel Post Service takes into consideration the fact that at the present time the Government is paying practically nothing for the transportation of its parcel-post matter; and when the time comes for the next weighing, when we can adjust the charges, how will it affect the cost of this transportation?

Mr. BRISTOW. That point has not been discussed, and I am glad the Senator called my attention to it. Of course, the Senate understands that the railways are paid by weight for carrying the mails, and the mails are weighed once every four years; that is, there is a quadrennial weighing of the mails. The country is divided into four zones, and there is a weighing in one of the zones every year. That weighing fixes the compensation of the railroads for four years.

Since the Parcel Post System was adopted of course there has been a reweighing in but one of the four zones, and in the other three zones there is no additional compensation for the railroads except the 5 per cent which was added in the last appropriation bill. That additional compensation has been given.

Now, as to whether that makes up for the additional weight or not, is a question which, of course, Congress will have to deal with. The railroads claim that it does not anything like compensate them for the additional tonnage that is imposed upon them, while the department has a contention in regard to the matter. However, I am free to say——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator whether, after the extensive investigation he has made, he is of the opinion that the rates paid the railroads are reasonable.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the rates paid on first-class mail probably would be all right, but since the Government has gone into the transportation business in transporting merchandise it is absolutely necessary, in my opinion, to classify the freight which the Government is sending over the railroads. It is preposterous, it seems to me, from the standpoint of practice, to carry cabbages and potatoes and baled hay and brick and articles of that character and pay the same that we pay for handling first-class mail, which is of great value. We must have a reorganization of the system of payment to the railways for handling the United States mail. It absolutely has to come.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So far as the cost of the parcel post is concerned, it would be materially affected if it should be ascertained that the rates paid the railroads are too high and that those rates should be reduced. I understand that the Senator is satisfied they are too high.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the rates paid are entirely too high for handling parcel-post matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So all this question of cost which the Senator has made the basis of his argument is subject to being affected by legislation as to the amount to be paid the railroad companies for the tonnage that they haul?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; but if Congress exercises any judgment, from my point of view it will first revise its expense before it revises its charge. If a man was conducting a business and had no more sense than to reduce the price of the article he was producing to less than it cost him before he reduced the cost, he would not be in business very long. The first thing the Post Office Department and the Senators who are attempting to defend these unwarranted orders should have done was to reduce the cost of transporting and the tonnage of merchandise; but they are filling the railroads full of heavy, bulky, coarse freight, and paying the railroads under the law which exists, if they pay them anything—and I am not saying but that the railroads can under the law force a payment—the same that they would pay for transporting the most valuable mail. It would be just as reasonable to charge the same rate for transporting a ton of coal as a ton of silk.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think I ought silently to accept the position the Senator places those in who are opposed to this amendment of the bill. We are not any more inconsistent in regard to the method of proceeding than he is. We can pass a law here readjusting the amount paid the railroads for the mails that they carry just as quickly as we can pass a law readjusting the rates. There is as much difficulty about the one as there is about the other.

My opinion is that it is a much more proper and reasonable subject of legislation to fix the amount that we pay the railroads for the merchandise that is carried by parcel post than it is to undertake to go by legislative act into the abstruse and complex proposition of making rates on that merchandise.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator, nevertheless, wants to continue the authority of the Postmaster General to reduce rates and increase amounts when no action has yet been taken reducing railway charges. I think that action should have been taken. I protested a year ago against the 5 per cent advance. I think it is indefensible for us to continue the system of payment for transportation of mails since we have gone into the freight-handling business.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We could build a great many railroads for the amount of money which would yield an annual return in interest of $56,000,000. It would amount, at Government rates, to one and three-quarter billion dollars. For that sum we could build, own, and operate a good many of them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Apropos of that very thought, I find in the Journal of Commerce of yesterday a showing that I think will not bring out many tears or much sympathy for the railroads. It reads thus:

Lackawanna Railroad Co.'s good showing—Year's net income $15,210,306, an increase of $1,792,218—Balance available for dividends $9,699,615, equal to 32.04 per cent on capital stock, as compared with 33.16 per cent earned in 1912—Small gain in express earnings.

That does not look as though they needed additional recompense.

Mr. BRISTOW. I hope the Senator will call that to the attention of the administration and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I shall be very happy to do so.

Mr. BRISTOW. I hope he will call it to their attention in connection with this effort to raise the rates. I understand that the railroad speculators on the stock exchange are waiting with breathless interest for the advance in railroad charges, in order that the stocks may be put up.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. They will get no sympathy or aid from me.

Mr. BRISTOW. I believe that the Senator from New Jersey is thoroughly sincere in that declaration.

Mr. President, I have some other references here that I would rather go over until to-morrow, because I think I can save time by stopping now and finishing in the morning.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask that the Post Office appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be done by consent.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 26, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 25, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Great Spirit, Father Soul, out of whose substance Thou didst evolve life and all things, Thou hast never forsaken Thy children, but art ever working in and through them to larger purposes and grander possibilities.

We would draw near to Thee, hear Thy voice, and feel Thy presence, that our thoughts may be enlarged and our hearts moved to greater service for Thee and our fellow men; that the coming of Thy kingdom may be hastened and Thy will be done after the similitude of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL STATEMENT.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes in which to make a personal statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for five minutes in which to make a personal statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, in an effort to boom industry or to print optimistic stories, the New York Herald has for the last week or ten days been conducting a steady campaign, quoting the low prices at which stocks can be bought and stating the opportunity for their advance. I only state this fact incidentally. In these stories has appeared a reference to a statement which I made on the floor of the House under date of January 16. I hold in my hand an article which appeared in the New York Herald on Thursday, February 19, telegraphed from Pittsfield, Mass., and headed "Industries booming in Massachusetts." The article begins as follows:

> The reported statement of Representative ALLEN T. TREADWAY, of Stockbridge, Republican, that business is very poor in western Massachusetts is at total variance with the facts.

Mr. Speaker, I have never as yet knowingly made a statement at total variance with the facts, and I object to being accused of having made such a statement on this floor. Therefore, in corroboration of the statement which I made on January 16, I wish to submit an extract from a letter. This story in the Herald refers to a certain business concern in my district as being very prosperous at the present time. I hold in my hand a letter from the manager of that concern, under date of February 23, in which he says:

> The New York Herald or any other combination that sees fit to do so can publish an optimistic story. The facts, however, remain that this change in tariff has already cost us many thousands of dollars. We ran short of business on the light-weight season, and it is our honest opinion that had business been normal and the tariff agitation eliminated that we would have been several thousand dollars better off than we are at the moment. We do not think it is at all fair for the New York Herald to criticize any statement that you might have made two months ago, as there is a great opportunity for change in business conditions in that length of time. We hope that conditions will materially improve over the present; on the other hand, we can see where there is a big opportunity for prospects not to be nearly as bright two months hence as they appear to-day.
> Would further state that in our opinion the reduction of tariff on raw materials does not in any way offset a like reduction on manufactured products, the character of which we make. To make myself clear, the price of raw materials has been so much advanced on the other side that we see very little difference in the cost of foreign wools as against previous seasons.

That is from one of the concerns which the Herald article refers to.

A letter from the manager of another concern quoted by the Herald says:

> Business during the last six months was essentially the same as it was the last six months of two years ago, and 33⅓ per cent less than the last six months of last year.
> The prospects for business during the next six months are not bright; in fact, we expect to see further decline in volume.
> In regard to local employment, we have laid off in the neighborhood of 1,000 men out of a total of 6,500, and a portion of our present force is working only four and one-half days a week.

There are statements from two of the three concerns referred to in the New York Herald article, which accuses me of making a statement at total variance with the facts.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the evidence of the parties concerned absolutely corroborates the statement which I made on the floor on January 16, and I therefore wish to set myself right, so far as any newspaper publication may be concerned, as to any statement that I have made here. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Further, the remarks that I made in January were the results of compilations from a large number of letters and were truthful statistics. I always respect a fair and honest difference of opinion, but I can not allow to go unanswered a newspaper item that I would so far fail to respect the dignity of this House as to make a statement "at total variance with the facts." [Applause.]

RESIGNATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

CITY OF BOSTON, OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
February 24, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND: I herewith tender my resignation as a Member of the Sixty-third Congress, the same to be effective from February 4 of the current year.

With every good wish, I beg to remain,
Yours, sincerely,

JAMES M. CURLEY.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HENRY VOLLMER, recently elected a Member of the House from the second Iowa district, is ready to take the oath. His credentials are in the Clerk's office. If there be no objection, he will be sworn in.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have a statement——

The SPEAKER. The Chair states that his credentials are in the Clerk's office, and the Chair will have them sent for and read if the gentleman desires.

Mr. MANN. I would not object anyway, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VOLLMER appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Committee on Education was called.

ADULT ILLITERACY.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 2494) to investigate illiteracy among the adult population of the United States and the means of eliminating or reducing the same, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 2494) to investigate illiteracy among the adult population of the United States and the means of eliminating or reducing the same. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Education shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, investigate illiteracy among the adult population of the United States, and the means by which this illiteracy may be eliminated or reduced, and report to Congress, through the Secretary of the Interior, the results of his investigations; and he is hereby authorized, upon request or invitation, to advise and cooperate with school officials, teachers, and others in devising and putting into operation such plans as will give to illiterate men and women and to those of meager education an opportunity to learn to read and write and to supplement and extend their education.
> SEC. 2. That in carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use, at his discretion, for the employment of field and clerical services and for the payment of necessary expenses such sums as may be appropriated for this purpose from time to time by Congress or contributed by individuals and societies; and he is hereby authorized to accept donations for this purpose from disinterested individuals and societies, all such donations and the disbursements thereof to be reported by him in his annual report to Congress.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this bill has had most careful consideration by the Committee on Education. After having that consideration it was favorably reported by the unanimous vote of the committee. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], who is a member of the committee.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. I was selected by the committee to make a report upon it, and hence the chairman of the committee has yielded to me.

The power granted under the statute to the Bureau of Education and to its commissioner is exceedingly limited, being to collect statistics and facts showing the condition and progress of education in the several States and Territories, and to diffuse such information.

It will be noticed from the reading of this bill that some additional power is conferred on the bureau and on the commissioner. The commissioner is authorized to advise and cooperate with school officials, teachers, and others in an organized and concerted effort to reduce, and as nearly as possible to eradicate, adult illiteracy in the United States.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MILLER. Is it intended by this bill, after the facts in relation to illiteracy are obtained, to provide a means for relieving that condition; in other words, for decreasing illiteracy in the United States?

Mr. TOWNER. As the gentleman is aware, the Bureau of Education can hardly do more than is contemplated by the language of this bill. It is for the purpose of correlating this work, if possible. There is already a movement started, and a very general effort about to be made for the purpose of eradicating adult illiteracy in the United States. As the gentleman is aware, the proportion of adult illiteracy in the United States is quite large, about 8 per cent, or much larger than in most of the other civilized nations of the world. France made a concerted effort of this kind under the direction of the national authorities, and in a very few years almost wiped out adult illiteracy in that country.

Mr. MILLER. That was the occasion of my inquiry. Of course, illiteracy can not be wiped out by legislation.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; it is not expected to do that. This is only to enable the Department of Education to cooperate, and in a measure to take charge of and direct this work.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman made the statement that France had reduced illiteracy from 45 per cent to 5 per cent. Will he tell us how long it took to accomplish that desirable end?

Mr. TOWNER. I can not.

Mr. GOULDEN. Has the gentleman any idea?

Mr. TOWNER. I think it was extended over a period of some years. However, the work was so remarkably effective that the result ought to be encouraging to us in this country.

Mr. GOULDEN. I agree with the gentleman that the bill is in the right direction if it can be put into successful execution.

Mr. TOWNER. In Kentucky an effort was made, which is referred to in the report, which is nothing less than marvelous in its effect. In one county, under the leadership of Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, the percentage of adult illiteracy in three years' time was reduced from 13 per cent to almost nothing. In a recent letter to the Commissioner of Education she says that there are only six adults unable to read and write in that county.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does that include the colored population?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. With pleasure.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain what the idea in mind is in the language "in devising and putting into operation such plans as will give to illiterate men and women," and so forth, "an opportunity to learn to read and write and supplement their education"?

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman think the language is unwarranted?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am trying to ascertain from the gentleman what is intended to be covered in that scope of undertaking.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly nothing more than I have already said; nothing more than would be proper for the Commissioner of Education to do; nothing more than might be done by advice and assistance in sending field workers into the field, by consultation and furnishing literature and matters of that sort.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is a distinguished lawyer, and I ask whether it would not permit the Commissioner of Education to send into the various districts field workers and teachers to assist in relieving the illiteracy of the States?

Mr. TOWNER. I think it would enable him, and the effect would be, to send field workers, not in the sense we understand it, but lecturers and those who might assist the local authorities in taking up and formulating the work.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language is broad enough to send teachers into the districts.

Mr. TOWNER. I think that is true, so far as the language is concerned, but I think the gentleman will agree with me that nothing of that kind would be contemplated. If the gentleman thinks that the language ought to be changed I am quite sure the committee would have no objection to changing it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am merely seeking to ascertain the committee's intent in using the phraseology, whether or not the Commissioner of Education should have authority to send teachers into the respective States.

Mr. TOWNER. I think I am justified in saying that the committee did not so intend.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman stated that France had reduced the illiteracy among adults from 45 per cent to 5 per cent. I would like to know how this was accomplished, if the gentleman has the information.

Mr. TOWNER. I can not give the gentleman the details, but it was done by cooperative methods, in which the National Government bore a much larger part than we could be expected to do here. However, it was done by cooperation of the General Government with the local authorities, by school-teachers, and also by private assistance in the way of contributions to the fund.

Mr. LAZARO. I asked the question for information. I am a friend of the measure.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, let me say, further, in regard to the objection that was raised the other day by the gentleman from Indiana, who, I believe, is not present, that this bill would perhaps mean the expenditure of a large amount from the Treasury in carrying it out. I will say now what I could not say then, that the Commissioner of Education is asking, through the Appropriations Committee, for an appropriation of $10,000 to assist in the performance of this work. However, in that connection let me say, Mr. Chairman, that the Commissioner of Education will, if he is given authority to do this, carry on this work as far as possible, with or without the appropriation. He will be able to do a considerable amount contemplated by the bill in assisting in the work and advising, even without the appropriation; but, of course, it can be made much more effective with an appropriation.

It should be understood by Members that this bill does not carry an appropriation, as the work can be carried on even if an appropriation should not be secured.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. MILLER. I have no special criticism of an appropriation being made for the purpose of this act, although personally it seems to me that if there is a situation that should be left to the communities and States to correct this should be one of them. It may be conditions require the Government's attention, but it seems to me that if anything like a comprehensive scheme is to be promulgated to relieve illiteracy in the United States $10,000 would not be a marker, and that it would be useless to appropriate such a small sum.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, it is not contemplated that the Government shall enter extensively on this work. All of us understand that the work must be accomplished almost entirely by the States and local authorities. It is only for the purpose of stimulating this work, organizing it and assisting in it, that this bill gives some additional authority to the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. MILLER. I have been trying for two or three years to find out just what the Commissioner of Education could do and could not do, and I am frank to say I do not know and have not found anyone who does know. I am trying to find out what additional civic authority this bill is going to give him. I think he ought to have some additional authority, but does this give it?

Mr. TOWNER. He can advise and cooperate with the school officials.

Mr. MILLER. Can not he do that now?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I think not.

Mr. MILLER. If they should write to the Commissioner of Education for advice, would not he have the authority to give it to them?

Mr. TOWNER. I think that is true. But he does not feel authorized under his authority as given him by law to affirmatively take action in the assistance of this work.

Mr. MILLER. "Upon request or invitation." Does not the gentleman think it might be advisable to allow him some initiative in the matter?

Mr. TOWNER. That is what this bill attempts to do.

Mr. MILLER. It says:

He is hereby authorized upon request or invitation to advise and cooperate—

And so forth.

Does not that limit him to sitting in his office and waiting until some one asks him a question?

Mr. TOWNER. That language was put in the bill, as the gentleman will understand, to indicate that it was not the purpose and the intention of the department to enter the broad scheme of trying to effect this education of adults by the United States. It is merely for the purpose of cooperation with the local and State authorities in that way. There is a further authority given, by which this department is authorized to receive sums that may be given to it—contributions from associations and societies—and that language is put in there for the reason that the Commissioner of Education has been proffered donations by associations and individuals for the purpose of carrying on this work. It was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois the other day that there might be an objection to the language of the bill, if it should authorize the commissioner to solicit funds or to do anything in that way which might be considered as making the General Government a begging institution for the purpose of securing money to carry on this work. I will say in reply to that that I am authorized to say by the commissioner that nothing of that sort is contemplated. His position will be only that of accepting these funds if they shall be donated, and nothing more.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman inform the committee whether these proffers have taken the form of actual donations, and what the amount has been?

Mr. TOWNER. I am unable to say. However, that is a matter that I regard as of so little consequence that if it should be deemed objectionable by the committee I would have no objection to its being eliminated.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] be good enough to explain in my time why this investigation of illiteracy is to be confined solely to the adult population?

Mr. TOWNER. It is a distinctive movement of that sort, because our public-school facilities are expected to take care of the children of school age. This is to meet the proposition that we have no organized and adequate means for the education of adult population of the United States.

Mr. MOORE. The report refers to an experimental work conducted in Rowan County, Ky.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Solely amongst adults. It is the idea of the committee that this work should proceed along those lines throughout the country or in certain specified districts?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the matter is very interesting if considered in all its aspects. I did not desire to take up the time of the committee to do that. Of course the conditions in Kentucky are such as pertain only to a rural community. There are some very interesting experiments being carried on of cooperative work. We have before the committee the testimony of some gentlemen who have been operating in connection with the employers of labor in cities. The employers of labor in cities are giving in some instances time to their employees, allowing them to have pay for the time, to attend a school for the purpose of acquiring at least enough education to read and write.

Mr. MOORE. How would this movement affect those States where compulsory education may not be enforced?

Mr. TOWNER. I think it would have probably no effect except a stimulating effect generally on educational work.

Mr. MOORE. In such instances would not the children go without that consideration the adults would receive in this movement?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I think not. I think certainly it would have no such effect. The probabilities are that any educational work along any lines has a stimulating effect on all educational work in all lines.

Mr. MOORE. In confining the work to adults, was it the assumption of the committee that the children were being taken care of in the public schools?

Mr. TOWNER. It was.

Mr. MOORE. Of course the gentleman is aware that there is a variety of schools for the education of children, some public schools, some parochial, and some other schools that are sectarian, and that we might not include all children in the advantages that are therein contemplated.

Mr. TOWNER. This bill contemplates only the adult population of the country—that is, the illiterates. Of course it might include those of school age to some extent, because all adult illiterates include those who are of 10 years of age and over, and many of them would be within school-age limits, but I do not think there will be any effort made under the provisions of this bill to do anything except to stimulate the work along the lines of the education of adult illiterates.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman is familiar with the discussion had on this floor several weeks ago with regard to limiting the immigration into this country. The question of illiteracy was very freely discussed at that time, and it was charged that the foreigner brought with him illiteracy, and that therefore he ought to be barred, that he was in large proportion illiterate, and that his illiteracy affected the welfare of the United States.

This report, in which, I presume, the gentleman participated and perhaps prepared, indicates that the Federal census of 1910 shows that there were in the United States 5,516,163 persons 10 years of age and over who were unable to read or write, and that this was nearly 8 per cent of the population. Now, in view of what has taken place in regard to immigration this would be a very startling indictment against the educational facilities of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MOORE. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will read further he will find that that 5,516,000 included 1,300,000 colored persons who could not have immigrated to this country, and there were but 3,184,000 illiterate white persons 10 years of age and over unable to read, or only 5 per cent of the population. And if the gentleman will read still further down the report he will find there were but 2,273,000 of illiterate males of 21 years of age and over, even including colored people, so there can not be so many illiterate foreigners in this country, as the gentleman's first supposition would lead one to suppose.

Mr. MOORE. Quoting from the report—and I am very glad to have the authority of so distinguished a committee of the House on the subject—we find:

> That a country such as the United States should have such a proportion of her population wholly illiterate is a disgrace to the Nation.

Now, that is a very strong statement, and it is a very strong indictment against the educational facilities of the United States, if true; and it is not so much a reflection upon the men who come into the United States to better their condition here. I presume the gentleman stands by the statements in this report.

Mr. TOWNER. I think there is no question they are true. They are taken from the census report.

Mr. MOORE. Then, may I ask the gentleman whether this scheme committed to the Commissioner of Education might not be made to apply to the children of the United States as well as the adult population? I ask the question because on perusing the report of the committee, on page 3, taking Rowan County (Ky.) cases as an example, there appears that there were a great many native Americans, descendants of American families, who, up to 70 and 80 years of age, were unable to read and write. If such a condition prevails in any section of the country—and doubtless it prevails in many sections of the country—the question naturally arises, Why have such men and women lived here in ignorance so long, and why should they not have been taught in childhood to read and write?

Mr. TOWNER. Of course I could not answer the gentleman's question, and I think the question is impossible of being answered satisfactorily. That means really an indictment of the common-school system of the United States, at least to a certain extent. It is really a reflection upon the educational facilities of this country that so large a proportion of adult illiteracy exists, but now we are contemplating that the proportion of adult illiteracy is too great for this country to maintain, either with safety, honor, or dignity to itself. I think the gentleman will agree with the committee that if effort is made, if it shall not result in anything except that of stimulating activity, that such effort ought to be fostered and encouraged as far as we are able to do so.

Mr. MOORE. This bill does not contemplate doing anything more than to give the Commissioner of Education the right to proceed to teach adults to read and write, with a view to supplementing and extending their education. There is nothing more than a scholastic training contemplated here; no vocational training?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this measure, because the conditions set out in the report indicate a lamentable state of affairs regarding illiteracy in the United States. During the discussion of the immigration bill a few weeks ago it was asserted that the real objection to the immigrant was due to the fact that some of them could not read and write. It was also asserted time and time again in that discussion that the immigrant was less subject to the charge of illiteracy, in proportion, than were certain native Americans. That is to say that while we have a common-school system and while we profess to take care of our children and to educate them in the way they should go, to properly equip them for the affairs of life, we had remaining in our country—amongst the natives, amongst those who were descendants of natives from almost the beginning of time—hundreds, thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands of children and of men and women long past the age of maturity who were still unable to read and write. Of course, this was a reflection upon the institutions of our country.

This report, however, indicates that there are as many as 5,516,163 persons officially ascertained by the census of 1910 to be unable to read and write, and these more than 5,000,000 people are upward of 10 years of age.

Now, the only regret I have is that such an unfortunate condition of affairs should exist in this land of the free, where we boast of our educational facilities. I am not going to point out the sections of country where this condition exists. It may exist in some proportion in all sections, and it is to be greatly regretted that it does. If it does exist, whatever we may do to remedy it ought to be done by Congress.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will recall, I am sure, that it was shown, when the immigration bill was under discussion, that the percentage of illiteracy was much less in the cities that received a large influx of immigrants than it was in many other sections of the country that received little or none of it.

Mr. MOORE. That is true.

Mr. GOULDEN. Showing, I think, Mr. Chairman, that either our school system was better or that the assertion that large numbers of ignorant immigrants come in here is not founded upon fact.

Mr. MOORE. That is undoubtedly true, and enables me to give point to what I desire to say before taking my seat, which is that the foreign-born child who comes into the United States, particularly of the Italian race or of the Jewish faith, comes under a certain degree of pressure which has not characterized the American child, certainly not the free-born American child of the mountains or of the country, far removed from the attractions of the city. The Jewish child, for instance, who comes into this country, comes here as the result, very largely, of a feeling of oppression. It is very much the same with the Italian child. They both come in a spirit of hopefulness and expectation. They come with limited facilities, and certainly with limited education; but the moment they arrive—at least it has been so in the vicinity that I represent in Congress—the moment they arrive they determine that they will improve their God-given opportunities in conformity with the laws of the United States. And thus they begin a course of study, taking advantage of the public schools and the other schools that are provided either from the public purse or by private philanthropy. They seek at once to learn, and they stick tenaciously to their studies, because the opportunities were denied them in the old country.

Take the unfortunate Jew who comes out of Russia or Roumania, where no legal rights of any consequence are accorded to him at all, where he can obtain an education only under very great difficulty and hardship. As soon as he enters this country with its boasted liberty, with its free-school institutions, he begins to burn the midnight oil. He seizes the opportunities which unfortunately, perhaps, the 5,000,000 of illiterates in the United States have failed to attain, and taking advantage of every chance to improve his condition he makes an excellent scholar. He has no time to lose.

I will not point out any particular college or university, but I think it is easily possible to call them by name, where a very large percentage, and in some instances, perhaps, the greater percentage, of those who matriculate are of foreign birth or immediate extraction. The Jewish student is one of very great aptitude in the universities in the East.

Mr. COOPER. In that connection I would like to ask the gentleman if he has ever read that wonderful book by that young Jewish woman, Mary Antin, entitled "The Promised Land"?

Mr. MOORE. I have read it.

Mr. COOPER. Everybody in the House ought to read it.

Mr. MOORE. And it clearly illustrates the ambition and hope of the downtrodden the moment they arrive in the United States. Why, in contests of educational supremacy in the public schools and in the universities cases can be cited without number where the boy or the girl coming in from Russia or Roumania has but one thought in mind, and that to worthily succeed, to win, to achieve. Now, we proposed recently to bar such as these from the United States.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MOORE. I will.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman, coming from the great and prosperous city of Philadelphia, is, of course, aware of the fact that evening schools are maintained in all the large cities. That is particularly true of the city of New York, which I have the honor to represent here in part. We furnish the evening schools, and those schools are patronized almost entirely by foreigners whose ages range from 16 to 60. I have visited them frequently as an official, and have found that 95 per cent of the pupils were composed of foreign immigrants desirous of learning how to read and write. In fact, that is one of the purposes of these evening schools, and they are furnished in as large a number as is found necessary, and the immigrants are thereby securing an education to fit themselves for citizenship; and I think this illiteracy test would not apply nearly so closely to the foreigners, to those who have immigrated here from all parts of Europe, as to those of native birth. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, like myself, opposed the literacy test in the recent immigration bill principally for this reason, believing it unnecessary and not to the best interests of the country.

Mr. MOORE. It surely would not; and the conditions which the gentleman has described as prevailing in his district are very similar to those that prevail in my district and in the districts of other gentlemen who represent the same city.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. A recent report of an investigation of the steel industry showed that the workingmen there were working about 12 hours a day about 365 days in the year, and that a large percentage of those were foreigners. Does the gentleman think they had an opportunity to take advantage of the schools that the gentleman is so ably advocating?

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will take the testimony of Mr. Morrison, the secretary of the American Federation of Labor, as he delivered it before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and as I quoted it in a speech which is to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he will find that the larger percentage of the men who are organized in the mining industry are of foreign birth, and that there is absolutely no complaint with regard to their noneducation or their foreign birth so long as they are organized and in the union.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I was not speaking of the organized; I was speaking of the unorganized workingmen in the steel industry. The Steel Trust does not permit them to organize.

Mr. MOORE. If they are organized they are the best on earth; but if they are unorganized they are different.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If they are working 12 hours a day, 365 days in the year, what opportunity have they to become educated?

Mr. MOORE. I was just explaining to the gentleman, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] also just stated that they were burning the midnight oil in order to acquire an education. They do it with very great credit to themselves.

I would like to say to the gentleman, quoting his distinguished friend the secretary of the American Federation of Labor, that he comments on the wages paid to the foreign born. If the gentleman will take the testimony of Mr. Morrison, the secretary of the American Federation of Labor, in regard to the garment workers of the United States, he will find that there are about 200,000 who are organized and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and that the greatest proportion of them are foreign born. On the east side in New York they obtain wages equal to $25 a week, and more or less than that, but usually round about that figure, and that when organized they are all right.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Our opinions are not in conflict in regard to organized labor. Organized labor has favored the restriction of immigration. I am against the admission of those foreigners who are brought in here to keep down the price of wages here. There is no doubt but that organized labor has done much to educate the workingman.

Mr. MOORE. In the mines, when unorganized, they get $1.87, as against $2.56 when organized. Hence the $1.87 man is not popular in the union. The foreigner who gets $2.56 in the mines is just as popular in the mines as any other man. I do not contend with the gentleman, nor with Mr. Morrison, nor with the American Federation of Labor for taking this viewpoint. It is their business to organize the workers. It is their mission to bring the workers together and draw them into the union. But I say they do not find fault with the worker at all, whether native born or foreign born, if he operates at the wage scale fixed by the union.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. A moment ago, in a colloquy with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], the gentleman used the word "education" as synonymous with the word "literacy." Does not the gentleman think there are many kinds of education that have nothing to do with literacy—skillful handiwork of all kinds that is not dependent at all on literacy?

Mr. MOORE. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. In answer to my inquiry, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] indicated that this bill did not contemplate anything more than scholastic education. It had no reference to vocational education or the use of the hands in the trades. I would very much like to see vocational education provided for in this bill. Here is an old woman down in Rowan County, Ky., 70 years of age, who after eight nights' study was able to write a legible letter in consequence of the educational work conducted there. She was able to write letters. That was an excellent thing, but I do not know whether she lived on to be 70 years of age without operating at some time or another in the useful art of kneading bread; possibly she did some baking for some one in her family, which was an excellent thing to do.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Education will certainly be glad to assist, and are endeavoring to assist in every possible way they can, in the work of vocational education throughout the United States. We have already, as the gentleman knows, passed a bill to provide a commission for the purpose of taking that very matter up and reporting, if possible, and as soon as possible, a plan whereby national aid can be granted in vocational education. The gentleman may rest assured that the committee will favor that by every possible method.

Mr. MOORE. As I understand, the difficulty in the particular measure now before us is that it does not carry an appropriation that will make effective the fine work that is put in the hands of the Commissioner of Education, but permits him only to receive contributions from people kindly disposed toward education, which he may utilize at his discretion.

Mr. TOWNER. The commissioner has asked for an appropriation of $10,000, not in this bill but in a bill for the support of the bureau.

Mr. MOORE. That question was raised when the other bill was before the House sometime ago, and I understood it was explained then that no appropriation was to be carried in the bill. Subsequently I read in the newspapers that the commissioner intended to ask for some money, and that he has since asked for it in another bill.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOORE. Now, in regard to these people who come in from foreign shores, and whom this House decided a few weeks ago to bar forever from the United States because they could not read, and with reference to whom these particular illustrations have been cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN], I want to say that there is no more commendable thing than the efforts of these Jewish boys and girls in the ghetto, or in the vicinity of it, after the work of the day is done, sitting down with their books and digging into the tomes for information which the American youth does not sometimes have time to seek for.

They want to know about the things they have heard of. They want to be able to read and to master the situation. They want to understand our laws. And so, answering again the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], I say they can be found in my district steadily and earnestly burning the midnight oil to acquire information and knowledge, with the result that in competition with our own native youth they go forward into the universities and colleges and prove after all to be useful in occupations and amongst the best of our scholars. I question whether in the course of my whole life I have ever seen a Jewish boy or girl or man or woman asking for alms upon the street. Yet I have seen people of other nationalities, and a little more frequently during the last two or three months, perhaps, than at any time previous during the last 10 years. The poor of the Jewish faith do not beg. They seem to know how to acquire a livelihood by their own labor, knowledge, and skill without asking favors of anyone else. To be sure, there are special organizations looking out for whatever may be required in the way of charity amongst the unfortunate, the poor, and the distressed, but as for begging on the street, that is practically unknown among the Jewish race.

Again, with these foreign-born boys and girls seeking information as they do, breaking out through the long centuries of ignorance and oppression endured by their forefathers in foreign lands, we have contrasted more than 5,000,000 men and women, largely native born to the United States, who can not read or write. I would again refer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], who speaks so strongly in this House in the interest of organized labor, to the testimony of the secretary of the American Federation, Mr. Morrison, in reference to the question of organization in certain of our States where much of the native illiteracy is supposed to prevail. Organization is not very effective there. Organization of labor is not very effective in the mountains or in the South. Only where there are great industries, only where there is great activity, is there an opportunity for the organizer of labor to succeed. I make no reference to any special State, but recently an investigator of the Marine Hospital Service returned from an inquiry in the mountain district not far south of us, and it developed as a result of a conversation with him—and I assume that his report will soon be made public—that in that region, where the old Anglo-Saxon race has held its own for two centuries, where the people still use the expressions of the Shakespearean era, there is perhaps more poverty and illiteracy than is to be found in any one of the congested centers of the country where the foreign population is predominant. I found in conversation with this official of the Government that that disease for which we turn back hundreds and almost thousands of immigrants yearly, trachoma, an infectious disease of the eye, is prevalent amongst the native whites, and that it was probably due to a lack of personal care as well as of education upon the subject. Such a condition does not prevail even among the Hindu race, which, if the testimony of one of its leading representatives before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be true, at least has the merit of requiring a cleansing of the body every morning. Now, it is a reflection upon the native American, it is a reflection upon our boasted institutions of which we are all so proud, it is a reflection upon any State that tolerates it, that there should be even a proportion to the forty-eighth degree of 5,300,000 illiterate adult persons largely native to the United States. What have we been doing to help our own people since the days of George Washington, whose birthday we celebrated so gloriously here at the beginning of this week? What have we been doing to improve conditions in the region inhabited almost entirely by the Anglo-Saxon in the United States?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say that it was a proper manifestation of our reverence for the Father of his Country that on his birthday, without in any way referring to the fact that it was his birthday, we spent four and one-half hours in this Chamber on a local paving bill? Is that what the gentleman considers a proper glorification of the birthday of the Father of his Country.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman forces me from the sublime to the ridiculous when he puts the education of the 90,000,000 people of our country in juxtaposition with the question of paving sidewalks in the city of Washington. It is true that in this House we devote a great deal of time to the small things, at a tremendous cost to the people of the United States, while we devote very little time to questions of vital interest, of which this is an example—the education and uplift, the hope and encouragement of more than 5,300,000 men and women whom we now discover are unable to read and write.

I do not propose to pursue this question further, except to say to those who have been standing here like adamant in defense of our Anglo-Saxon institutions, who have been insisting that we should bar from our shores the "scum" of the earth and that we should wield the sword of the Goddess of Liberty to protect ourselves against the outcast, should give some little consideration to these unfortunates of our own native-born population, whom we now learn have been denied the beneficent influences of our own educational institutions. We should help them if we can.

Mr. Chairman, let us take up this question of the education of the illiterate people of the United States. Let us consider the welfare of the five and one-half million people whom we have thus far ignored. And while we are doing that, in the spirit of the uplift, in the spirit of Him who was Master of us all, let us also not forget that if the unfortunate coming from a foreign land who seeks an opportunity here is willing to avail himself of the facilities afforded by this country, and will make himself a useful citizen, he is not to be despised, but shall receive at least some consideration at our hands. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TOWNSEND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. BRADY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4096. An act to amend the act authorizing the National Academy of Sciences to receive and hold trust funds for the promotion of science, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 110. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in an International Commission of Phytopathology;

S. 3439. An act appropriating funds for the purpose of the investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera and dourine; and

S. 1294. An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia.

ADULT ILLITERACY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL].

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, the authority of the Commissioner of Education is limited largely to advice and suggestion. In my opinion, this bill will greatly help the condition of illiteracy in this country, for two reasons. In the first place, the very moment that you concentrate the attention of the people of the country upon the fact that we have 5,000,000 illiterates, and create discussion and investigation, you will improve the conditions. If the bill does nothing more than to concentrate the attention of the country upon this situation, it will be helpful. It does not authorize the Commissioner of Education to take any initiative, to interfere in any way with any of the States; it merely calls upon him for suggestions when invited.

In the second place, the bill will be helpful if it will give any new opportunity or new encouragement to the Commissioner of Education. I think the Members of this House know that within the past few years some pamphlets have been published by the Commissioner of Education that would be valuable to all the people of the country sections; and yet when you write for several copies of this pamphlet for constituents you are sent the enormous number of 12 for the whole district.

It is not the fault of the commissioner or the Department of the Interior; it is the lack of support. If this bill will create some new responsibility which will result in giving the Commissioner of Education more money with which to perform the functions of his important office, it will have rendered great service to the country. I believe those who have thought about this matter will agree that this Congress should either equip the Commissioner of Education with the means of doing his work or the Bureau of Education should be abolished. The commissioner is handicapped and helpless in his efforts to uplift the educational conditions of the country, for which there is now unusual demand.

Another thing, in this report you will note certain States are mentioned which have the highest percentage of illiteracy, and my own State is one. It will be helpful to the whole country if this investigation by the commissioner will bring the facts to the attention of the country as to what nationality, what race, occupies certain conditions with reference to illiteracy. In other words, I think it would be valuable to the country and fair to the States if the investigation should bring the attention of Congress to the relative rank of illiteracy among the different races. It would be proper. The white people of my State rank with any other in the country in intelligence and education; and yet, by the presence of a large negro population, we are rated very low in the scale of literacy or high in illiteracy. This is not a fair or correct record.

I will say that in my opinion there has been no bill before this House for a long time that will mean more for the general uplift of the people that have been described by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Another thing, it would be a mighty good thing for the whole country to have the facts presented by the gentleman who speaks of burning the midnight oil in his district. The commissioner would have an opportunity to go and find this information and spread it over the land and create a spirit of emulation and fire the hearts of those who are now discouraged. I hope the bill will pass without an opposing vote. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there are two new and startling propositions in this bill, and I think it is proper to call the attention of the House to what they are. There has been very little reference to these propositions as yet. In the first place, the bill provides—that the Commissioner of Education shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, investigate illiteracy among the adult population of the United States, and the means by which this illiteracy may be eliminated or reduced, and report to Congress.

That is a matter of making recommendations, which, I take it, the commissioner already has the authority to do, unless it contemplates doing the census work over again, which I assume it does not. Then the bill goes on:

And he is hereby authorized, upon request or invitation, to advise and cooperate with school officials, teachers, and others in devising and putting into operation such plans as will give to illiterate men and women and to those of meager education an opportunity to learn to read and write and to supplement and extend their education.

There can be but one meaning to this proposition, and that is that the Government shall aid in the school work of teaching illiterates not only how to read and write, but otherwise "supplement and extend their education." It has always been the policy of the people of this country that the common-school education should be secured through the States, not through the National Government. What can be the possible purpose of providing in the bill that the Commissioner of Education shall put into operation such plans as will give the illiterate men and women an opportunity to secure an education? Even if it went no further, if the bill stopped there, it would be an authorization of a national appropriation for the purpose of helping to maintain schools for the benefit of the illiterate adults. It would be taking the place of the common school. We have passed a bill for the practical education of farmers; we are doing the work. We may pass a bill to aid in vocational education, but I question the desirability of Congress proceeding, through the aid of the National Treasury, in providing the people with common-school education. If we start upon that, saying we will maintain schools or help to maintain schools, common schools, for the illiterate adult, we can not stop there. We will have to proceed further along the same lines. While my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] rather had the notion, as I should judge, that that was not the intention of the bill, it is what that provision of the bill says, and it goes much further in the next section, because it provides not only for appropriation but for starting out the Commissioner of Education upon a big tour of getting the money for this purpose.

Section 2 provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use at his discretion for the employment of field and clerical services, and for the payment of necessary expenses, such sums as may be appropriated for this purpose from time to time by Congress.

Here is an express provision that the Commissioner of Education shall aid in putting into operation plans to teach illiterates, and the provision that Congress may appropriate money for this purpose, which shall be applied by the Secretary. I do not believe that the time has arrived when the National Government, in addition to the scope of its present authority extending in almost every direction, shall include within the scope of that authority common-school education. I think if there is any one thing that can and ought to be left to the States it is the question of the control of the common schools and common-school education. [Applause.]

There is another provision of the bill which I decidedly take exception to. Almost for the first time, in my experience at least, it is proposed to confer upon an official of the Government the official authority to go out and beg for funds. And if this bill shall be passed the Commissioner of Education will be putting in a considerable portion of his time and the work of his office begging Rockefeller and Carnegie and other wealthy men to furnish funds for an enterprise which, if it shall be entered upon at all, we ought to furnish funds for out of the National Treasury. I am not in favor of giving to some officer of the Government official authority to go begging for the benefit of the National Government. The bill provides not only that the Secretary of the Interior shall use for the purpose indicated in the bill—which is the education of illiterates—the money appropriated for that purpose, but also the money contributed by individuals and societies.

He is hereby authorized to accept donations for this purpose from disinterested individuals and societies.

Disinterested individuals and societies! I apprehend that means everybody or nobody. In a way everyone is interested in education, and no one is disinterested unless you apply it to everyone. So that here is a license—not merely a license, but official authority for the Commissioner of Education to organize an office for the purpose of begging money to be donated for the uses of the United States in place of Treasury appropriations. We might just as well give to all of the officials of the Government the right to go out and beg money for various purposes. There is no more reason for begging money for this purpose than there is reason for begging money for a thousand other purposes for which the Government appropriates money. Under the law we do not permit officials to accept money. That is a good law. We ought to maintain the law. I am not in favor of organizing any bureau of the Government for the purpose of soliciting private funds for governmental functions. If we should educate these illiterates through the National Government, we ought to pay the bills ourselves. Who will propose that we beg money to maintain the Army or the Navy; that we beg money for any of the other purposes for which money is appropriated? There are a great many people who could be induced, through proper solicitation, to donate money to the Government for various purposes. If we ought to do the work, this country ought to be and I believe is big enough and strong enough to pay its own bills, and we should not place the Government under obligations to any private individual, who may, perhaps, in the donation of his funds attempt to indicate the direction in which they shall be applied, so as to control the education which may be given. Private individuals can donate their funds to private corporations and institutions. There is no reason why we should permit them to donate funds for governmental functions.

I note in the report on this bill something I would like to have very carefully vouched for, although I do not in any way doubt the authority of the distinguished committee which made the report. The committee in its report pays a very deserved tribute to Mrs. Stewart, of Rowan County, Ky., for the work that she has done toward teaching illiterates how to read and write; but if it can be done as easily as the committee would indicate, then illiteracy ought soon to be abolished. Here is a serious statement made in a serious report:

The experiment in Kentucky showed that in most cases an adult could learn to read and write in a month. One man, aged 30, after four lessons in the evening school, wrote the superintendent a legible letter. Another man, aged 70, wrote a legible letter after seven nights. A woman, aged 70, wrote a legible letter after eight nights of study. In most cases a few weeks' attendance at the night schools was sufficient to enable the adult pupils to pass over the dark line of illiteracy and into the class of literates.

While the statement is not directly made, yet the inference is conveyed that illiterates—those who have never learned to read and write—can, after four nights, learn to write a legible letter. Utterly absurd! If they have such remarkable characters in Rowan County, Ky., that in four nights or eight nights, knowing theretofore nothing of how to read or write, they are able to write good letters, then we ought to resign our places on the floor of this House and invite those people to legislate for the country.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. DIES. If the report about which the gentleman is just now speaking is true, that would remove to a large extent, would it not, the objections to the literacy test in the Burnett immigration bill?

Mr. MANN. It certainly would. There would be no objection. All you would have to do, if this is true, would be to detain immigrants for eight days when they came to the country and teach them how to read and write. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. I agree fully with everything that my colleague has said, and I assume that he has investigated this matter very thoroughly.

Mr. MANN. That is a rather violent assumption.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask him, before taking his seat, to state whence comes the demand for this legislation, if he knows?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think everyone knows where the demand for this legislation comes from. It comes from the Commissioner of Education, who is a very live wire, a very active man, who finds himself in an office where there is not very much to do and who naturally wants to increase his authority. The Commissioner of Education now, under existing law, has his main duties in conducting reindeer stations, and such things as that, in Alaska. Very naturally he desires to have more authority. That is the case of nearly every official of the Government, but there is no reason why Congress should depart from the policy of the Government, since the Government began, and undertake to do things that are entirely contrary to everything we have done before—namely, first, to maintain common schools, and, second, to beg for funds for governmental functions. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 6, 1914:

H. R. 9317. An act to regulate the payment of postal money orders.

On February 10, 1914:

H. R. 10084. An act to authorize the changing of the names of the steamships Buckman and Watson; and

H. R. 9574. An act to authorize the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the city of Hannibal, in the State of Missouri.

On February 16, 1914:

H. R. 32. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania; and

H. R. 8667. An act to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes.

On February 20, 1914:

H. R. 9848. An act for the relief of the New England Steamship Co.

On February 23, 1914:

H. R. 11283. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the navigable waters of St. Andrews Bay.

On February 25, 1914:

H. R. 11325. An act to authorize the reconstruction of the existing toll bridge across the Hudson River at Troy, in the State of New York, and the maintenance of the bridge so reconstructed.

ADULT ILLITERACY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, we are all of us indebted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for most careful and acute examination of bills that are presented to this House. In that regard I am quite sure Members on both sides of the House will agree that the gentleman from Illinois renders invaluable service to this House and to the country. It may be that in a measure his extremely critical suggestions regarding this bill are justified. However, in large measure, I am very sure that they are not. The gentleman, in the first place, says that this bill authorizes the Commissioner of Education and the Bureau of Education to embark in the cause of education, and says that this phrase "put into operation" these schemes is to be given by this language to the Commissioner of Education. If gentlemen will examine the bill, they will see that there is no such language as that in the bill. The language of the bill is that he is authorized, upon request or invitation, to advise with school officials, teachers, and others in devising and putting into operation. It is not expected that he will do more than this. The bill very carefully guards against it by saying that he will only advise and assist upon requests from school officials and others who are engaged in this work. It seems to me that that is a sufficient answer to that particular criticism of the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Illinois then makes the criticism that this bill authorizes and, indeed, empowers the Commissioner of Education to go out and solicit funds. There is no such language in the bill, and there is nothing that implies it. Of course the gentleman knows that the Commissioner of Education has nothing of that sort in mind or in view. He is only authorized to receive contributions, not to solicit them. Because the Commissioner of Education is authorized to receive voluntary contributions does not even imply that he will solicit funds.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. DYER. Can the gentleman state to the committee whether such a provision has ever been enacted in any form?

Mr. TOWNER. I am unable to state. So far as I am concerned, I would not care very much whether that language remained in the bill or not. I am not altogether satisfied that it would be the best thing to do to allow it to remain.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman believe it a matter of wise governmental policy that any work to be done by governmental function should be dependent upon or should be paid for by voluntary contributions of outsiders? If this work is to be done, should it not be done at governmental expense?

Mr. TOWNER. I certainly think the gentleman is entirely correct about that. That is not the question here. The question involved is this. This is work in which charitably inclined individuals would be interested. Now, would it be any embarrassment to the work of the Government if it should receive and be be authorized to use in the prosecution of this work these voluntary contributions?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it would, if the gentleman will permit me, for this reason: Whatever service needs to be performed by any governmental function should be regulated, determined, and controlled by the Congress. If some Government officer is authorized to receive contributions from private sources and to regulate and conduct his work by contributions obtained from other sources, then the control of the work is taken from out of the Congress and placed in him and private individuals.

If it is not a governmental function it should not be paid for out of the Government Treasury, then no Government official should be permitted to perform work which is desirable from the standpoint of some individual who is willing to pay for it. Whatever is proper for a governmental function ought to be paid for out of Government funds.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman I am not at all sure but what the gentleman is right in that matter. Of course that language can be eliminated from the bill without in any way affecting the result we desire to obtain.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the proposition in the bill differs in principle from that embodied in a certain act of Congress appropriating several thousand dollars, which money, together with the various amounts appropriated by the Republics of South and of Central America and with the large sum of $750,000 donated by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, made the fund which constructed the Pan American Building in this city? Why did not the Government of the United States stand on its dignity then and put up the building or have the other Governments do it and refuse to contribute a cent to a fund consisting in large part of the contribution of a private individual?

Mr. TOWNER. So far as I am concerned, I am unable to answer the question. I will turn that over to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can answer it very easily when I have the time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to have him explain a little of the effect of this particular stress on literacy developed by this bill and the Burnett bill. It seems to have been the observation, it has been mine, that some of the highly educated men I have encountered were illiterate; some of the most usefully educated men I have met and observed were illiterate. Now, the trend seems to be here in all recent legislation to ignore the value of other education and emphasize only the value of education in letters, and if the gentleman will expose his views on that question it will relieve my suspicion that I may vote against the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, I am very sure I would go very far in order to secure the support of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Let me say this, that I entirely agree with the gentleman that literacy is only a part of the education of any man, woman, or child. Let me say further, that the committee will do everything it can in the furtherance of the movement now in existence, which is world-wide in extent, toward vocational education. I hope to see a system of vocational education established in this country as is now in vogue in our public-school system, so that all the youth of the United States may at least have the opportunity to become educated not only through the brain but also through the eye and the hands, and become good workmen as well as good thinkers. I am very sure that this is not designed to discredit or disprove that line of work. The committee will be glad to cooperate in bringing about, as effectively as possible and as soon as possible, legislation that will assist on those lines.

I wanted to say in regard to the further criticism of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], regarding the work in Kentucky, that I am quite sure if he had a wider knowledge of the facts he would hardly discredit it. He seems to discredit the statement that a man aged 70 wrote a legible letter after seven nights' work; that a woman aged 70 wrote a legible letter after eight nights of study. The gentleman is inclined to be facetious regarding those statements and to say if that is the case anybody under any circumstances can very easily acquire an education. Those, of course, are exceptional instances. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois and the committee, however, that those cases are vouched for and are unquestionably true. If the gentleman, however, had gone further he would have seen this statement:

> In most cases a few weeks' attendance at the night schools was sufficient to enable the adult pupils to pass over the dark line of illiteracy and into the class of literates.

And that is literally true, as the sworn evidence before the committee unquestionably shows. I think we do not realize, all of us, how really easy it is for the adult who is intelligent to pass from the line of illiteracy to literacy, and to learn to read and write. That does not mean to learn to read Shakespeare's tragedies and to understand them. It does mean to learn to read the simplest and easiest of printed matter. When we say that they learn to write it does not mean that they shall become skillful penmen, but it does mean that they shall be able to formulate in writing the letters, and, with great care, perhaps, and much time, write a little so that it can be read by others. These things can be accomplished in a comparatively short time. They have been accomplished under circumstances about which there can be no question, and that is the encouraging thing about it. When an entire county—Rowan County, Ky.—with 13 per cent of illiteracy, can virtually wipe it out in three years' time, then in this country we ought to be able to pass over the dark lines of illiteracy which are a disgrace to us and make us a literate Nation.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my friend from Iowa what, in his judgment, would be the good to the Government in the wiping out of the kind of illiteracy of which he is speaking? What good would result to the body politic from the eradication of that kind of illiteracy now under discussion?

Mr. TOWNER. I hardly think the gentleman from Texas would desire me to defend the necessity of an educated citizenship rather than an ignorant one, or an educated and intelligent electorate rather than an ignorant one. All of this is involved in that. When a man learns to read it opens the door of knowledge. He can then read the newspapers and become more intelligently able to perform his duties as a citizen and as a voter. I am sure the gentleman does not mean to discourage education. We have come to think in this country not that it is everything, but that it opens the door to everything; not that in itself it is a thing desirable, but that it leads to almost everything that is desirable, and it is absolutely essential for the purposes of an intelligent performance of the duties of an American citizen.

Mr. DIES. In that I quite agree with the gentleman from Iowa. I only wanted to ask him if he did not think a very good way to begin the treatment of illiteracy is to cease importing illiterates into this country?

Mr. TOWNER. Well, I am not in favor of the literacy test, I will say to the gentleman, but I do not think that is involved in this question. Whether or not they are allowed to come to this country we have already a pretty large burden on our hands. More than five millions of them are here already, and I will say to the gentleman that not a very large proportion of them are foreign, either.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, if my friend from Iowa thinks that the illiteracy we now have is dangerous to free institutions, how can he reconcile his desire to import it at the rate of 200,000 or 300,000 a year in addition to that which we now have?

Mr. TOWNER. I refuse to consider another question now. But I will only say, in passing, this: If, as is shown here, it is such an easy matter with organized effort to educate the foreigner after he comes to this country, even if he is an adult foreigner, it certainly seems to me it is not a very dangerous thing for him to come. The question is so wide-reaching in its scope that I do not desire to enter upon a discussion of it at this time.

Mr. GOULDEN. The cases as stated in the report that occurred in Rowan County, Ky., I do not think the gentleman would claim could be regarded as an established rule in the education of adults who could not read or write. He certainly would not claim that that was a rule that could apply generally to all illiterates, would he?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not think I quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am referring to the claim made in this report as to the cases of three persons who in from four to eight lessons learned to read and write.

Mr. TOWNER. Those are exceptional cases.

Mr. GOULDEN. They are unquestionably exceptional cases.

Mr. TOWNER. But they are sufficiently remarkable to be encouraging. I think the gentleman will agree.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to state to the gentleman that, in common with many others on the floor, it has been my good fortune to have been a teacher and a school official, and I want to say that the cases mentioned in the report are extraordinary ones. I have never in my experience known anything like them. They must have exceptionally bright people in Rowan County, Ky. But if the gentleman will pardon me, I think the sum and substance of the committee's report in favor of the measure, it seems to me, appears on page 4, where it says:

> The national bureau can map out the dark territory and stimulate there a desire for self-help. It can advise as to methods and formulate plans for the campaign. It can receive and distribute funds for the work.

It seems to me that covers everything claimed by the committee, and it ought to call for favorable action on this bill. It is simply permissive, and does not give authority to the commissioner to initiate proceedings. He can do nothing except when requested.

Mr. TOWNER. Especially do I think I am justified in saying for the committee that it is no intention of the committee or of the author of the bill or of the Commissioner of Education to in any way interfere with the work of the common schools. It has nothing to do with the general system of education.

I agree as thoroughly as the gentleman does that the public-school system is a State matter and should be under State control. Happily, this is a way or method by which I am quite sure the work of the common school, especially in such rural districts as Rowan County, Ky., which has been referred to, can be largely stimulated and encouraged. There, it will be remembered, Mrs. Stewart was the superintendent of schools in the county. It should be remembered that she called for the voluntary assistance of her teachers; that every one of those teachers responded; and that they gave their services voluntarily to these moonlight schools. It was a work that not only helped the people who received the benefit directly from it, but it also stimulated the county school system. There can be no educational work of this sort on one educational line that will not help all.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I have been reading this bill and looking it over. Of course there would not be any power under this bill to compel any of the illiterates to come in and take advantage of this law if it were enacted?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly not.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, is it not a fact that the people whom you are trying to reach under this bill now enjoy opportunities if they would only improve those opportunities?

Mr. TOWNER. No. I will say to the gentleman it certainly is not true. There are very few opportunities for the adult population of the country to acquire an education, even to learn to read and write.

Mr. McKENZIE. If they really were desirous of obtaining an education, does not the gentleman think that the facilities are now furnished by all the States whereby they could obtain this very common education?

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, if they really desired; but this work has to be largely stimulated and encouraged.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I would like to inquire where the United States stands now? It appears that the desire is to accomplish a concerted amount of nation-wide action, which will place the United States where it belongs. I would like to inquire what position the United States now occupies in education among the nations of the earth?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know what the relative rank of the United States is. I think the percentage of illiteracy in this country is very large as compared with that of the other civilized nations of the world; large as compared with that of England, and as compared with that of Germany, and as compared with that of France.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. There do not appear to be any statistics here in the report.

Mr. TOWNER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. With pleasure.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose the gentleman is aware of the fact that in nearly all the great centers night schools are held under the direction of the board of education, to which all adults who choose to go may go without any charge. Now would this law, if enacted, add to the opportunities that are already provided?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that the evidence before the committee is that that is not by any means as extensive as the gentleman seems to think. The opportunity is not nearly so widespread as is the amount of illiteracy. In other words, there are not nearly enough night schools in any city of the Union to furnish an opportunity for all the adult illiterates to obtain an education.

Mr. MADDEN. I speak only of the city from whence I come, and there night schools are held in all sections of the city where people can be found who are willing to go to school, and every facility that can be afforded in any way, except by compulsion, is afforded to those who are adults and have not the ability to read and write to learn what they choose to learn.

Mr. TOWNER. While a great deal of that work is being carried on, it is not yet sufficient to supply the demand.

Mr. MADDEN. Will this do it?

Mr. TOWNER. Let me say further that there is a work now under contemplation by which the employees in the large establishments in the cities who are illiterate are afforded an opportunity during working hours, in which they will not be deprived of their wages, to attend these schools; and that work is being now instituted in some cities with splendid results.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman wish to convey to the House the information that industrial establishments allow the men employed by them time off in which to go to school?

Mr. TOWNER. Industrial establishments not only allow it, but are glad to do it in most instances. I think the evidence before the committee so far is that in no case that we now know of has a suggestion of this kind been made to large employers of labor where they have not been perfectly willing and glad to cooperate in this way; and that is one of the objects of this bill—to assist and encourage in that way.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, is the gentleman able to give any information as to how extensive this practice is prevailing?

Mr. TOWNER. No. I will say to the gentleman that there is evidence before the committee which will be published, and which will be available, if the gentleman desires to read further about that matter.

Mr. MADDEN. I simply want to say that I do not know of a case myself among large employers where that practice prevails.

Mr. TOWNER. It is being done in some of the cities of the United States.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I confess that I do not have as great a familiarity with this bill as I should, and still it is a very short matter. As was well said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the first part of the bill, the first section, authorizes the gathering of information. Undoubtedly the proponents of this bill do not contend that the officers of the Government in charge of these matters can not now gather all the statistics with reference to illiteracy that they regard as of value. In treating the question, therefore, nothing could be added, so far as the first section of the bill is concerned, to the present facilities or opportunities of the Commissioner of Education to gather new data upon which to base recommendations to Congress.

In the second section of the bill I find it stated that—

> In carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use, at his discretion, for the employment of field and clerical services and for the payment of necessary expenses, such sums as may be appropriated for this purpose from time to time by Congress.

Undoubtedly the Secretary of the Interior could now, without another line of law, do all that he is authorized to do in this second section of the bill. Then the bill continues:

> Or contributed by individuals—

And so forth. There is nothing in this law that will give individuals a greater opportunity to contribute their money for the purpose of removing illiteracy in this country than they now possess.

What, then, is the object of this measure? To increase the activities of the Federal Government; to give a bureau more money to the end that it may employ more clerks, more helpers; to begin a thing which will end in an appropriation; to start the ball rolling in a direction the end of which is an appropriation by the Federal Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is not a man in this Committee who believes more strongly than I do that ignorance and illiteracy are the foes of free government; because I know that free government can exist only by having citizens who are intelligent and patriotic; but I say it is worse than idle to talk about beginning appropriations of Federal money to cure illiteracy in this country when we are importing it into this country every year to the tune of 200,000 or 300,000 from Europe.

It is said that there are a lot of adults in this country who are illiterate. There is not an adult in this country who could not learn to read and write if he chose to do so. Our States abound with public schools. Texas is often pointed to as one of the frontier States of this Union, but every boy and girl in that State can get a common-school education if they possess the intellectual curiosity and the desire to have education. My friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] stated just a moment ago that in his State they not only have free day schools wherein children may get an education, but night schools are provided free of charge where adults may go and learn to read and write and get the rudiments of an English education. I do not care how many schools you have nor how many colleges you have, you never can get an education into the head of a man until he has some sort of intellectual curiosity. You may lead the horse to water, but you can not make him drink. This is just another movement, as I stated a moment ago, to increase the activities of the Federal Government. We have not gone far enough yet. We tell the farmer when to plant and when to reap. We tell the huntsman when to shoot and when it is against the law to shoot, and down in my country we get the game law fixed up so that he can shoot just after the ducks have gone over and just after they have passed back. We are making laws for everything. We are making laws to control the habits and morals of the people, to tell them when they shall work and when they shall play; and now we want to set up a great Federal bureau of education, with a great appropriation, with another great long army of Federal employees to be pensioned at last, for the purpose of making the people learn to read and to write.

There is a good deal in the suggestion of my friend from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] that the mere thing of reading and writing does not do a great deal toward making citizens who are capable of self-government. That is, I gathered from his statement, that that is the criticism he directed against the bill. I will say to my friend that that is true. You may have a native-born American citizen who has lived in this country from his childhood to his manhood, who has been imbued with the principles of free government, who has been told around the fireside of the battles fought for liberty by the patriots of his country, who is familiar with all of her glorious history from Bunker Hill to Santiago, and it does not take much book learning for him to vote to uphold that flag of liberty and to maintain a government based upon the consent of the governed. And it is also true that a man who comes from a country that has not learned to love liberty, who has not that traditional education for free government, might read and write 40 words and still never be capable of assisting in that function known as free government in this country.

I am opposed to this bill. If there was nothing else in it to condemn it, the last part of the bill, authorizing officers of the Government to go begging around over the country, would condemn it to my mind. It is proposed to allow them to go to some man who has built up a fortune by importing cheap labor from Europe or the owner of some vast enterprise who has brought in shiploads of ignorant immigrants and used their pauper labor in competition with the free labor of this country to make millions. It is proposed to have the officers of the Government go around to him soliciting and receiving subscriptions for the eradication of illiteracy in this country. I am opposed to that. If the Government of the United States wants to embark upon this matter of appropriations, it is amply able to supply the money to do it. We have a graduated income tax, and it is going to wax fat and grow. It is going to increase like insects in the sun, and pretty soon we are going to have a graduated inheritance tax, and that will likewise expand, and new ways will be found in this Republic to tax wealth and raise money for appropriations. Gentlemen need not be worried about that. That era is upon us now. But we need not be in a hurry to begin appropriations for universal education, and that is what this bill means. This bill does not appropriate a dollar. That is one reason why it is not going to pass.

If it appropriated $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 it would go through with a whoop, but it does not appropriate a dollar. It is only an insidious suggestion that leads toward the Treasury. It is a desire on the part of the ambitious head of a department to extend his influence, to extend the number of his employees, to make himself important by a long coterie of helpers, aids, and employees. And, of course, as every intelligent man must know, the tracks of this bill all lead in the direction of the doors of the Treasury. If you pass it next week or next month or next session, they will be here saying, "Now, you have given us all this work to do for the eradication of human unintelligence. The head of this bureau needs a vast deal of money to do that." They will come in here and suggest estimates for millions. They will say, "We want men to go over into Pennsylvania and down into Texas looking for ignorant people." Men on salaries of $1,200 a year will go roaming around over the country looking for illiteracy; and of course they will find it. There will be new jobs. We have got enough people running around over the country now attending to other people's business, showing them how to farm, showing them how to hunt ducks, showing them how to set up a silo. We have an army looking after the trees, picking bugs off the bark of the trees, seeing that fire does not break out; and I am told upon what seems to be very good authority that it requires about all the revenues we get from our forest reserves to pay the long army of men who are watching trees and watching the bugs on the trees and protecting them.

Mr. Chairman, the sovereign States of this Union are every one of them providing a great public-school system for the education of the people in those States. I hope the Federal Government will leave something for the individual States of this Union to do for themselves. I love individuality, whether it is personal or whether it is conceived in the coordination of sovereign States that make a nation. I believe something ought to be left to the individual. Do you tell me in this land of newspapers, in this day of the printing press, in this day of circulating libraries, in this day when labor will produce more of the necessities of life in a given time than ever before, that there is any excuse for a man or a woman possessing the physical and mental faculties that God gives to the ordinary person not to learn to read and write?

You could not keep a boy or girl in this country from getting the rudiments of an education, and, more than that, the Government, with all of its power and all of its appropriations, has never in the history of a community and civilization forced either morals or education of the right sort into the heart and head of a human being.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I will.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I notice from the report issued by the Commissioner of Education that out of every thousand white people in the State of Texas there are forty-three over 10 years of age who can not read or write.

Mr. DIES. Very likely that is true.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How are you going to cure that?

Mr. DIES. I will tell you how we got that. You set the negroes free, and you neglected to educate them. You set them free for us to educate, and we are taxing ourselves every year, and we are doing it the best we can and getting along nicely. The illiteracy the gentleman speaks of is the illiteracy among the colored people.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But this report says that forty-three out of every thousand white people are illiterate.

Mr. DIES. Oh, well, then, there is more immigration from foreign countries into Texas than I imagined there was. [Laughter.] But, gentlemen, you do not need any increase in the Federal appropriations to take care of illiteracy in Texas. We do have a few adult whites in Texas, and very few, who are illiterate, but that is no sign that they do not make good citizens. They can tell you the story of David Crockett, they can tell you the story of Sam Houston, they can tell you of the immortal stand the Texans made at the Alamo, and they can tell you how Houston won at San Jacinto.

They may not be able to read or write or teach school, but they know what it is to live under the flag of a free government; they know what it was to wrest liberty from Mexico when in a state of subjection; and they know how to keep it now, although they do not write a real pretty hand or read Shakespeare. [Laughter and applause.]

There is a vast difference between illiteracy of men born to the soil and imbued with the great traditions of the country and the illiteracy of persons who come from a foreign country unknown to free government and opposed to the rise of free government and progress for a thousand years.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that we will not send the Commissioner of Education about to see Andrew Carnegie and John D. Rockefeller and the millionaires of this country and relieve them of a lot of millions that they do not need. I hope this Government may never become a partner with private wealth in the matter of public appropriations. Do you know, if the Commissioner of Education went out looking for money he might get some tainted money? Some trust magnate might contribute something to the Commissioner of Education. We do not know what influence might contribute, and, moreover, it is unnecessary.

If you look at the appropriations we are making, you will find that we have money for every known purpose. We are expending a billion two hundred millions a year, a staggering, stupendous sum. If this work was necessary to be done, if you do want to create another avenue of appropriation, if you want to create another long army of Government employees to be pensioned when they get too old to work, you have plenty of money to spend, and the resources in taxable wealth of the Nation to do it with without constituting the head of a department, an officer and agent, to go around and solicit funds from any person whatsoever. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of consolidating a number of speeches that I made during the consideration of the immigration bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HARRISON). The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I have not been surprised in recent years at the growth of the sentiment for the administration of our affairs from Washington. Alexander Hamilton, in the days of his most ardent ambition for a central government, for Federal authority, never dreamed of such power and authority for the Federal Government as is being exercised to-day from Washington.

I have subscribed myself as a disciple of Hamilton. I have had considerable pride in the fact that his theories of government have been workable in the administration of our national affairs. But I confess that I can not keep up with the followers of Thomas Jefferson in the exercise of national authority to-day. The Democratic side of this House is going altogether too fast in the direction of nationalization and away from local self-government for me. You are going almost as fast as the colored man who heard the bullet twice—once when it passed him and again when he passed it.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. He was going some.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And so are we and so is the country. I think we might well pause occasionally and take a moment for serious consideration as to just how far we are going if we follow in the direction in which we are headed at this time. Here is a proposition for the Federal Government to do what ought to be done in the very smallest political division of the United States, the school district.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. From the hearings which have been held here it appears that that has not been done. That being the case, is there not some duty on the part of the Federal Government to at least require that the common-school education shall somewhere be provided for? Have we no duty in relation to the question of education?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of course to concede the position taken by the gentleman from Michigan is simply to say that we are incapable of local self-government, and that the people can not be governed so well in the school district, in the township, in the county, and in the State as they can be governed from the seat of government in Washington.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does this bill provide that the Central, the Federal, or the Hamiltonian Government, whatever he may please to call it, can interfere in these communities in any way unless it be requested so to do?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why, the very purpose is to interfere and to recognize the power and the authority and the greater wisdom of the Federal Government. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Perhaps the gentleman did not understand my question, and, with his permission, I will repeat it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very well.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does this bill provide that the Federal Government can intervene in any way, save upon request of the State or the community, and then can the commissioner intervene otherwise than in an advisory and persuasive capacity?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not so sure that the limitations of the authority granted here will be confined to such operations upon the part of the Commissioner of Education as he may be called upon to do by the local communities. I am not so sure that he could not initiate action in some of the counties in the State of Virginia by sending his agents down there to work up a sentiment or a request to start a night school. I believe that the bill would authorize him to do just that thing.

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANAHAN. If, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], a request were made to the National Government to assist in this work of educating the illiterates, and the National Government appropriated money for that purpose and educated the illiterates in the States where they are illiterate, would not the next logical step which the Government would take be to enforce the civil rights of the ward which the National Government's money educated and enforce his right to vote in those very districts?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is no way of prophesying to what extent the national authority would be used if we keep on in this direction. If we may go into the State upon the request of a local organization and establish a school in a school district under the general supervision of the Commissioner of Education, operating from the seat of government in Washington, how long will it be until we are exercising other authority in that same community as much out of harmony with our idea of local self-government as is the idea of establishing public schools?

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. Does the gentleman think that in our scheme of Government there is any place for a Commissioner of Education?

Mr. CAMPBELL. For a Federal Commissioner of Education, I do not.

Mr. ASWELL. Then the gentleman does not admit that the office of commissioner, which is existing and has for many years, should exist? The gentleman is against the whole proposition of a Commissioner of Education?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the matter were left entirely to me, I should not have more than about one-third of the commissions that we have in the United States to-day, and one of the things that I think could be easily dispensed with is the office of the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, if the gentleman will permit, has he not deceived himself, therefore, all of these years in classifying himself as a Hamiltonian?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all. I believe in a Federal authority to do those things that can not be done by local authority. National matters should be controlled by Federal authority, but matters that come purely within the authority of the State ought to be exercised by the State authorities.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman is so courteous I avail myself of the opportunity.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is always a pleasure to yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Strip from this bill the subject of receiving appropriations, then does it give to the Commissioner of Education any power which he does not now possess? I ask that question in that form in order that the gentleman may address himself to my inquiry as to whether this bill embarks us upon any enlargement of national power?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think we are enlarging his authority. I think without this bill he would hardly have the authority to go into the State of Virginia and establish a night school, and this bill gives him that authority, or he would exercise that authority under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman think this bill means that the Commissioner of Education will go into any State and establish a school?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, not individually. He will send some one, or have some one do it. It will be done under his supervision.

Mr. TOWNER. And institute or establish a school through some of his agents?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If not, why the bill?

Mr. TOWNER. Simply because of this fact, if the gentleman will pardon me for saying so in his time, that the bill is intended for the purpose of advising and assisting local authorities to do this. It is for the purpose of correlating them; it is for the purpose of bringing to the school authorities——

Mr. CAMPBELL. I get the gentleman's idea.

Mr. TOWNER. And the State authorities in one State the benefit of the knowledge and experience had in another.

Mr. CAMPBELL. All of which concedes that we should wipe out school district, township, county, and State lines and administer the affairs of the people of the United States from a central authority in Washington.

Mr. TOWNER. Again, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman think now that this bill has anything to do with the public-school system about which he is talking so much? This is for the purpose of the education of the adult illiterates, to provide a means for their education.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have a sort of crude notion that teaching in a public way people who do not know how to read and write is a system of public education.

I think this could fairly be classed as a public school, for I take it that every illiterate within a district would have a right to attend.

Mr. TOWNER. Has the gentleman read the language of the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman understand what is meant where it says "among the adult population"?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Adults partaking of the opportunities to learn to read and write, I take it, are acquiring learning such as is taught to minors in the public schools.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman understand that the public-school system does not embrace adult teaching?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do.

Mr. TOWNER. And does not allow——

Mr. CAMPBELL. But I hardly recognize——

Mr. TOWNER (continuing). And does not allow them in most States to enter the public schools at all?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They may enter the public schools in some of the States by special arrangement, but even that is a matter within the State. The State of Iowa and the State of Kansas should open their schools to adult illiterates if they are not now open. There is no reason why the Congress of the United States should take up its time and the time of the people of the country in dealing with matters of this character when there are matters of the greatest possible import pressing themselves upon the Congress for consideration.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman talks about control and directing. Does the gentleman understand that the language which says they may advise means to control directly?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Being construed in the logical way in which it must be construed it means that the Commissioner of Education will control and direct it.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Did the gentleman support the provisions of the bill which was before the Congress by which the Department of Agriculture sends men into his territory and pays them to advise his farmers how to carry on their work? Did the gentleman at that time urge that this was an interference with the rights of the State with regard to their farmers carrying on their work in the way they chose? [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Iowa probably has in his enthusiasm over this matter overlooked the fact that the Department of Agriculture is engaged in an entirely different line of work from that of giving a general education and the teaching of unlearned minds the letters or how to correlate them or how to make them. There is a vast difference between that sort of learning and of taking a new species of wheat or of corn or of cattle or of swine into a community and showing the local community how they may be developed.

Mr. TOWNER. Did the gentleman vote for the bill appropriating $500,000 in large part to teach the farmers of his district how to cure the hog cholera? Did the gentleman vote against the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not sure I did. In any event, I will not parley with the gentleman from Iowa over these matters. I have been opposed here for 12 years to all of these insidious attacks on the power of the people at home or the rights of the people at home or the duty of the people at home doing some little thing for themselves.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it the gentleman's contention that the Government owes more to the people in the matter of enabling them to improve the breed of hogs, sheep, cattle, and horses than it does to the improvement of their minds?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; and I will tell the gentleman from Kentucky this: The Government of the United States does not owe anything but protection to life, liberty, property, and opportunity. Has a follower of Thomas Jefferson come to concede that we have a paternal Government that owes everything to the people, even to go into local communities to teach people how to read and write?

Mr. BARKLEY. Now will the gentleman yield to one further question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not the theory of our Government, and of all true governments, that it is merely an instrumentality through which the people have their general welfare promoted, and is not any governmental action which promotes the general welfare of the people a proper governmental action?

Mr. CAMPBELL. True. But the school district is a governmental division, and I maintain that that school district can be better organized, established, and maintained, and the school better taught from the district than from Washington.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the gentleman on that proposition. But is there anything in this bill that would prohibit the local board of school trustees carrying on the common schools in any State by reason of interference?

Mr. CAMPBELL. What I am objecting to is the assumption on the part of the Federal authority that it is a duty devolving upon it to go into the school districts and tell the people how to teach people to read and write.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not agree that that is the object of this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then, if that is not the object of this bill, it has none.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Part of the bill reads this way—and I wish to get the gentleman's opinion in regard to it. It says:

> And he is hereby authorized, upon request or invitation—

It does not say what invitation, or from whom—> to advise and cooperate with school officials, teachers, and others in devising and putting into operation such plans as will give to illiterate men and women and to those of meager education an opportunity to learn to read and write and to supplement and extend their education.

What is meant there by "upon request or invitation"? By whom is it? Is it from the county?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I take it that any agent who had succeeded in inducing Carnegie or Rockefeller to make a donation and was sent down into one of the school districts in the State of Mississippi and worked up a sentiment for the night school, in which adult citizens of that district who could not read and write might be taught, should write to the Commissioner of Education and make a request, the latter would authorize him to establish a school there or cooperate with the local authorities in establishing a local school.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think that under this loosely drawn provision the Federal Government could go into any locality in the United States and supplement or make preparations to carry on the work without the consent of the locality, or even upon the invitation of an individual there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think there is any sort of question about it, unless some citizen in that community should bring an action in which the constitutional authority of the United States to engage in school teaching in a school district should be raised.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. In the beginning, in our independent school districts, the States did not provide for superintendents of schools. It was found that the county supervision greatly stimulated education in the independent districts. Now, later on, they found that the State could also stimulate the county by having a State supervisor of schools, who could disseminate from locality to locality the best method of education. Now, does not the gentleman believe that, aside from this question of State rights, the National Government could greatly stimulate the education of illiterate people simply in an advisory capacity, as I understand this bill to provide for? And, if so, would it not be a good thing, aside from this question of State rights?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not see any necessity for any such action from the Federal Government at Washington or on the part of the Government of the United States, in a matter that is so essentially a matter for the school district, with a county superintendent and State superintendent of public instruction, to direct and control, and with the local community that has authority to vote such a levy of taxes as necessary to maintain such schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is undoubtedly fundamentally true, but if we could, through these teachers of the National Government, remove some of this illiteracy——

Mr. CAMPBELL. What I am objecting to, if the gentleman from Nebraska will permit me, is the frame of mind that the American people are falling into, to the effect that everything must be done from Washington. There will be no necessity in 50 years from now——

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let me proceed for a moment. There will be no necessity in 50 years from now for a single political division in the United States, as we now have them, namely, the school district, the township, and the county, and the State, if we keep on in the direction in which we are going. All legislation, all control—everything will come from Washington. Congressmen are to-day called upon to do things that ought to be done in the school districts, and Congressmen spend their time here seriously discussing such local questions as ought to be settled in the township, the county, and the State. [Applause.] I am not so sure that that will be a good thing for the country. I am not so sure that we would have better government from Washington than we can have from the school district, the township, the county, and the State. I believe fundamentally that we can have better government right off the minds of the people where the government is to be exercised than we can have when it is exercised through a commission or anybody else a thousand or two thousand miles away.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. For a question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Do you think that the States have lost anything through the fact that they have provided a supervisory department over the independent schools? They have still maintained their independent system of education, and it has been greatly enhanced.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is no question but that our system of public schools has become more efficient in the last 25 years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Do you not think that that is largely due to the State supervision which they have had?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not necessarily so. I believe much of the good that has come has come from the fact that the school-teachers have taken their work more and more seriously and are giving better instructions than the average school-teacher gave 25 years ago, when teachers only taught school for the purpose of getting a little money that they might do something else. School-teaching in late years has become a profession in which the teacher has pride, and men and women are to-day devoting their entire lives to it, when 25 or 30 years ago they taught school as an expedient to enable them to embark on something else.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. As a matter of fact, do you not think that the great normal schools of the country that have prepared teachers have had a more beneficial effect upon the educational system of the State than all the State supervision that has ever been had?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think there is any question about that. I think the county institute, in which the teachers meet for a month and talk over the more modern methods of teaching, have had more to do with making effective the work of the teacher or improving the public schools of the country than any sort of academic discussion that might be engaged in by the State superintendent or by the national Commissioner of Education.

Mr. MADDEN. That is a compulsory requirement, is it not, to attend those institutes for 10 days?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; it is.

Mr. FARR. The normal-school instruction is under State supervision, is it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; under the law. The law provides for it.

Mr. FARR. They grade the work of the normal schools?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. The law provides that the teachers—and I think it is especially true in Pennsylvania—shall have their institutes, in which they have discussions upon the best methods of teaching.

Mr. FARR. Under the direction of the State law?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, the law provides that they shall go, but does not go into minute detail and tell them just what to do and how to do it.

Mr. FARR. Pretty nearly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The objection that I have to this and other laws like it is that it creates commissions. I do not believe in government by commission. We have too many commissions now. I do not believe in government by bureaus. We have too many bureaus now. We have bureaus directing affairs from Washington that reach out into the local communities and have almost autocratic power, power that Hamilton never deemed would be exercised by the Federal Government in any political division of the United States, perhaps, outside of the District of Columbia or the Territories. And yet to-day we are enlarging the scope and the authority of these commissions and increasing their number, and we are enlarging the authority of these bureaus and increasing their number, and giving them more and more power; and constantly the problems of life are becoming more and more intricate, more and more involved, and the cost of living is mounting higher and higher. The problem of making a living for the average man is a greater problem to-day than it has been.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. And in all these years we have been increasing bureaus and commissions that have been created for the alleged benefit of the individual down in Rock Creek Township, in Walnut Grove Township, or in school district No. 58.

Mr. FARR. I will ask the gentleman if they are not national problems to be settled in due time, when they are properly settled, from Washington?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Some problems are. There are some functions of government that must be exercised from here. Of all of those I am most heartily in favor, but I am not in favor of the exercise by the Federal Government of any function that can be better exercised by the school district or by the township or the county or the State. I am not in favor of creating a bureau or a commission for the exercise of such authority from Washington.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman favor the continuation of the present Bureau of Public Health, and does he think that the bureau was organized properly under the Federal Government?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think the Bureau of Public Health has justified its creation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman think it was properly made a national bureau?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman think it ought to be abolished?

Mr. CAMPBELL. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I asked the gentleman if he thought it ought to be abolished?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is one of the commissions which, if I were reorganizing this Government, I would leave out in the reorganization.

Mr. BARKLEY. What are some of the other commissions that the gentleman would abolish if it were left to him?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not reorganizing the Government here this afternoon. I am protesting against the creating of another commission.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand from the gentleman's long experience in statecraft and his familiarity with the discussions of this House that he has grown gradually from the Hamiltonian idea to the idea of State government?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am still trying to preserve a sense of humor and to keep a sense of perspective that will enable me to see the difference between the prerogatives of a county or a State and the prerogatives of the Federal Government. I am endeavoring to hold to the distinction that Hamilton made and that Jefferson made. I am endeavoring to hold myself to the views that would require the township and the county and the State to exercise the functions that would properly be exercised by them and require the Federal Government to exercise the functions that properly belong to it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I misunderstood the gentleman when I thought he said that he favored the Government doing whatever should be done, if it could do it better than the people themselves could do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My contention is that the Government at Washington can not do better for the people of a school district or of a township or a State such things as are naturally within their own right and their duty.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In other words, the gentleman says that it is the function of the local government to take care of that and not the function of the Federal Government?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Absolutely.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I just wanted to get the gentleman's idea.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My contention is that there are certain things—and the establishment and maintenance of public schools is one of them—which can be better established and maintained by the local authority than by the Federal Government.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood the gentleman to be rather broad in his opposition to the Federal Government performing functions within the States.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How about the gentleman's attitude on the tariff commission?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a different proposition. I could easily be led into a discussion of the tariff, but——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would not like to enter into such a discussion with the gentleman, but I would like to have the gentleman reconcile his statements.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Even the polished manner of the gentleman from Virginia can not induce me to embark upon a discussion of the tariff at this moment. Some time later I might be induced to do so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Would you make a distinction between a road district and a school district? That is, do you think the National Government could build roads for a road district better than the road district could do it for itself, as compared with the Government interfering with education in the school districts?

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman from Kansas yield to me for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has any provision been made anywhere for the National Government aiding road districts except post routes?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not that I have heard of.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. But in an indirect way the Government does aid post districts. I speak aside from the rights of States to do these things constitutionally.

Mr. MANN. We maintain a resemblance to the constitutional requirements, anyhow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What analogy would the gentleman draw between the national appropriations now given to the State agricultural colleges for the purpose of improving and promoting knowledge of agriculture among the people and the bill now under consideration?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is a difference in degree only.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the gentleman favor that appropriation for agricultural colleges in States and for the purpose of fostering a scientific knowledge of agriculture?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is a difference in some ways.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman explain that difference? In what respect are they different—I mean in the objects to be attained?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In the objects to be attained there is this difference: We have scientific information that can be applied to agriculture in the States and in the townships that nobody in the townships knows anything about; that perhaps no one in the State knows anything about. We have gathered here scientists who have developed facts. They have experimented with plants and animals and have demonstrated certain things that would be of benefit to the States, to the townships, and to the people at large that they can get in no other way. Does the gentleman claim that you can not teach a man to read and write, except from Washington?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not. Now, let me ask the gentleman another question: Do you think that these numerous soil surveys conducted all over the United States by the Federal Government, and the maps distributed from Washington amongst the people of the different localities showing the character of the soil and the purposes to which it is adaptable in the way of production, are proper Federal functions, or that they ought to be left wholly to the States?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Many of the States exercise those functions, and I am not so sure but that it would be better for them to do it, if they had as good a soil surveyor as the United States has, and some have.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I understand the object of this bill—if I am wrong I am subject to correction and am glad to be corrected—it is not that the Federal Government shall reach its arm into any particular locality for the purpose of managing or handling or conducting public schools or private schools, but that by the passage of this bill it may gather information which may be submitted to the local authorities or distributed among them for the purpose of advising and informing them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The bill provides for instruction for illiterate adults, a very simple question.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not provide that the National Government shall conduct schools.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I knew an old Baptist minister who settled on the prairies, who exercised that function on his own part. He taught day schools and night schools among illiterate adults and illiterate minors, and he never asked for any authority or direction from Washington or anywhere else, and he did a world of good in that kind of work, and his memory is cherished by all the old settlers of that community.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no doubt the gentleman's statement is true; but is that any reason why the Federal Government ought not to lend its aid?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is every reason why the Federal Government does not need to give any aid in that direction, because it is not necessary. I am surprised that a follower of Thomas Jefferson would concede the necessity of the Federal Government engaging in the teaching of a man how to read and write down in Bull Creek township in his district.

Mr. BARKLEY. My district has no Bull Creek township.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, Durham Township.

Mr. BARKLEY. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] reminds me that that is in his district.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just getting back to the particular purpose of this bill here, I think the gentleman from Kansas probably stated his position a little more strongly than he intended to when he said he was not in favor of continuing the Bureau of Education.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I said if I were reorganizing the Government, the Bureau of Education is one of the things I would eliminate.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that in view of the fact that illiteracy ranges from 1.4 per cent to 16.4 per cent in various States—that is, from 14 in a thousand in some States to 164 in a thousand in others—does not the gentleman think it is entirely proper for the Congress of the United States to authorize the Commissioner of Education to study this question and report his findings or suggestions for a method of eliminating that condition?

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the necessity for further findings? The gentleman from Michigan has just given us the percentage of illiteracy. That is already known. Every State in the Union knows just what its percentage of illiteracy is to-day.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Would it not be a good idea for us to disseminate the information and to inquire why the percentage of illiteracy is so much greater in one State than in another?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The reason is so simple that it does not require the Commissioner of Education or anybody else to give it. The reason is because the people have not gone to school or otherwise acquired that learning.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They certainly have not acquired it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the reason for it. I do not believe it is necessary to teach school from Washington.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is absolutely true. But has the matter of education no place in the Federal Government? Is not the matter of education a paramount national question in this country?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Undoubtedly it is one of the greatest questions. Our Government, our interests, our civilization rest upon it. But it should come from the school district up. It should not go from the Federal authority down.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; but there are many questions with which one central authority can deal, upon which it can report better than 48 authorities. Now, is education excluded from that general range of subjects?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We have done fairly well with our system of education from the district school so far.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have sometimes thought——

Mr. CAMPBELL. The fact is, I am getting quite as much out of this discussion as are the gentlemen who are interrogating me. I am learning here, as everybody here is learning, that the minds of men have changed. Even the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] joins the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] in the assumption that you can teach school better from Washington than you can from school district 58, which is an erroneous assumption which is leading the Government of the United States into activities that were never contemplated by its founders.

Mr. BARKLEY. How does the gentleman explain the fact that in the 50 or 75 or 100 years during which the various States have been wrestling with this problem, illiteracy has not been eliminated either by the local or national authorities?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There are some townships in which there is not a single illiterate. If one township can reach that result, another can. The percentage of illiteracy is very low in the State of Kansas. That is a new State. We started about 60 years ago without a thing except energy, ambition, and a high standard of citizenship. To-day we have a great State, with a percentage of illiteracy among the lowest of any of the States in the Union. Why can not Kentucky do the thing that has been done in Kansas? It can do it if it will.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is doing it now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is doing it now, without any help from the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. We are not asking assistance for Kentucky; but if by reason of any investigation which the National Government makes it is able to give us ideas which will help us to do it ourselves, that is a good thing.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The only idea you need in Kentucky is that it is a good thing to know how to read and write; and you can get a teacher in any township in that State, I take it, who can teach his neighbor and his neighbor's children to read and write.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does not the gentleman from Kansas think that he ought to add to that the fact that the National Government, in the case of Oklahoma, gave a gratuity in the way of land?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not object to that.

Mr. MURDOCK. That was Federal aid to education of a very beneficial kind.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a very different thing from controlling education from Washington. That does not create a bureau or a commission to direct the affairs of a local community. The Federal Government had large areas of Government land and wisely gave certain townships for school purposes. In the case of Oklahoma we could not give these sections of lands for school purposes, and therefore we made the donation in money outright, but that is a very different proposition from directing education by a Government commission.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will.

Mr. MOORE. Assuming, as reported, that the census shows that there are 5,500,000 people above the age of 10 years in the United States who can not read or write, and assuming that the various States will not look after the education of these 5,500,000 people, what are we to do with them?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not assuming, nor am I willing to assume, that the people of any school district will refuse to do their duty with regard to education of the people of that district.

Mr. MOORE. But the report says that there are 5,500,000 illiterates in the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; scattered throughout the United States. There are more than that number who have not a real good education or much learning.

Mr. MOORE. The percentage of illiteracy in Kansas is extremely small. Grant that. Assuming that some other State has a very large percentage and that that State has not paid very careful attention to the education of its people. Would the gentleman deny such Federal oversight and consideration as might be granted the people of that State who have not been cared for by their own State?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There are some States in which, I presume, the babies and children are improperly spanked, but I would not be in favor of establishing a bureau for the purpose of regulating the spanking of children.

Mr. MOORE. Suppose that in one State all the roads have been nicely and well constructed, and that they are all "peacock alleys," like those that were described yesterday, and in another State they have no good roads, or very few, because the State has been unable to build them; would the gentleman approve of a law enacted by Congress giving Federal aid to the State that was unable to build its own roads, whereas another State had already provided roads for itself?

Mr. CAMPBELL. When I was being examined orally for admission to the bar I was examined by a lot of lawyers who were in the midst of the trial of a closely contested lawsuit. I was asked questions that led me to reverse the decisions of the court during the progress of a trial covering a period of about three weeks. Finally the court came to my rescue and said, "This court does not recognize an applicant for admission to the bar as a supreme court with authority to reverse its decisions." I had reversed the decisions of the court a number of times. I do not propose now to settle controversies that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been engaged in on this floor.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the gentleman for his explicit answer to my question about good roads. Will he answer another question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. Suppose in a series of States they were sorely afflicted with an ailment which we know throughout the United States as the boll weevil, and in a large number of other States we did not have any such ailment and never would be likely to have it. Would the gentleman approve of a Federal provision to aid those States which have the boll weevil, the appropriation coming from all the States, including those that do not have and are not likely to have the boll weevil?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not serious in propounding that question. There is this distinction between the Federal appropriation for the suppression of the boll weevil and a Federal appropriation for the direction and teaching of illiterates how to read and write. It is well known now how to teach an individual to read and write. It is not well known to everyone how to suppress the boll weevil. The necessity for suppressing the boll weevil is imminent, and I have for that reason voted for appropriations to suppress it.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will.

Mr. POU. I would like to follow up the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If one State was so unfortunate as to have a large amount of property destroyed by a flood and no other State in the Union had such flood, does the gentleman think it would be fair and right to take the money contributed by all the States and devote it to the relief of the distressed condition of the people who suffered by the flood?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We have recognized in recent years great calamities of that kind and have given Federal aid.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this bill be now closed.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I would like a few minutes.

Mr. COX. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House long. I merely want to reenforce what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said in his argument. There are evidently many Members here who were not in when he made his speech, and I think many of the suggestions he made are well worth repeating. I think we ought to look at this bill and analyze it and see what we are doing in voting on a matter that, in my opinion, is very important.

I am not particularly opposed to the first part of the bill, although I am inclined to think that the Commissioner of Education now has authority under the law to make an investigation and report under the first part of the bill. It says:

That the Commissioner of Education shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, investigate illiteracy among the adult population of the United States, and the means by which this illiteracy may be eliminated or reduced, and report to Congress, through the Secretary of the Interior, the results of his investigations.

If the bill only went that far and no farther, I would see no particular objection to it, unless it be that the commissioner now has that authority, and I am of opinion that he has. But the committee goes further than that and says:

And he is hereby authorized, upon request or invitation—

Mark you, "upon request or invitation." It does not say upon whose request; it does not say upon whose invitation. It may be the invitation of the community; it may be the invitation of the county; it may be the invitation of the State, but it does not say that. It may be upon the request or invitation of any individual in a community.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. The bill does not require the commissioner to go. It does not compel him to go. It simply authorizes him to exercise that right.

Mr. HARRISON. It does not compel the Commissioner of Education to go; certainly not. The committee would not be so foolish as to say he had to go, but it clothes him with authority and jurisdiction, when invitation or request comes to him, to go, no matter if that invitation be from a foreigner who can not speak a word of English or from a negro who can not speak a word of English or anyone else. He may go, and this clothes him with that authority, no matter if there are ninety-nine people out of every hundred in the particular community that do not want the Commissioner of Education to go there and do this particular work, no matter what objection there might be by a majority of people in a particular locality to his doing this work. If he gets a request or an invitation from one individual, he can go there and under this bill do that particular work, and to that extent, I submit to the committee, this bill interferes with local affairs and interferes with the rights of the States.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Is there any objection to his going, even though he were not invited? Could he not go?

Mr. HARRISON. If he has the authority now, I do not see any use in passing the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman object, even on his interpretation of the bill, to the Commissioner of Education sending somebody to advise and assist and cooperate with the work of education?

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to the Commissioner of Education getting up data on the question of illiteracy, for I remember that some time ago the Commissioner of Corporations got up data under a resolution that passed this House about cotton exchanges in this country. That work was most valuable. The information was such as will do any Member of the House good to read. The information obtained was valuable, and if this bill went no further than that resolution went in the case of the cotton exchanges, in the matter of getting data about illiterates, I would not oppose the proposition, because I think probably it would do some good. He would get up information and data for the various localities to work on. They are the ones that ought to do this work, and not the Federal Government.

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the gentleman think, if plans had been established that were a success in one State and those in another State desired to be advised regarding how those plans could be carried out, that the Central Government might assist in that without interference with the local authorities?

Mr. HARRISON. But the bill is not so drawn.

Mr. TOWNER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I think it is. It is for the purpose only of advising and cooperating in devising plans for putting these matters into operation. It is not to do it, as the gentleman seems to assume.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand what the gentleman's ideas are. The difficulty is that you clothe this Congress in the future with power under the law to pass appropriations to supplement the work of the various localities in eradicating illiteracy.

Mr. TOWNER. No more than was done in the case the gentleman mentioned. There we authorize an appropriation of money for the purpose of collecting data with regard to cotton exchanges.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that, for there is a great deal of difference.

Mr. TOWNER. I think there is a difference myself, but in both cases there was an appropriation of money from the General Treasury to assist and advise those that were within a State, and it seems to me that we can not appropriate money at all for the benefit of people unless it goes somewhere, in some way, to the people of some State.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to tell the gentleman the difference between the two resolutions. Under one resolution the data was procured, with respect to cotton exchanges of this country, under an appropriation to get up that work, and after the Commissioner of Corporations had made his report that finished the law; there was no law for any future legislation on that, though I wish there were; but there is none. Under this bill you not only provide for getting up data and eliminating illiteracy among the adults, but you place a law on the statute books that will give jurisdiction to future Congresses to appropriate money to supplement the work of the States along this particualr line.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the gentleman's idea of the bill as to the original purpose of creating the Bureau of Education, if it was not anticipated that in some way the bureau would be of some assistance to the States in solving the problem of education?

Mr. HARRISON. May I answer the gentleman by asking him a question? Does the gentleman think that we ought to appropriate money to go to the various localities for the education of the children in those localities?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not. I do not believe we ought to do that; but I do not understand that this bill attempts to do that.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think it gives groundwork for legislation in the future for that purpose?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me read to the gentleman one part of a section and get his views as to what it does mean. Speaking of the Commissioner of Education—

> And he is hereby authorized, upon request or invitation, to advise and cooperate with school officials, teachers, and others in devising and putting into operation such plans as will give to illiterate men and women and to those of meager education an opportunity to learn to read and write and to supplement and extend their education.

If that means anything, it means just what I say.

Mr. BARKLEY. Now, I think there is a very serious difference of interpretation between the gentleman from Mississippi and myself. Now I will undertake to answer his question. My interpretation of that means simply that the Commissioner of Education shall upon request of any education officer of any State, county, or community advise and cooperate with such officials, teachers, and so forth, in devising—that is, he shall advise with them in devising—and putting into operation such a system. Now, that does not mean the commissioner shall put in operation, but that he shall take advantage of the facts he may obtain in these investigations and advise with the local men as to how they shall devise a method and put it into operation.

Mr. HARRISON. That may have been the intention of the committee, but the wording of the bill does not so state at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the next page, to supplement and extend their education does not have reference to the Commissioner of Education, but it has reference to aiding the individual in supplementing and adding to his education. As I interpret the bill, I may be mistaken, that is the idea which I get from a reading of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I am inclined to think the committee, when it drafted the bill, only intended that the Commissioner of Education was to cooperate with the various localities, get up this information, and then advise with them and help them along without the Federal Government's encroachment upon the right of these particular communities, but the wording of the bill does not so state. It states that they may go in there and put into operation this work and interfere, if the Commissioner of Education choose, with the work of the particular locality.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman, I think, still fails to get the idea. It does not say put in operation the work, it does not say put in operation the schools, but it says put in operation the plans for carrying them out.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman is making a forced construction, and I would like to ask him this question: Does not the gentleman think seriously, if he is in favor of assisting in this line of education work, that any such difficulty can be easily cured by amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the gentleman can so cure the bill that I can support it.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly there is no objection on the part of the committee to guard against any possible idea such as the gentleman suggests is put in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the gentleman I am in favor of a bill that will aid the various communities in this country to do the work for themselves, but I will never be in favor of appropriating money here to educate the people and children in the various localities, for I think that is a function that ought to be exercised by the locality for itself and by the various States of this Nation.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. Does not the gentleman think that if this work is going to be done at all that the Government ought to do it and ought not to make it a fund of mendicancy and beggary by asking for donations?

Mr. HARRISON. I was just going to get to that point in discussing the second section of this bill. The second section says:

> That in carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use at his discretion for the employment of field and clerical services.

I do not know whether that comes under the civil service or not, but I presume and take it that the Commissioner of Education, if some individual should donate $10,000 or $100,000, would not be influenced in the appointment of these men to formulate these plans and appoint these men on his or their recommendation. I assume that the Commissioner of Education would not do that, but some day you might get some Commissioner of Education in office who could be influenced by contributions or by men who would donate large sums of money, and then the commissioner might appoint some men that this particular donor requested him, and the ideas of education and thought of this donor might be formulated into the plan of education by the men he had appointed.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I will.

Mr. POU. The gentleman has now reached the point in the bill which, to my mind, constitutes the only real objectionable feature. Does not the gentleman think that the possible objection could be cured by amendment, say, after the word "donations," in line 10, section 2, by adding the words "without any conditions or limitations whatever"?

Mr. HARRISON. Well, that would cure it so far as that is concerned and as far as the amendment goes, but I would be opposed to the proposition because my opposition to it would go further than that. I am opposed to the Federal Government being a mendicant to anybody who might desire to contribute money to this work. If it is a worthy proposition, if we are to go into it, I think this Government is rich enough to do it without any donation made from any of the rich people of this country.

Mr. POU. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to say that I believe there is a very serious objection that might be lurking in the provisions of this bill in having men give large sums of money, and hitching onto those amounts of money conditions or limitations to carry out some ulterior purpose that the donor might have in mind. I think it would be well to guard against that.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I had not considered this bill myself at all until I heard it called up here. Has the gentleman thought of how large a force the Commissioner of Education would require, if funds should come in and he would undertake to investigate the various localities in this great Republic of ours, to adequately perform that service?

Mr. HARRISON. I imagine it would be a very large force.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Before the gentleman goes on with his discussion of section 2, I wanted to ask him what possible contributions to the general fund of information in regard to education in counties any Federal force could obtain that is not already perfectly well known to the educational forces employed in the counties now? For instance, each of us is familiar with the conditions in his own county. In my county, of course, there is a board of education, and I suppose there is one in most counties in the United States. There is a very large staff of principals of schools, there is a very large staff of teachers, and the principals of the schools are supplied with secretaries. Now, with such machinery as that I can not conceive of a Federal force going into that county and doing anything else than they already know, instead of teaching them what is necessary to be done. What could this force do any better than can be done already?

Mr. HARRISON. I will confess I am not sufficiently in the confidence of the Commissioner of Education to know what advantages he expects to get by this bill. I agree with the gentleman that they can get very little information other than is already procured.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Suppose the Commissioner of Education located his headquarters here. If some community out in Oregon needed to be investigated with reference to a better method of educating its people, somebody would have to be sent from here there, and it would take 4 days to go and 4 days to come back and 2 days in which to investigate, which would be 10 days for that neighborhood. I wondered if that was carried out adequately—and, of course, we would not undertake anything here that was not going to be adequately carried out—if they sent a man east, and another man west, and another north, and another south to seek for these illiterate people and bring them in, would it not entail a very large expense to administer it?

Mr. HARRISON. I think so.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. And if that is true, ought we not to have it sufficiently equipped both with men and money to adequately administer it, or else let it alone?

Mr. HARRISON. I think so.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman think it would be necessary to send a person out, as he says, to these communitites?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If the gentleman asks me if I think it would be necessary, I will say no, because in every community to which he would go there would be already educational men there who would know better what ought to be done in that community than anybody who would be sent from here could find out.

Mr. TOWNER. Those instances, I think, would not be at all numerous, I think the gentleman will agree.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I believe that in ninety-nine townships out of one hundred there is somebody there who knows better what would develop the literacy in that neighborhood than any man sent from here could find out.

Mr. TOWNER. In any event the assistance that could be rendered, either directly or indirectly, by the General Government regarding the experience of the States and methods used certainly might be very helpful.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. All of this goes on an assumption that prevails here in this Capitol that I think ought to be frowned down—and I beg the pardon of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] for taking so much time—which is this, that a Federal functionary immediately upon his appointment to office takes upon himself a wisdom superior to what any officer in any State could possible have.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman if any such assumption exists I do not know of it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. We see it here every day.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] whether he does not think that sometimes these teachers or these educators in various sections would be very much assisted by ideas from without? Sometimes they are on the grind themselves to such an extent that they do not have an opportunity to get around.

Mr. HARRISON. I certainly do.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to state an instance——

Mr. HARRISON. I agree with the gentleman, but he might convince me he was wrong if he should continue. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. No. I want to state an instance. Some time ago I wanted an official promoted, and I made the argument that this official was acquainted with the business of that office and knew all about it, and, therefore, ought to be promoted. Against that argument I was told this: That probably he had been at work there so steadily that he had not been able to get any ideas from the outside, and it might be able to bring a man in who could give him some ideas. I would like to know if the gentleman does not think that might be possible?

Mr. HARRISON. In the first place, the gentleman is talking now about the education of boys and girls under the age of 21. This bill, of course, applies to adults altogether.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. It does not apply to minors. I agree with the gentleman that good ideas and new ideas are often transmitted by reports and otherwise to the teacher and are of much benefit to them; and in the beginning of my remarks I said that, so far as the first part of this bill is concerned, I had no objection to it. I believe that the bureau is now getting out information that aids the teacher in the performance of his work, and the States also are doing that.

But, getting back to the second section of the bill, I am opposed to the Federal Government going into partnership with men who may have made their money in ways that have not been just, although sometimes within the pale of the law, and the acceptance by the Government of this money. There are cases that I can imagine where these contributions might influence the appointment of certain persons, who you propose shall go around and get up the data and devise the means whereby this work should be put into operation. I say that if the Government is going out to do this work we certainly ought to leave out that provision of allowing the Commissioner of Education the power to accept donations from these various people.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DIES. I would like to ask my friend from Mississippi if he does not believe that if the Federal Government begins, even in a small way, to take over education, the effect of it will be to injure the cause of education in the States? That is to say, will not the States begin to relax their own activities, and more and more want to place the burden upon the Federal Government, as they have done in a great many other instances?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. I believe the gentleman is correct. I think it is wrong for the Federal Government to appropriate money for education in the States.

The point was well put by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] in a question asked by him of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. The gentleman from Michigan is in favor of this legislation. He asked this question of the gentleman from Kansas: "Conceding that certain localities are not educating the children, do not you think that the Federal Government ought to demand that it be done?" Do the gentlemen who are in favor of this legislation believe that because we have jurisdiction, because we can pass this legislation, we can say to the locality, "You have got to educate your children"? Do you think you can enforce education upon the people in the counties and in the States, and usurp the powers of the States, and enforce in their stead the powers of the Federal Government?

I submit that is going too far. But that was in the mind of the gentleman from Michigan, and it is in the minds of many others who are in favor of this legislation and other similar legislation.

Let me tell you, gentlemen, that down in my country the boy or the girl who does not get an education before reaching the age of 21, in the first place, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, will never amount to anything, and after he becomes 21 years of age, if he wants an education, he is going to get it, and no power on earth can keep him from getting it. He does not have to be encouraged by the Federal Government to do it, and he will not be encouraged by this business of trying to eliminate illiteracy among the adults in this country. What class will it help? It will help the illiterate foreigner who can not read and write. As was suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr.

DIES], if you want to remedy that situation of illiteracy, bring influence to bear on the Senate to report out the bill that we passed here a couple of weeks ago, and bring influence to bear on the President of the United States, when that legislation comes to him, so that he will sign the bill. Then you will directly secure the result that you are now proposing to secure by disarranging the relations between the Federal Government and the States and tearing up by the roots the rights of the States. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I want to ask the gentleman if he would support this bill provided the bill were amended by cutting out the words in line 11 of page 1, "putting into operation," and by eliminating, in line 9, after the word "Congress," all the words following?

Mr. HARRISON. I think it would help the bill a great deal, and I am inclined to think it would almost cure all the defects I see in the bill. I think that would eliminate the greatest evils that lurk in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I want to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman make a distinction between the aid that the Government gives in agriculture and that which it might give in an educational line? For instance, a few years ago hog cholera broke out in my herd of swine, and I telegraphed the Secretary of Agriculture, and the department here sent a man to my farm to assist the local State veterinarian in curing that disease. Now, is not that an absolute parallel with the assistance that the Commissioner of Education might give in directing and devising methods that he is in possession of, and that the local authorities would not be in possession of, in assisting in the elimination of this great national evil of illiteracy?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, I do not think it is a parallel case. In the first place, it could not grow to the magnitude that education would grow to. Education is inherently a function that ought to be exercised by the smallest units in the country, and is being justly and magnificently taken care of by them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The gentleman does not think it would interfere with that?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not believe they would do it; but I say they could do it; and I will never sanction by my vote a measure that will vest that power in the Federal Government.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not a fact that the general average in the reduction of illiteracy throughout the United States in the last 10 years was over 10 per cent, and does not the gentleman think that is getting on pretty well under the present system?

Mr. HARRISON. I expect the gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. DIES I would like to know of my friend from Mississippi whether he thinks if we would attempt to do this, and would appoint all these employees under the civil service, and they would go out to elevate the condition of these hundreds of thousands of illiterates, when they got old and could not go out and help the illiterates any more they would want a pension, to be paid for by these same illiterates? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. I think so. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I think the reporting of this bill has served a useful purpose. I am informed that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has knelt for many years an abject devotee at the shrine of Alexander Hamilton; and if the reporting of this bill has served to cause him to view with a friendly regard the beauties of the doctrine of State rights, the labors of the committee have not been in vain.

This bill is also a partial fulfillment of an old prophecy which said it should come to pass that the young men should see visions and the old men should dream dreams. The bill is a beautiful vision of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HUGHES], its author. The report of the committee is a very beautiful dream; but I think that an analysis of the bill will show that there is nothing in it but a dream. As a matter of fact, the object of the bill, as set out, is to undertake to discover some unknown plan by which you can decrease illiteracy among the adults of this country. In the report of the committee they advise you that they have already discovered this plan; that some good lady who is a county superintendent down in Kentucky has already discovered it, and the report of the committee goes on to show that if you will just simply pass this bill and let them realize their dream, before the next census comes around they will have the illiteracy of this country all wiped out. Then, why this bill?

It is a very beautiful dream, but I do not think there is anything to it. It discloses the fact that a lady out in Kentucky has discovered a plan by which you may correct the evil of which you complain. She is a county superintendent under a State school system. I want to say that I have some pride in the fact that I taught school for a while. I finally discovered that I was not of any very great use to my fellow men in that particular field of endeavor, and I quit it and took up something else for which I felt I was better fitted and, incidentally, more remunerative.

I think all of you who have taught school will recognize the fact that the only way to wipe out illiteracy is to wipe it out by teaching the illiterates. You do not need any plan. It is not any hidden secret to be discovered by any Federal agency going out and making what they are pleased to call these Federal "surveys." I do not know what they mean by that expression. But I will say it does not take any Federal "survey" to go out and discover what is the cause of illiteracy, or how it may be removed. Down on the banks of Bear Creek, where I live, in Bear Creek Township, our trouble is not to get some plan. Our trouble is the lack of funds, and that is the trouble all over this country. It is not the lack of a plan. It is the lack of money in most of the rural districts where you complain of illiteracy.

I want to tell you another thing, gentlemen. There is not one-half the illiteracy in this country that you are told there is by the last Federal census. You can not absolutely rely upon these census figures as to illiteracy.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WINGO. With pleasure.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose all the States of the Union have compulsory education laws, have they not?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know as to that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is one trouble. They have not.

Mr. MADDEN. If they have compulsory education laws, then a method of overcoming the difficulty that is sought to be corrected by this bill would be to enforce those laws, would it not?

Mr. WINGO. I was coming to that. But the chief trouble is the lack of funds, as every school-teacher knows who has had practical experience.

The next difficulty is that where you have the funds you can not get the boys and girls to go to school. That is a problem that can not be reached by this bill. The only way you can reach adult illiteracy is in the way pointed out by this lady in Kentucky. I do not think it is going to take a Federal "survey," or groups of Federal officials to go out and get county superintendents to adopt the plan of Mrs. Stewart.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman speaks about the necessity for money, and he says that no plan could be carried out without money. Does the gentleman know that there was not one dollar appropriated for the carrying out of the work which was done under the direction of Mrs. Stewart in Kentucky, but that it was entirely voluntary?

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman also know the fact that they are asking over 100 per cent increase in the estimates for the Bureau of Education, on the ground that money is absolutely necessary to do anything?

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky know of any better service to which the money could be put?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do, as to some of the uses that it has been put to; and I know that when a public official writes to the different heads of educational institutions all over the country, to build a back fire on Congress, he is properly subject to censure instead of praise, and that is what has happened in regard to the present Commissioner of Education.

Mr. TOWNER. That is an entirely different matter.

Mr. WINGO. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to continue the line of argument which I was pursuing, but in passing I will notice the suggestion made by my friend from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. He asked me if I did not know that there was no money at all expended by the friends of Mrs. Stewart and her coworkers. I believe that was the gentleman's question. That may be true, but there you had an idealistic proposition. That was the work of an idealist. You are not going to stimulate idealism in this country by Federal bureaus. I will tell you what you will stimulate. You will have about the same results under the second section of this bill that you have in some of your forest reserves. Idealistically it is a pretty thing for us to try, but you will find employees going out, not trying to be of practical benefit to the adult illiterates of this country, but you will find that under that provision there the clerical force will be filled up with lame ducks and hangers-on of politicians.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman digress from his line of argument long enough to tell us the method which is adopted whereby Members of Congress can get any of these jobs?

Mr. WINGO. No; I was just coming to that. I do not want to get too far away from my main proposition, which is that the trouble with education in most of the States and in the communities where they complain of illiteracy is a lack of funds. That is a problem that goes to the maintenance of your schools for the education of children; but the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has hit the nail on the head when he says that a man who has grown up to manhood's estate without learning to read or write will learn to read and write if he really wants to. He will find in every community some public-spirited person like Mrs. Stewart who will aid him in the effort to acquire that knowledge. I want to say that my observation of school-teachers has been that they are always ready to help the unfortunate classes who are sought to be reached by this bill. There is not a country-school teacher in the States of Iowa, Alabama, Georgia, or anywhere else who is not willing to help the man or woman who wants to learn to read and write. Such a person can always find a school-teacher who will be glad to give him tuition and assistance.

I do not believe that any Federal bureau will ever stimulate the ambition in the breasts of the unfortunate people that do not know how to read and write. Now, coming to the question of my good friend from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who wants to know how to locate the jobs and to get them, I want to say that if I knew I would not tell him until after I took care of my constituents. [Laughter.] So far I have not been able to locate one. You have so many commissions and bureaus that I have come to the conclusion that I shall be compelled to serve 10 years in this House before I have made the personal acquaintance of the heads of the different bureaus and commissions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the gentleman urging that so that his constituents will keep him here that long?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; I am looking for all these reasons and storing them away, as will my friend from Kentucky, I have no doubt.

Now, what you are going to do is to build up more machinery. What will be the result? The result will be, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] called attention, that you will have these people on our backs saying you must give more appropriations because we have increased the office force and the lines of activity; you want to stamp out illiteracy, and if you are in earnest we must have more appropriations. You know how it is going to be, because that will be the practical result.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to another feature of the bill, and that is, under this bill you authorize the bureau or the commissioner to go into these communities and establish a school if you can get Andrew Carnegie to say he wants it down there and will give $5,000 to establish it. I think there has been more harm done to education in the South by outsiders butting in and telling us how to educate our people than anything else that has occurred. You do not want it in New York, you do not want it in New Jersey, you do not want it in Georgia or Alabama. If you do that, you are doing more harm to the ideal that you hold up before us than you will do it good.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am unable to bring myself to the construction of the bill stated by the gentleman from Arkansas when he says that the Commissioner of Education, by reason of its terms, could go into Bear Creek Township in his district and establish a school. My reading of this bill only gives the Commissioner of Education the right to advise with the local authorities in devising methods whereby they shall establish schools of this kind to facilitate education.

Mr. WINGO. I think my good friend from Kentucky is wrong. The bill says that he is authorized to advise and cooperate with school officials, teachers, and others in devising and putting into operation such plan. How are you going to put into operation a plan? Suppose the plan is this: Andrew Carnegie says, "I will finance the placing of schools in every county in Kentucky or Arkansas where these conditions exist if you will furnish teachers for it." That would be a plan, and under this bill the Commissioner of Education would be authorized to put that plan into operation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would that interfere with any State or county system of schools?

Mr. WINGO. It certainly would, and my good friend knows that it would. The gentleman well knows that if any Federal commission or agent should come into a township in Kentucky and undertake to establish a Federal school it would interfere with the temperament of the community.

Mr. BARKLEY. He is not undertaking to establish a Federal school; but suppose Mr. Carnegie wants to donate money to a private institution for education, he has a right to do it now, has he not?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman from Arkansas think that this bill contemplates that the Commissioner of Education shall canvass over the United States to get funds, or is it merely to accept funds that are offered him for the purpose of facilitating this scheme?

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman asked me a question, and I will tell him what I think is the practical operation of it. I think that human nature is the same, whether it be a Commissioner of Education or a Member of Congress. I think that they will want to make a big showing, so as to get big appropriations. They will try to put up propositions to you that will show that they need large appropriations to support them. Now, Mr. Carnegie, or some other philanthropist who is endeavoring to make physical connection with a legalized guaranty upon future fame, would undertake to establish these schools, and later on you would have a representation to us that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is familiar with—they would come along and say that the local aid had failed, donations had failed; you have a fine property, a fine institution, and it would be a shame to allow it to be lost; that if we would make the appropriation to cover the incumbrance that is upon it and the running of it we would get a fine property. I think that would be the result of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. With pleasure.

Mr. FITZGERALD Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a few letters sent to me as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations from educational institutions throughout the United States urging me to favor all of the items for the Bureau of Education for the next fiscal year. These estimates are 200 per cent more or three times as great as the appropriation for the current year.

The Commissioner of Education has admitted before the Committee on Appropriations that these letters and this propaganda are the result of communications sent out from the Bureau of Education to all of these institutions. And not only that, but the same statement has been published in various papers throughout the country.

If the gentleman will permit me to show the insidious manner in which the work is done, I desire to say that this is a part of a communication sent out:

This will probably be considered by the Appropriations Committee of the House before January 20. The names of the members of the committee are given below. Those starred are members of the subcommittee on the legislative appropriation bill, in which the bureau's estimates are included.

Then is appended a list of the Committee on Appropriations, beginning with myself, and if the gentleman will permit me, I shall read one letter to show the character of those received. This letter is from the president of a university. I shall not read the name, because I believe that I have received one from the president of almost every State institution.

When in Washington recently I had some business with the Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior. During a conversation with the Commissioner of Education he outlined to me what new work the bureau was undertaking, work for which it was necessary that increased appropriations be made to his department. The last appropriation for his department amounted to $89,900. He has estimated that to do the work which is much needed for his department it will require an additional $178,700, making a total for the Bureau of Education for the next year of $268,600. The work that the commissioner has planned is one that urgently needs to be done. I venture to express the hope that your committee will find it possible to increase these appropriations to somewhere near the amount that has been asked for.

So that this propaganda is going on throughout the country in an effort to compel Members who are attempting to determine from the information that is furnished by this bureau the extent to which its activities should be conducted. These communications are piling up for the purpose of influencing and in some instances of coercing Members to vote for appropriations regardless of the merits.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What becomes of the campaign pledges about economy in that instance?

Mr. MANN. Oh, they have been lost a long while ago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What have?

Mr. MANN. Your campaign pledges about economy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not discussing them. I am more vitally interested in this increasing, persistent movement to enlist the Federal Government in every activity of government that should be confined to localities and to States. It is a movement which, if continued and not stopped, means an entire change in our system of government, a practical subordination of State and local governments, if not the elimination of local self-government in this country, and the building up of a great Federal centralized Government, which I believe is the greatest menace which confronts the country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What do we now appropriate to maintain the Bureau of the Commissioner of Education?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Eighty-nine thousand nine hundred dollars.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And that is all, then, that the United States Government does in the way of education?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; it is not. Nearly every department of the Government is engaged in educational work of one kind or another. The greatest department of education, the greatest work in education by the Federal Government is done by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I should think that is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In 1867 Congress created a Department of Education. The following year it amended the law and changed it to the Bureau of Education, because within one year after the law was enacted the danger was seen of the Federal Government attempting to set itself up to control the education of the people of the country. Congress changed the law inside of a year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am very much interested in the reply of the gentleman. I just wanted to know how much was appropriated for this particular bureau. The gentleman says it is a bureau?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a bureau; yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My inquiry was addressed for this reason, that the House might consider by comparison what little support the Educational Bureau of this Nation receives from the Federal Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that the action of Congress may be influenced somewhat by the character of the work done by the Bureau of Education.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman contend that this bill appropriates one cent?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. This bill has been too shrewdly drawn to appropriate money. This is the camel's head; and if this bill be enacted into law the camel will be under the tent next year. I have in my hand——

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to finish the question? The gentleman's experience is much greater than mine, but in the process of legislation here is it not a fact that this question of the camel's head so frequently arises that the gentleman and myself, and everyone who serves in the House, will have to decide for himself whether he will vote against a measure because subsequent appropriations may arise? Must we not act upon the merits of the particular pending measure rather than be controlled now as to some subsequent possibility?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SHERLEY. Now is the cutting time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But that is a mere question of opinion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My experience is that once a service is authorized and appropriations are made for it those who are particularly interested in the service will organize in order to get the appropriations, and the other Members are indifferent. I had some experience in that regard as recently as yesterday, while in charge of an appropriation bill on the floor of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I have here one of the bulletins issued by the Bureau of Education. It is Bulletin No. 49, 1913, and is entitled "The Farragut School," a Tennessee county high school. If any gentleman will take this pamphlet and examine it and tell me in what way it should be changed, if it were prepared as a prospectus to advertise this particular high school, I should be very glad to have him point it out. Yet it is prepared by the Bureau of Education. It is printed and circulated at the expense of the Government of the United States, and it is one of the things that we are supposed to see merit in, as coming from this bureau. It tells of excellent work done by the Tennessee high school. So that no gentleman will be offended, let me say it is conducting its work in a satisfactory manner. But this bulletin is practically a prospectus, prepared and issued by the Bureau of Education. Here is part of the description of the school contained in the pamphlet:

> On the school grounds is located a cottage for the principal, the use of which is given to him rent free. The building is plain and simple, but well arranged and adequate for the purpose for which it was built. It is equipped with a complete bathroom, private toilet for servant, and a "cool room," with concrete sink, through which water is kept running in warm weather. This serves as a refrigerator. The cost of this cottage was very small, as the main part of the cottage consists of one of the abandoned schoolhouses of the district, moved here and remodeled.
> At the junction of the Kingston Pike and the Concord Pike, at the corner of the school grounds, a concrete water box for horses and a public drinking fountain, with concrete bowl and base, for people have been erected. The fountain has proved to be of great convenience, not only to the community but also to travelers on the pike. The money for the water box and fountain was subscribed by the pupils, teachers, and patrons of the school. Every pupil subscribed, and has therefore a feeling of ownership. On the water box, in brass letters, are these words: "Erected by the Farragut School and community, 1910." On the fountain are the words: "Farragut drinking fountain."

There is more to the same effect. Does anybody believe that the funds of the Federal Government should be used in carrying such information about a particular high school at any place in the country, put in the form of an attractive bulletin, with photographs and illustrations, and circulated at the expense of the Government in order to advertise this school? I have another bulletin——

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. ASWELL. Does not the gentleman know this represents a type of high school and illustrates a model that is intended to be distributed throughout the country, so that other high-school communities could have an ideal before them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. All this does is to point out the fact that the Farragut High School in Tennessee——

Mr. ASWELL. Is a model school.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has taken some of its land and had it cultivated by its pupils for the purpose of instructing them in agriculture, and also points out that a house that has been abandoned for school purposes was remodeled as a home for the principal, and that such a remodeled house could be utilized for such purpose.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield in the gentleman's time to enable me to ask him a question? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. MANN. Does not the information go further than the gentleman states? Does it not give to the world the startling information that if you will erect a drinking trough or fountain on a side of the pike that some people will use it in hot weather?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have another bulletin, entitled "Agricultural and rural life day," and it contains a number of different selections from standard English and American authors. The one which attracted my attention particularly——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not inject any poetry into my remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. In this bulletin, in part 4, under "Our domestic animals," is the following:

THE CALF PATH.

A calf walked home as good calves should,
But made a trail all bent askew—

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, what did I tell you? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD (reading):

A crooked trail, as all calves do.
Since then 300 years have fled,
And I infer the calf is dead.
But still he left behind his trail,
And thereby hangs my mortal tale.

The trail was taken up next day
By a lone dog that passed that way,
And then a wise bellwether sheep
Pursued the trail o'er vale and steep;
And drew the flock behind him, too,
As good bellwethers always do.
And from that day, o'er hill and glade
Through those old woods a path was made.

And many men wound in and out,
And dodged and turned and bent about,
And uttered words of righteous wrath
Because 'twas such a crooked path;
But still they followed—do not laugh—
The first migrations of that calf,
And through the winding woodway stalked,
Because he wobbled when he walked.

I will not take up more of the time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] in reading it——

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any more of the poetry?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In another portion of the article, under the heading "Men influential in improving agriculture"——

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman explain what the purpose of that is? What is the name of the publication from which the gentleman has been reading?

Mr. FITZGERALD. "Agriculture and rural life day; material for its observance," and the commissioner himself admitted it was a mistake to put in that "Calf path" poem in this publication when I called his attention to it. Now, how much information does it furnish to anybody interested in a rural school?

Mr. ASWELL. I want to ask the gentleman in good faith, Has the gentleman ever been in a rural school?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman has been?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I spent three years in a rural school myself.

Mr. ASWELL. In a country school?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I hope I am a credit to them. I read:

HORACE GREELEY (1811–1872).

As the first great editor of a daily paper printed for the general public to open his columns to agricultural topics and to advocate better farming methods, Horace Greeley gave a great stimulus to the betterment of the farmer's condition. In addition to writing many editorials in his newspaper, the New York Tribune, on country life, Mr. Greeley founded an "agricultural department," appointing Solon Robinson as the Tribune's agricultural editor.

Is that information of a character that a Bureau of Education should collect, publish, and distribute at the expense of the Federal Government? It is not a trifling matter. Is that anything which can be said to be within the proper functions of the Federal Government? It is very interesting in some respects. I take the trouble to examine all of the publications that the various departments of the Government send to me, and I find more information regarding the work and the value of the work and the propriety of the work, many times, than I can obtain from questioning the officials.

Apologizing to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] for intruding in his time, I thought that this information might be interesting and of some value to the committee if inserted at this time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, when I took the floor, something less than an hour ago, I had an idea that I wished to present to the committee, but inadvertently I was happily diverted from the line of my thought, and I frankly confess I have forgotten what the idea was.

Mr. BARKLEY. You were talking about Bull Creek, in your district.

Mr. WINGO. No; Bull Creek is in your district. Bear Creek is in my district.

Seriously, I think this bill is bottomed on the presumption that the system of education maintained in the various States has fallen down and is a failure. I repeat it. This bill could not be adopted by anyone unless he yields and agrees to the presumption that the States are not able to maintain an efficient common-school system for the education of its citizenship. I do not believe that presumption exists. I think, especially in the light of the activities in the improvement of the common-school system mantained by the different States within the last 10 years—I say in the light of that rapid improvement in the school systems in the different States that such a presumption can not appeal to any man who is familiar with that work. And I am not ready to admit that in my State we are not able to cope with the question of the proper education of the youth or taking care of those illiterates who are adults and who may have an ambition to repair the neglect of their childhood days.

Mr. Chairman, time was when a Democrat repelled with all the vigor he could command any suggestion that tended toward Federal control of education in the States. But after having read this bill and after having listened this afternoon to the gentlemen upon this side of the aisle there springs to my lips that old expression that I have heard so often since coming to this body, "Oh, how the times have changed! How the times have changed!" [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, at least now we can see some of the extraordinary reasons that are urged why this bill should not be passed. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations comes here and tells the committee there have been letters sent out from the Commissioner of Education, and that these letters have requested the Committee on Appropriations to enlarge their appropriations for the Bureau of Education. That, in the gentleman's eyes, is a great crime.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not a crime; but what I complain of is of an official of the Government utilizing the force given to him to perform certain work to send out matter to persons for the purpose of stimulating an agitation to have his appropriations increased. That is the vice of the situation.

Mr. TOWNER. Even with the explanation of the gentleman, I fail to see where there is any very great criticism that can be brought upon the Bureau of Education if it desires its appropriations enlarged. In my judgment the appropriation that is annually given to this Bureau of Education, of $89,000, is a disgrace to this country and to this Government. [Applause.] It is less than is given by any other civilized nation in the world for similar service. Regarding the statement so often made to-day on the floor of the House that this is an extension of the powers of the Government, I want to say there never has been a bill that has been more carefully drawn for the purpose of excluding that than this bill here now. It is only that the General Government can, by having the powers given to it by the passage of this bill, aid and assist the States to more freely and fully perform their functions. That is the reason the passage of this bill is asked.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly; I will yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. If it does not enlarge the power of the bureau, what is the need of it?

Mr. TOWNER. It does enlarge the power of the bureau, but not to the extent of interference with the work of the States. It is only for the purpose of assisting in the work of the States. That is the defect of all of these arguments that have been made. Every effort on the part of the General Government to assist in the work that is common to every part of the United States is considered, when gentlemen desire to oppose it, as an interference on the part of the Government and as an undue extension of the powers of the Government that will never stop until we become an absolute autocracy and all the powers of the States will have been absorbed. There are certain things which the General Government can do that the States themselves can not do, and it is especially on the line of assisting and advising and correlating and bringing to the knowledge of one State the knowledge and experience of another that such legislation is justified.

Mr. ASWELL. Is there any difference in principle between this bill and the Lever bill?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly not; but if there is it is in favor of this bill as against an undue extension of governmental power. But, gentlemen, the House is considering now a question that receives unquestionably the approval of all the educational forces in the United States, and you can not afford to discredit it. It is very easy here to take up these things and make light of them. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has read a poem from a book that was prepared for the purpose of showing what might be done in preparing a program of exercises in rural schools. I presume the gentleman will remember the poems, that now seem silly, that were contained in the first books of our schools all over the country. These were not intended for adult consideration. They were intended for the consideration of children and for their encouragement. It is very easy to ridicule such things as that. But adult men, considering an adult question such as we have now, should not let such considerations influence them in an attempt to defeat a plan for encouraging education in this country, for wiping out illiteracy, and removing that disgrace from our land; and gentlemen will draw no credit to themselves by attempting to ridicule such efforts.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, would not the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] make some kind of a proposition now as to the length of general debate?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have asked unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] wants some time. How much does the gentleman desire?

Mr. FIELDS. Ten minutes.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY] wants 10 minutes. That makes 20 minutes.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate on this measure close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] asks unanimous consent that general debate close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FIELDS. Pending that, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending that, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to closing debate in 20 minutes, 10 minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the bill H. R. 2494 proposes to enlarge the scope of action of the Bureau of Education by giving it authority to collect statistics and facts showing the condition and progress of education in the several States and Territories, and authorizes it to diffuse such information among the States and Territories and cooperate with the States or subdivisions thereof in an effort to eliminate illiteracy from among the adult population. This movement is a great step forward in the promotion of education, and should receive the unanimous support of the membership of this House, which would be approved by the citizenship throughout the length and breadth of this land, because its enactment would result in a revival of educational activities among the people of every State, which would eventually eliminate illiteracy.

Mr. Chairman, to me it would be an ideal day in our national and social life could I live to see the day when every American citizen would be able to sit down by his fireside after his day of labor was ended and read his Bible or newspaper or search the magazines or other educational documents for information or knowledge which would enable him to better serve his fellow man, his country, and his God. I do not contend, and be it far from me to entertain even a thought, that the uneducated men and women of our land are not good and useful citizens, and I most bitterly disagree with the gentleman from Mississippi, who said a few moments ago that "the individual who fails to learn to read and write by the time he is 21 years old does not amount to anything, anyway," for many of our best and most moral and upright citizens are illiterate. Many men who can not read and write are successful in business and have acquired considerable fortunes through their own efforts and by their own management. But while this is true, it is no argument against education, for every fair-minded man will concede, and no one will do it more readily than the uneducated business man, that, regardless of how successful he may be, his success, his achievements, and his happiness would be enlarged by an education; and no one realizes the value of an education more than the business man who does not possess it.

It may seem strange to some gentlemen who have been reared and spent their lives in communities blessed with every educational advantage to hear reference made to the illiterate business man. But, strange as it may seem to some, there are in this great and glorious country successful men who are wholly unable to read and write, and their illiteracy is not due to their lack of intellect or energy, for they are both intellectual and energetic. It is due to a lack of opportunity in their school days. The lack of opportunity may have resulted from one cause or another, but whatever the cause or causes may have been this bill if enacted into law will seek to find and remove them, and for that reason I can not understand how any man who looks with any degree of pride on the progress of his country can oppose its passage.

We hear as one objection the old familiar song of State rights, with great emphasis on the declaration that the Federal Government would invade the right of any State should it open up its great Bureau of Education and diffuse the facts contained therein to the citizens of the State, and by so doing rob it of its illiteracy. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not understand how some gentlemen can harmonize their opposition to this bill with their support of other measures which have passed this House. Not long since a bill passed this House authorizing the Federal Government to attempt to exterminate the boll weevil from the cotton fields of the South; and, as I recall, no gentleman from the cotton districts of the South contended that that measure was in violation of State rights. Another bill was passed, the purpose of which was to eradicate the cattle tick from Texas, and if any gentleman from that State raised his voice against it or even expressed a fear or the slightest suspicion that it was in violation of the spirit of State rights I failed to hear him. Only a few days ago we passed a bill authorizing the Government to take steps toward the eradication of hog cholera from the herds of the farmers of the several States, and that measure, like the others just referred to, was not in violation of State rights for the reason, I suppose, that it preserves the financial interests and guards the pocketbooks of many of our constituents.

I am not objecting to those bills. I supported them. They were good measures, and it was right that they should pass. But now that the Committee on Education has unanimously reported a bill, the object of which is to eliminate illiteracy, which affects our civilization and the happiness and contentment of our citizens, some gentlemen who were extremely anxious to have the Government eradicate the Texas cattle tick, the boll weevil, and the hog cholera rise in their places and contend that Congress is about to invade the rights of the several States. Some gentlemen contend that the object of the bill is to take the educational machinery out of the hands of the States and place it in the hands of the Federal Government. Why, Mr. Chairman, that contention is absurd. The bill provides that the Commissioner of Education shall investigate illiteracy and the means by which it may be eliminated or reduced and report such information to the States or subdivisions thereof. Mr. Chairman, I agree with one statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], "that the object of the bill is to create renewed activities in the Bureau of Education"; and I trust that it may not fail in its purpose if it becomes a law. For the God in heaven knows that if there is a bureau in the Government that needs a revival of activities and an increase in its appropriations it is the Bureau of Education. However, it might be well to state that the present bill does not call for an appropriation, so there can be no objection to it on that ground. And of the great sum that was appropriated by the Government for the last fiscal year only $89,000 was appropriated for the support of our great Bureau of Education, the mission of which is not, or should not be, confined solely to the problem of advancing the education of those of our citizens who can read and write, but should be given every power that will assist it in eliminating illiteracy from the millions of people throughout the country who are wholly illiterate, and of whom 1,534,272 are native-born white citizens, as shown by the Census Report of 1910, which is as follows:

Mr. Chairman, this report shows how generally illiteracy exists in the country and should arouse the interest of every section of the country toward its elimination, which I will admit can only be accomplished by the efforts of the educators of each community, coupled with the interest of those to be educated. Then the question arises as to how their efforts and interests can be increased. This bill solves the problem, or goes a long way toward it by permitting and directing the Commissioner of Education to cooperate with the educators and institutions of learning of every State and of every community in devising and putting into operation plans by which the illiterate adults may be induced to make an effort to acquire an education. These united efforts between the local and national forces will create a new interest in the community. That interest will materialize into enthusiasm, and enthusiasm will materialize into real results; hence we will reach the goal that this measure seeks to attain.

Now, some one said a few moments ago that the reason for placing limitations upon the Bureau of Education which were not placed upon the Department of Agriculture was due to the fact that the Department of Agriculture was in possession of scientific information and methods not possessed by the Bureau of Education, and that there have been no scientific methods disclosed for the elimination of illiteracy from the adult population. Ah, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not read of the methods that have been employed and the achievements that have been attained by and under the leadership of Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, of Morehead, Rowan County, Ky., whose name has been mentioned so frequently in this debate, and whose work is the basis of this proposed legislation. She has discovered and contributed to her county, her State, her Nation, and the world a plan so scientific in principle, so correct in operation, that it eliminated illiteracy from her county in less than three years; and I desire to read into the RECORD at this point what the report of the committee says with reference to the report of Mrs. Stewart. The report reads as follows:

Indeed, it is not too much to believe that with prompt action on the part of Congress the result expected by the commissioner may be secured by the time the next national census is taken.

Experimental work along this line already made shows that rapid progress is possible. In Rowan County, Ky., through the cooperation of the people and the teachers of the public schools under the leadership of the county superintendent of schools, Mrs. Stewart, the illiteracy among grown-up men in that county has been reduced in three years from over 13 per cent to practically nothing. Mrs. Stewart wrote the commissioner a short time ago that there were now only six men and women in the county who could not read and write.

The history of that accomplishment is one of the most interesting and hopeful chapters in the records of educational progress in this country.

Mrs Cora Wilson Stewart, whose name deserves an honored place among American educators, having carefully studied conditions in her county, decided to make an effort to wipe out the stain of illiteracy. She called her teachers together, outlined her plans, and called for volunteers. All the teachers of the county responded. On Labor Day, September 4, 1911, these teachers visited the homes of the people throughout the county, explained the plan, and announced that moonlight schools would be opened the next evening. More than 1,200 men and women, from 18 to 86 years old, were enrolled the first evening. Among these were not only illiterate farmers and their illiterate wives, sons, and daughters, but also illiterate merchants, illiterate ministers, and illiterate lumbermen.

Almost one-third of the population were enrolled, for many besides the illiterates came to add to their meager education received in the inadequate schools of their childhood.

Mrs. Stewart said of the work done in these schools:

"Their interest, their zeal, and their enthusiasm were wonderful to witness. It was truly an inspiring sight to see these aged pupils bending over the desks which their children and grandchildren had occupied during the day. Their delight in learning and their pride in their achievements exceeded any joy that I have ever witnessed."

In September, 1912, the number enrolled in the Rowan County schools had risen to 1,600, and the movement had spread to 8 to 10 other counties.

As we have seen, illiteracy in Rowan County, Ky., was eliminated almost entirely in three years. This demonstrates the fact that with proper leadership and under proper direction adult illiteracy is easily and quickly wiped out. Illiteracy is much more easy of eradication than the hookworm or pellagra. The experiment in Kentucky showed that in most cases an adult could learn to read and write in a month. One man, aged 30, after four lessons in the evening school, wrote the superintendent a legible letter. Another man, aged 70, wrote a legible letter after seven nights. A woman, aged 70, wrote a legible letter after eight nights of study. In most cases a few weeks' attendance at the night schools was sufficient to enable the adult pupils to pass over the dark line of illiteracy and into the class of literates.

This experiment conclusively shows that it is possible to bring help to illiterate men and women even under the most adverse circumstances.

If all communities could have the able leadership, the constructive ability, and the healthy cooperation of all the forces used as had Rowen County, Ky., perhaps this legislation might not be needed. But unfortunately in many places where conditions call as loudly for action there is not available the resources necessary for the work. Especially is it needed to make known in any given locality both by literature and by oral appeal what has been done and what may be done. The national bureau can map out the dark territory and stimulate there a desire for self-help. It can advise as to methods and formulate plans for the campaign. It can receive and distribute funds for the work. Especially is it important that this power be conferred upon the bureau as it has already had offers of contributions which without this legislation it has not power to accept or distribute.

It will be a great accomplishment, entirely feasible, to inaugurate and superintend a movement concerted and nation wide in extent, which will place the United States where it belongs—at the head of the nations of the world in literacy.

Mr. Chairman, I announce with earnest pride that the county of Rowan, whose fame has gone out to the world by reason of its progress in education under the leadership of her favorite daughter, Mrs. Stewart, who has immortalized herself by the achievements she has attained, is one of the counties of the district which I have the honor to represent and adjoins the county in which I live. I am personally acquainted with Mrs. Stewart and the people of Rowan County, and can vouch for the statements contained in the report bearing upon the work that she and they have done. The report contains a beautiful statement with reference to the honored name of Mrs. Stewart, but even that fails to do justice to her name and the work she has done. [Applause.] Her work, Mr. Chairman, has not stopped with the boundary lines of her own county. It has been taken up by other enthusiastic educators of Kentucky and is producing the same result in other counties of the State and other States of the Union. Nor has it stopped there. It has attracted the attention of the Commissioner of Education and convinced him of its merit and worth. And to enable the country to familiarize itself with the methods that she employed to eliminate illiteracy from her county the Commissioner of Education has devoted Bulletin No. 20, 1913, to the subject of illiteracy in the United States, and deals largely with the work of Mrs. Stewart, giving photographs of her moonlight schools and letters written by adult students who learned to read and write by attending them. I commend this document to your favorable attention, and trust that it may be examined by every Member of this body and eventually by every educator in the land, for the reason that it is the most valuable document known to the literary world in the campaign now being waged against illiteracy.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the work which Mrs. Stewart has done will stand as a monument to her long after she shall have passed from the stage of action and serve as a blessing to future generations. [Applause.] The campaign which Mrs. Stewart has waged against illiteracy in Rowan County has proved to the world that illiteracy can be eliminated, and has brought the people of that section of the country to a realization of their possibilities and created within them an incentive to press onward toward greater achievements. It has caused an increase in the circulation of the daily and weekly papers and more extensive reading of the Bible, for each adult who learned to read and write in the moonlight schools was presented with a Bible by the superintendent. It has awakened new interest in the common schools and the education of the children upon whom the future responsibilities of citzenship must devolve.

Mr. Chairman, I recall that upon two former occasions in the discussion of the illiteracy clause of the immigration bill the per cent of illiteracy in Kentucky has been referred to by gentlemen opposing the bill with the statement that the illiterate in the mountains of Kentucky were native-born citizens. We accept that statement with pride, and wish to add here that they are not only native born, but that they are the pure Anglo-Saxon blood, and it has been through lack of opportunity and encouragement that they have failed to receive an education and not because they lacked intelligence or ambition. My suggestion that this illiteracy among our people is chargeable to lack of opportunity may seem strange to some gentlemen who come from the cities or the older or more densely populated sections of the country that have had splendid schools within the reach of all for the last century. This, my friends, has not been the case in the mountains of Kentucky.

We look back a little more than a half century and see Kentucky full of wealth and gallant manhood, with great possibilities before her. With her blue-grass soil and her natural resources in timber and mineral she was an inviting field for investment and for agricultural and commercial activity. And the hardy pioneer who had followed the lead of Boone and the counsel of Shelby in the establishment of a white man's citizenship had just begun to realize that there was reality in his pioneer dreams of the fertility of Kentucky's soil and the richness of her mineral resources. When the clouds of the Civil War began to darken his prosperous pathway unlike the citizenship of many other States Kentucky's men divided on that question, some swearing their allegiance to the Union and others declaring their allegiance to the Confederacy, and being as they were full of patriotism and devotion to duty, they left their homes and loved ones and went forward as two great and powerful specimens of manhood to do battle either for the North or the South, and returned as broken and shattered remnants after the conflict was over to find their property destroyed and in many instances their homes in ashes. The prosperous conditions that they had left on their enlistment had disappeared. Their good wives were toiling in the fields to support their children and their school system had been almost entirely discarded. And I wish to say in this connection that the great bulk of illiterate men and women in Kentucky to-day are those who were deprived of an opportunity to acquire an education because of the Civil War, which called from them their fathers and their teachers and destroyed their schools and their opportunities. And, Mr. Chairman, realizing as I do the hardships that they suffered and the privations that they endured during their tender years and the period in their lives when they should have received an education. I can not suppress the spirit of resentment when I hear gentlemen here or elsewhere point to the fact that 13 per cent of the population of Kentucky is illiterate.

But there is another and a brighter side to the picture. The civil conflict in which our Kentucky fathers took up arms and arrayed themselves against their neighbors on the battle field is over. That remaining remnant of each side returned to their old Kentucky homes and again clasped hands in friendship, and engaged in a united effort to regain their lost fortunes and to blaze the pathway to a still higher civilization. Their progress was slow for a time, for being, as they were, physically incapacitated by the hardships of war they were compelled to have the assistance of their sons and daughters in their battle for sustenance, which continued to prevent their education. And the sons and daughters of those heroes who never returned were forced to wage their own battle for bread. But, Mr. Chairman, they have succeeded. They have cleared their fields and tilled their soil and opened up their mineral resources and are to-day a happy and prosperous people. On the ashes of the old churches that were burned during the war or destroyed by the occupancy of soldiers they have builded new and modern churches in which to worship their God and modern schools in which to educate their children, and are to-day waging as fierce a campaign for higher education as was ever waged in any State of this Union. They are a happy, prosperous, energetic, and patriotic people, proud of their ancestry and the land of their birth, and one of their greatest ambitions is that the word "illiteracy" shall cease to be connected with Kentucky's fair name. And, Mr. Chairman, I predict that within a few years the educational world will look with pride upon Kentucky as one of the leading States of the Union in the rank of education. The campaign for the entire elimination of illiteracy has been launched in Kentucky. I commend our methods and efforts to the favorable consideration of the country, and appeal to this body to encourage and assist this great work by the passage of this bill. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a resolution this afternoon which I desire to call to the attention of the committee. It reads as follows:

House resolution 429.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House of Representatives all information that may be in his possession or in the possession of the Department of State regarding the treatment in Mexico of citizens of the United States of America and of other countries, with respect to their safety and the security of their lives and property, and to inform the House of Representatives what action, if any, has been taken for the protection of American citizens and other persons in Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, the American people are a peace-loving Nation desirous of maintaining friendly relations with all the other nations of the globe. Territorial greed has no place in her international policy. Her unselfish wish is that Mexico shall sustain a position among the peoples of the world and perform the functions incident to a stable and sane government, assuring to her citizens and the peoples within her borders security in their persons and estates.

Recognizing such a friendly responsibility as the stronger should bear toward the weaker, this Nation has looked with sorrow upon the fratricidal struggle so long continuing in Mexico.

We have seen the war cloud gather and grow in size and strength until the full burst of its fury is now upon that land, and war with all its savagery, inhumanity, and fearful brutality possesses the heart and life of all its people.

The nations of the world stand aghast at the conditions and demand both for Mexico and for the rights of others within Mexico that this intolerable condition should cease.

The people of these United States have demanded peace—peace for themselves, peace in Mexico. They have consistently opposed intervention, because they wished for peace. They were prepared to follow any policy without thought of partisanship which would assure such peace.

No President of the United States ever occupied his exalted position with a larger measure of popular good will supporting him than he had in his expressed desire to bring about peace in Mexico without our armed interference.

On February 18 Gen. Huerta overthrew the Madero government, and on February 23 President Madero was shot. An official statement emanating from Huerta claimed that Madero was shot in a scrimmage during an attempted rescue. The American ambassador, Henry Lane Wilson, "accepted" this version of the tragedy "in the absence of other reliable information," and expressed a feeling of certainty that Madero's death was "without Government approval."

After the inauguration of President Wilson, President Huerta applied for official recognition. Practically all of th European powers—England, Germany, France, Spain, Austria—gave their official recognition to Gen. Huerta as the head of the de facto government.

President Wilson alone refused, in a statement declaring that "nowhere can any government long endure which is stained by blood or supported by anything but the consent of the governed."

This and other nations have stood upon the policy which President Pierce set forth in his message to Congress in 1856:

It is the established policy of the United States to recognize governments without question of their source of organization or the means by which the governing persons attain their power, provided there be a government de facto. * * * It is more necessary to apply this rule to the Spanish-American peoples, in consideration of the frequent and not seldom anomalous changes of organization or administration which they undergo and the revolutionary character of most of the changes.

Notwithstanding the beaten path of wise policy which had kept us outside the turmoil of the shifting conditions in many Latin-American countries; ignoring the advice of the many, and most of the great students of international law; refusing the companionship of all the other great nations, President Wilson refused to recognize the de facto Huertan Government, and thus deprived it, at least for the time being, of financial aid in quelling what was then a rebellion of small size and incipient in character.

A recognition of Huerta then would no doubt have brought peace; it would have saved thousands of lives; it would have prevented the ruthless destruction of property; it would have saved Mexico from a condition of brigandage and would have preserved the dignity of the American Nation and prevented the present administration from bespattering itself with an inefficient and inane policy which, were it not for the awfulness of the conditions in Mexico, would make us the laughingstock of the world.

With an approach in a path where angels would fear to tread, the President dispatched a representative to Mexico with instructions to "press very earnestly upon those who are now exercising authority or wielding influence that the Government of the United States does not feel at liberty any longer to stand inactively by while no real progress is being made toward the establishment of government in the City of Mexico which the country will obey and respect."

In the light of the tragedy of the months since these brave words were uttered they may be characterized only by the language of the street, "buncombe" and "bluff."

Since that time the Chief Executive at the White House has fulminated against Huerta, and Huerta has suggested a joint meeting place of tropical aspect before he would resign the Presidency. To-day he seems as firmly intrenched in Mexico as ever; he still continues the man of iron, the man of imperious will.

When the American people, tired of a policy of words, were expecting an authoritative and dominant act upon the part of the President calculated to restore peace without the necessity for intervention, a message was delivered from the rostrum of these Halls of Congress in which he announced his virile policy of "watchful waiting." Such a policy had its counterpart and perhaps originated when the Egyptians, beholding the distress of the people of Israel as the advancing Assyrian hordes bore down upon them, withheld their promised aid and the prophet then revealed to his terrified people that the Egyptians followed the policy of "watchful waiting," for said he, "Their strength is to sit still."

I am opposed to war. I am opposed to intervention. I am opposed to a policy which is rapidly and with almost unerring certainty drifting us into war. I have introduced this resolution in the hope that it will awaken both the people and the administration to an appreciation of the fact that if we are to avoid war, if we are to avoid intervention, the policy which now actuates the White House with respect to Mexico must change.

The American people have waited patiently for results; they have seen conditions grow worse instead of better; the blood of innocent American citizens has been shed on Mexican soil; helpless women as well as men have been offered up. The property of American citizens has been confiscated. Rapine, murder, pillage, and plunder have had unchecked sway under the blood-mad fury of contending forces.

I am creditably informed that consular reports have been sent in to the State Department which if made public would show such outrages to American and other citizens as would make the American people arise en masse in demanding the inauguration of a new, strong, and efficient policy.

Where does this policy of watchful waiting lead us? After Huerta, what? Villa! Carrillo! Carranza! Do these names give sweeter odor in the public nostrils than Huerta?

With the murder of Benton, whether under or without the forms of military law, the recognition of the constitutionalists is closed to the administration by the standard of its own creation.

The truth is there is no present possibility for a constitutional government in Mexico which would fulfill the ethical requirements heretofore imposed by the Chief Executive of the United States as a condition precedent to recognition.

The first step is a firm and possibly a dictatorial government; the next is a popular government. Mexico in ability has never passed beyond the first stage; it is useless to expect the second.

During all these months we have been watching and waiting. Watching light go out in many a home, watching the slaughter of thousands in a sister State, watching, yea sending in arms with which to accomplish it. Watching while women were debauched, children destroyed, men murdered, and houses sacked; merely watching while the appealing eyes of our own flesh and blood were turned toward us for help.

Waiting for what? For Huerta to resign? For a constitutional government to arise from the ashes and blood of Mexico? For Villa or Carranza or Carrillo to free their names from the charges which the recording angel has placed against their names?

Watchfully waiting while the widow of Benton visits the open grave of her murdered husband, deprived of even the poor comfort of taking with her his mutilated remains.

The policy of watchful waiting is a policy of deadly drifting. It spells war, not peace. James Creelman, from Mexico City, February 24, sends the following to the New York Mail:

There is a ghastly thrill in the political silence of this old scene of Mexican magnificence, treason, bloodshed, and roaring strife for loot in the name of a constitutional democracy that never was and never will be possible.

The masterful warrior who reigns in the 700-foot-long, pink-turreted palace that has been the scene of so many gorgeous triumphs and barbarous crimes has his back to the wall like a true Indian.

Banks are tottering, silver and gold are disappearing, script money is pouring out, business is almost prostrate, hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property and business have been destroyed, immense regions have been desolated, 3,500 miles of railway are out of commission, 3,500 railway cars have been burned by the rebels, the peaceful work of 30 years of industry and government has been laid in ruins.

This vast scene of misery and destruction, made appalling by the wanton slaughter of prisoners and noncombatants and the unspeakable dishonoring of women and girls, stirs no spirit of patriotic sacrifice in the gay Mexican capital.

A NATION UPON ITS DEATHBED.

The Mexican nation is on its deathbed.

As matters stand, there are roughly 3,000,000 inhabitants in the territory controlled by the bandit Villa and his allied savage forces, while there are about 12,000,000 in the territory held by Huerta, the dictator.

The rebel hordes have thoroughly looted the more or less sterile and thinly populated country they dominate, but Huerta has not even begun to reach deeply into the mighty wealth of the rich cities and fertile lands in his power.

DICTATOR A MAN OF TREMENDOUS FORCE.

Huerta has an enormous advantage in population and the money and property upon which he can draw when he chooses to resort to general forced levies to support the war.

In spite of his dissipations he is a man of tremendous force, quick in thought and action, and with a driving will power rarely to be found in Mexicans.

DICTATOR AND RICHES.

Apparently the dictator does not dare to risk extreme or violent means of taking the immense riches piled up within his reach, for fear of provoking the active hostility of the business men and property-owning classes, who at first strongly supported him as the "strong man," capable of forcibly restoring comparative peace, but who now believe that President Wilson's opposition will crush him in the end.

It looks as though the rebels will not be able to come south of Zacatecas and San Luis Potosi, and it may be that in the end the north will separate from the south, and there will be two Mexicos.

The most astonishing thing about the situation is the growing feeling that the United States has assumed national responsibility for the future of this restless, revolutionary, and irresponsible people.

WHAT WILL WILSON DO?

"What is President Wilson going to do?"

You hear the question on all sides and every hour. It is shrieked at you, whispered to you, and re eated in a hundred forms by the European diplomats, the property owners, and business men of every country, and by intelligent Mexicans who believe that their nation is at last practically dead.

One has only to be in Mexico City now and see the whole strain of government, war, and desperate international pressure borne by one fearless man, intent on protecting life and property, as well as his own power, and corrupt opportunists against the armed chaos advancing from the north, to realize the hopeless situation.

It is absolutely certain that Huerta has decided to die at his post rather than resign, and it is equally certain that if he is overthrown his successor will presently face a fresh revolution, and that the wrecking of Mexico and the slaughter and pillage of its inhabitants will go on until some powerful armed master like Porfirio Diaz arises or the United States ends Mexican independence by force.

It might startle even President Wilson were he here to look upon this strange political quicksand in which he proposes to erect the solid foundations of a real republic.

With an Indian military dictator in the national palace, laughing at President Wilson's dream of democratic constitutional government in Mexico, and with half of the country laid waste by brigandage and murder, the people of this great and beautiful capital are as calm and indifferent as though the nation were not riven and ruined by one of the most brutal and merciless civil wars of history.

REBELS SACKING AND SLAYING.

Everybody knows that the rebels are sacking and slaying in the north and that the federals are growing rich by grafting in the south—Government concessions are hawked about here every day—and nearly everybody shrugs his shoulders and declares that he has no political conviction or sympathies one way or the other, only he hopes that there will soon be an end to the war.

The gay, chattering crowds stream through the streets in the brilliant sunshine by day and in the blazing electric light by night, and there is no sign of the awful tragedy that has smitten the nation.

Along the miles of splendid residences rich Mexicans—those who have not gone abroad—still live in lazy luxury and saunter in their gardens among the flowers and fountains and statues, all intent on evading political responsibility of any kind, while peace and order and prosperity are vanishing.

Even the announcement that the United States had lifted the embargo on arms failed to stir the people. The Mexican newspapers shrieked against Mr Wilson as an ally of the northern bandits, but the population of the capital went on in its usual careless, pleasure-loving way.

HUERTA ON CAROUSE.

The ghastly humor of the situation was shown in the celebration of the anniversary of the Mexican constitution.

Not only was the dictator's palace brilliantly decorated in honor of the organic law he has trodden under foot, but a monster Mexican flag flew above the great Cathedral of Mexico in memory of the constitution which drove the church out of power, dispersed the religious orders, and stripped the churches and monks of $200,000,000 of property, with an annual income of $20,000,000.

While the dictator's artillery thundered in celebration of the constitution that he and all other Mexican leaders, save the noble Indian, Juarez, have trampled in the dust, Huerta himself went about the city drinking brandy and joking with his companions, while under the Mexican flag on the cathedral priests, forbidden by law to wear their clerical dress in the streets, disfranchised from the right to hold office, and interdicted from all religious service outside of the church walls, even at a graveside, celebrated mass at the shrine which holds the dust of Iturbide, the traitorous general who brought about Mexican independence by turning over the Army of Spain to the rebels in order that he might become Mexican Emperor and later on be executed by his own people.

And in the open-air pantheon cemetery of San Fernando, while the dictator caroused about the city, his bespangled, glittering officers laid flowers upon the white sculptured tomb of Juarez, the apostle of democracy and constitutional government.

Even while the memorial music sounded in that place where so many Mexican traitors and patriots lie in common glory, there passed a mournful procession of Indian peons, so-called volunteers, dragged from their homes and fields, and surrounded by a close cordon of soldiers, on their way to fight for a cause in which they had no interest—listless prisoners, with drooping heads.

The rebel forces are inspired to fight by their fierce love of looting, burning, and violating women. The Federal forces serve through fear of their remorseless master.

The sober truth is that nearly all the ablest men of Mexico have selfishly left the country.

COUNTRY WITHOUT NATIONALITY.

In a practical sense Mexico to-day is a country without a nationality.

Yet it has 15,000,000 inhabitants and its 768,883 square miles contain almost incalculable national wealth, the development of which is the almost exclusive result of foreign capital and foreign energy.

In justice to this amazing man Huerta, it must be said that, except for offenses against himself, he is stoutly protecting life, property, and the ordinary course of business wherever he has authority, although he has authorized his generals at the front to make forced levies to pay the soldiers in the field.

All other dictators in Mexican history have been given to gold lace, princely pomp, and high-sounding titles. Santa Anna had his amputated leg buried with almost royal ceremony and rode himself in the resplendent funeral procession, shedding tears when he listened to the oration over his honored Christian limb.

"IRON, IMPERIOUS MAN."

But Huerta, iron, imperious man though he is, dresses in plain business clothes, usually of butternut brown, and a soft felt hat, and in public plays the part of a simple, jovial, unpretending man of the people, who goes about freely night and day without a guard, visits the restaurants and cafés, slaps his friends on the back, and utters witty sayings between drinks.

The most astonishing thing about the man is that with the whole affairs of government and war on his hands he wanders about the city at will, sometimes absenting himself from the palace for days at a time, and even his minister of war has to trace him from point to point to consult him in the gravest crises.

Murder and rapine in the rebel north and wholesale corruption in the south! The country is sinking into an abyss of misery and degredation, with the entire world looking on.

Three solutions are possible:

First. The continuance of the inactive policy of the administration, leaving Mexico to bleed herself to death, and refusing protection to American citizens whose interests have required them to reside in Mexico.

Second. To intervene.

Third. To fall back upon the suggestion made by the distinguished Director General of the Pan American Union, unceremoniously and flippantly rejected by the administration months ago, which called for a joint intervention of the Republics composing the Pan American Union, and to participate with them and the other European powers having interests in Mexico.

The last is the only feasible plan. It would avoid the charge that the United States had any selfish interests to be served.

It might cause some hesitation among those who feared an infringement of the Monroe doctrine, but that might be safeguarded by agreement between the cooperating nations.

Whether this is the best solution I know not, but I am convinced that every day makes the danger of intervention greater, with all its horrors, for Mexico would then turn to a man against us, and the slaughter of thousands and thousands of our young men and the waste of millions of treasure the inevitable result.

We have sinned away our first day of grace; now let us no longer procrastinate. Let us have peace. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of Education shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, investigate illiteracy among the adult population of the United States and the means by which this illiteracy may be eliminated or reduced, and report to Congress, through the Secretary of the Interior, the results of his investigations; and he is hereby authorized, upon request or invitation, to advise and cooperate with school officials, teachers, and others in devising and putting into operation such plans as will give to illiterate men and women and to those of meager education an opportunity to learn to read and write and to supplement and extend their education.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Chair to recognize me to make a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the enacting clause. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make this motion in order to test the sense of the committee on this bill. I believe that its purposes and merits have been thoroughly discussed. In my opinion, it proposes to have the United States Government undertake a work which, in my opinion, is not a proper function of the Federal Government, and which is inconsistent with its relations with the various States. Without delaying the committee I am willing to have a vote.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope that the motion of the gentleman from New York will be voted down. There are two committee amendments that will remove most of the objections that have been urged. The first amendment is to strike out in lines 10 and 11 the words "and putting into operation."

The next amendment that will be offered by the committee is to strike out on page 2, after the word "Congress," in line 9, all the remainder of the bill. That will strike out all the part which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to receive contributions from individuals or societies.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The amendments which have been suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] would, if adopted, remove practically all the objectionable features of the bill, but if those amendments are adopted there will be nothing left. The Commissioner of Education and the Secretary of the Interior, without any more legislation, already have the authority which would be left in the bill. Suppose we adopt the course suggested by the gentleman from Iowa and amend this bill so as to leave in it nothing except a skeleton and pass it through the House. Thereupon, following the inevitable course of human nature, the office of the Commissioner of Education will be devoted for a considerable period of time to getting these amendments reinserted in the bill in another distinguished body which, with this, makes legislation. When reinserted the bill will come back to the House, and the House will disagree to the amendments and send the bill to conference.

The conferees, if they are human, as I suspect they are, will, in the main, follow the advice of the original author of the bill, the Commissioner of Education. The conference report will be brought before the House in the closing days of a session of Congress, perhaps on the last day, when no one dares even ask for a roll call, because there is, in fact, no quorum in town; and you can not pass the appropriation bills in the absence of a quorum if the point is raised. Hence the conference report will go through and the bill will become a law. Now, I would be far from imputing bad faith to the gentleman who proposes the amendment. I only suggest that the committee and its members are, like the rest of us, very human. If the Members of this House do not believe in the Government invading the province of the common schools of the States and do not believe in the Government soliciting contributions from charitably inclined people to help carry on the Government, the way to do is to strike out the enacting clause and end the proposition here and now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. TOWNER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 17.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-three gentlemen present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2494) to investigate illiteracy among the adult population of the United States and the means of eliminating or reducing the same, and finding itself without a quorum had caused the roll to be called; that 278 Members had answered to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present and the committee will resume its session.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. HUGHES of Georgia.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 133 ayes and 49 noes.

So the amendment striking out the enacting clause was adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2494) to investigate illiteracy among the adult population of the United States and the means of eliminating or reducing the same, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment striking out the enacting clause with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee has had under consideration the bill H. R. 2494, and reports it back with an amendment striking out the enacting clause, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Twenty-three gentlemen have arisen. Those in the negative will rise. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-four have arisen in the negative. Not a sufficient number, the yeas and nays are refused, and the amendment striking out the enacting clause is agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 26, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War submitting an amendment to the estimate of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, under the heading of "Buildings and grounds in and around Washington" (H. Doc. No. 793); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation for reimbursement of appropriations for the support of the Army, for the transportation and care of interned Mexican soldiers and refugees (H. Doc. No. 794); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Napa River, Cal., with a view to making the necessary cut-offs, consideration being given to any tender of cooperation on the part of local interests (H. Doc. No. 795); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed statement of the refunds of customs duties for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913 (H. Doc. No. 765); to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of a board of engineer officers, United States Army, under Indian appropriation act of August 24, 1912, on the San Carlos irrigation project in Arizona (H. Doc. No. 791); to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

6. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, submitting an amended estimate of appropriation for the Lighthouse Service, Department of Commerce, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 792); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FRENCH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4544) to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Caribou National Forest Reserve, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 302), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6040) for the relief of the heirs of James Caughlen, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.
